THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Commissioner Sparks Explains His Ruling Regarding Homestead Claims—But Thinks Congress Intended to Limit the Amount of Free Land to Settlers.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 22.—Commissioner Sparks has recently made a ruling which is probably destined to have important influence upon the course of transactions in the public lands. He has decided in substance that commutation of a homestead is in effect and in law a turning of an entry into a pre-emption, and as such is illegal when the claimant has previously had the benefit of the pre-emption law. Since the passage of the homestead law it has become the almost universal practice for settlers to secure claims under both that and the pre-emption, in addition to which they have usually taken the benefit of the timber-culture laws, thus aggregating, under these laws, a minimum estate of 480 acres to each settler. It has been customary to take up the pre-emption and tree claim at once, and after the lapse of the shortest necessary interval to mortgage the former for enough to pay the government price of it, when, having secured the title, the settler was at liberty to move away and take the benefit of the homestead law. The ruling of the commissioner is calculated to put an end to this practice. It leaves settlers still the right to secure either a pre-emption or a homestead in addition to his tree claim, and as far as the ruling itself goes, it leaves him the right to secure a pre-emption in the usual way, and then secure a homestead by living upon the land five years, but the latter right Gen. Sparks does not concede. It has been stated that he has made a ruling to the effect that no person is entitled to the benefits of both pre-emption and homestead laws. This is incorrect; no such ruling has been made. There is reason to believe, however, that when this question comes before him in a way to demand formal ruling on the subject he will hold that in passing the homestead law congress intended only to give a choice to

SETTLERS OF LIMITED MEANS

by affording them a method of obtaining 160 acres of land without other outlay than the payment of customary fees in place of purchasing under the pre-emption laws. Such a ruling, he says, would be in concurrence with the views which have inspired the movement in congress to repeal the pre-emption law outright; and should the timber culture act be repealed it would have the effect of restricting the area obtainable by a single claimant to one quarter section. Gen. Sparks holds that two laws, the homestead and the pre-emption, standing together and interpreted as they have heretofore been, offer a temptation to fraud and place a premium upon it. The hope of securing a second claim, as held out by the one law, is an inducement to make settlement and improvements upon the first claim of temporary and inexpensive character, simply designed to make false showing of good faith, and to "swear by," as immediately after final proof or commutation, as the case may be, they are to be abandoned and another residence established upon claim number two, and Gen. Sparks holds that if congress designed to give the same settler the benefit of both laws it would not have imposed upon him requirements to establish a temporary home in one place only to be abandoned for another within a few months. Should the ruling indicated as probable never be made, that already made in prohibiting commutation of homestead claims by persons who have previously been pre-emptors will still, he believes, have an important result in preventing, to a considerable extent, speculation in claims. The obligation to live five years upon a claim is a test of good faith to which only actual farmers who desire land for their own cultivation will care to submit.

Washington Gossip.

Senator Miller of California is so ill that he will not be able to attend the opening of congress.

Indian Commissioner Atkins' youngest daughter was married to a son of ex-Gov. Porter of Tennessee.

Miss Nannie Hill, a daughter of the late confederate general, D. H. Hill, is teaching school in Washington.

Serious charges are made against Gen. Crook, and the president has ordered Lieut. Gen. Sheridan to Arizona to investigate his campaign.

The president has accepted the resignation of D. B. Searle, United States attorney for the district of Minnesota, to take effect on the qualification of his successor, who, it is believed, will be appointed in a few days.

Attorney General Garland, to whom Secretary Bayard some weeks ago referred the question of the legality of the expenses of the court of Alabama claims, having signified his concurrence in the opinions of the solicitor of the state department, Francis Wharton, the publication of Mr. Wharton's opinion is authorized by the state department.

Since the Keily episode our diplomatic relations with Austria have been practically cut off. The Austrian minister, who has not been in this country for some time, has been retired upon the grounds that having been in the diplomatic service for forty-two years, he is disqualified for further service. This leaves the mission vacant, and the Austrian government has signified that it will remain so until the United States sees fit to appoint a minister to succeed Keily, whom it rejected.

Many of the new Democratic postmasters in the small towns where the salaries are regulated by the number of letters mailed are complaining to the postmaster general that they are boycotted by the friends of their Republican predecessors, so that their compensation will be greatly cut down. Dozens of letters containing these complaints are received at the department every day. At Ellery, Ill., the mail is collected by a private agency and delivered on the mail train to deprive the new appointee of his patronage and revenue. And so in many other places.

Gen. Porter, first assistant secretary of state, speaking about the severe Democratic criticism because of the appointment of Dr. Lee, a Republican, as secretary of the legation at Constantinople, said: The appointment to such a position is always made at the suggestion of the minister of the post, and no questions are asked. In this instance Minister Cox sent a letter to the department requesting the appointment of Dr. Lee, giving his name and address. His request was complied with without hesitation and without making any inquires as to his political or social standing. A minister is conceded to have the right to name his secretary just as a general has to select the members of his staff. If Mr. Cox desires a republican secretary, there was no reason for denying him that privilege.

The Irish National League issued recently a remarkable manifesto signed by T. P. O'Conner, Justin McCarthy and Messrs. Sexton, Healy, Redmond, O'Kelly and Biggar, members of parliament, and decided to reject the overtures of the Liberals and to openly ally the Home Rule party to the Tory organization. Accordingly the manifesto, the most remarkable and straightforward ever issued by the Parnellites, was uttered. Its idea, according to Irish calculation, will be to prevent Mr. Gladstone from returning to power by making it impossible for the Liberals to gain the requisite members of the next house of commons. The Dublin conference arranged to thoroughly circulate the Parnell manifesto during the next fortnight, even to the extent of distributing it at the church doors throughout Ireland. It was also arranged to have the country thoroughly stumped, and to furnish a liberal supply of speakers wherever meetings could be organized for them.

Internal Revenue Commissioner's Report.

The annual report of the internal revenue commissioner has been given out. It covers the year ended June 30, last, and embraces, also, additional information for July, August and September of the current fiscal year. Of the total receipts in the United States of $112,421,121 during the year ending June 30, 1885, the following collections were made in Northwestern districts:

Second, Iowa, S. M. Green	$1,988,511
Third, Iowa, J. E. Simpson	182,526
Fourth, Iowa, J. W. Burdotte	80,721
Minnesota, William Bickel	492,704
District of Mont., T. P. Fuller	90,585
First, Wisconsin, I. L. Bean	286,563
First, Wisconsin, E. C. Wall	179,395
Second, Wis., Henry Harnden	181,412
Third, Wis., H. M. Kutchin	241,745
Sixth, Wis., Leonard Jattridge	173,901

During the year 954 illicit stills have been seized, the greater number being in Georgia, North Carolina and Tennessee. One was seized in the Third Wisconsin district, being the only one in the Northwest, and $202 worth of miscellaneous property in Wisconsin. A recommendation is made in regard to salaries that will affect a number of collectors. It is proposed to readjust as follows: $25 or less, $2,000; up to $37,000, $2,125; to $50,000, $2,250; $50,000 to $75,000, $2,375 and in like proportion up to $1,000,000, collections at a maximum salary of $4,500. In the statistics of tobacco it is shown that 294 factories in Iowa used 987,505 pounds of tobacco, making 43,384,600 cigars; 158 in Minnesota used 631,732 pounds, making 27,865,795 cigars; 6 in Montana made 311,850 cigars from 7,518 pounds of tobacco; 275 in Wisconsin used 2,005,789 pounds, making 85,965,395 cigars. Following are the statistics of proof spirits rectified in the Northwestern states in the year:

Iowa, Second district	$53,181
Iowa, Third district	56,434
Minnesota	190,394
Montana	3,743
Wisconsin, First district	1,178,629
Wisconsin, Second district	40,333
Wisconsin, Third district	10,037

The largest exportation of spirits during the fiscal year was 2,113,661 gallons of Kentucky whisky to Bremen. This amount was about nine-tenths of the entire exportation from United States ports, and was made to escape tax. There were on hand June 30 in warehouses under bond; in Iowa 465,009 gallons, in Montana 966 gallons, in Wisconsin 157,288 gallons. There are spirits remaining in the Northwestern distillery warehouses Oct. 1, 1885: Iowa, 48,798; Nebraska, $1,913; Wisconsin, 94,113.

How Elections in England are Conducted.

Elections are not in England, as with us, accomplished in one day. When a general election for members of the house of commons takes place, the voting is continued for about two weeks, daily, in different parts of the United Kingdom. The election officers of each county and borough appoint polling days in their respective districts. In the present election the writs are made returnable on Dec. 4. Dissolution of the last parliament took place, and nominations and elections commenced on Monday. In the case of a county the returning officer must give notice of the day of election within two days after he receives the writ, and in a borough on the day he receives the writ, or the next day. In counties the election day must not be later than the ninth day after the receipt of the writ, and in a burgh not later than the fourth day after the writ is received. The various sheriffs publish in the daily newspapers the dates when nominations must be made, and the dates of polling in the several districts. Voting will go on all over the kingdom, first in the boroughs and then in the counties, until Dec. 4 or 5. Thus the sheriff of Sutherland and Ross notifies that in Sutherlandshire the nominations will be made Tuesday, Nov. 24, the voting will take place Saturday, Nov. 28, and that the votes will be counted and declared Wednesday, Dec. 2. Other dates are assigned by other sheriffs in their respective districts. A candidate for the house of commons need not be a resident of the district in which he is a candidate. Any Englishman can contest any district, provided he is properly qualified, no matter where he lives. Under the new franchise law the new house will have 670 members against the 652 of the old house. Formerly, most of the members came from the boroughs; but now the majority will come from the counties, sixty rotten boroughs have been wiped out by the new arrangements alone, and 104 altogether. The new lines have been drawn so as to secure a fairer distribution of population than under the cranky old system. The new law, however, is yet far from being wide in its scope, and its provisions yet hamper and restrict. It embodies the most rigid safeguards against corruption and bribery which have taxed the ingenuity of candidates to evade.

Affair of "Honah" in Georgia.

Atlanta Special:—Col. Albert Howell was mortally wounded by Henry C. Pope in a dispute at the union depot. Col. Howell is a brother of Evan P. Howell, editor-in-chief of the Daily Constitution, and is the general manager of the union passenger depot. While in his office Col. Howell was approached by Pope, who asked:

"What time does the next train come in on the State road?"

"I don't know," said Col. Howell.

"You ought to know," said Pope. "That is what you are paid for."

"I am not paid for any such thing, and have nothing to do with the affairs of that road," replied Howell.

"You are a d—d liar," said Pope.

Quick as a flash Col. Howell grabbed an inkstand and hurled it at Pope, knocking him down. Pope immediately got up and asked Col. Howell, "When and where can I see you, and settle this matter?" "You can see me right here, and now," answered Col. Howell, whereupon Pope drew his pistol and fired at Howell, hitting him in the upper right breast. At this juncture a special policeman arrested Pope, and Howell was taken to the office of Dr. Dan Howell, his brother. The patient suffers but little pain, but is in a critical condition, as there is great danger of secondary hemorrhage, which would undoubtedly prove fatal.

New Chief Justice of Dakota.

The president has appointed Bartlett Tripp, of Yankton, to be chief justice of the Territory of Dakota.

Bartlett Tripp is an able lawyer, some forty years of age, and a resident of Yankton. During his residence in that city he has taken an active part in the affairs of the territory, and while not generally recognized as a Democratic leader, yet he has exerted considerable influence in directing the policy of the party. He has been in favor of division of the territory, and was president of the constitutional convention that met at Sioux Falls in 1883. At that time his counsels were considered the wisest, and he did much in shaping the document framed. During the convention at that place last September he was prominent as one of the strongest advocates of the movement to secure statehood for the northern half of the territory. As a lawyer he stands second to none in the territory, and his appointment will give universal satisfaction. He ran for congress against Pettigrew in 1880.

Secretary of Dakota.

Washington Special. Capt. McCormick of Grand Forks was appointed secretary of Dakota, to succeed Senator Teller's kinsman, H. H. Teller of Ohio, who has held the office since February, 1883. This appointment resulted from the canvas made by McCormick for the marshalship. The plum he has secured is hardly as big or juicy as Capt. Maratta's but there is a great deal of respectability going with the office. The secretaryship is worth $1,800 a year, while the marshalship is worth $8,000 or $9,000, and commands more patronage than any other office in the territory. Teller's term had two years yet to run.

Capt. McCormick is about fifty-five years of age, and has been a resident of the territory for a number of years. He has always been identified with the Democratic party, and has served in several public capacities, with credit to himself and benefit to the people. He has resided in the vicinity of Fargo, and was a delegate to the Chicago convention which nominated Mr. Cleveland.

A New U. S. Attorney.

The president appointed John N. Baxter of Faribault to be attorney of the U. S., for the district of Minnesota. Mr. Baxter went to Faribault fifteen years ago, making his debut in public life there as a bricklayer. He was steady and industrious, and no one was surprised when about three years later he began the study of law with Batchelder & Buckle. From that time on his progress was rapid. He served several times as county attorney, and was considered the best prosecuting attorney in the state. He prosecuted the Younger brothers when they were convicted. He has been mayor of Faribault several times and occupied several positions on the school boards. He was a state delegate to the Chicago convention of 1884. He is about forty years old, has a family, and has always been a Democrat. Gordon E. Cole thinks that Faribault to a man will applaud his selection.

Battle in a Dakota Jury Room.

Sioux Falls Special: In the district court, rather a remarkable proceeding was introduced on the 24th inst. The case of Ole and Gunder Thompson against J. A. Pettigrew has been on trial three days and was given to the jury about 6 o'clock last night. This morning the jury came into court with a sealed verdict, but before the verdict was presented, the fact came to the knowledge of the judge that one of the jurymen had taken to the jury room a bottle of liquor and had used the same too freely for his own good. The judge set the verdict aside and administered a most scathing rebuke to the jury. The case is one which has been once before tried, and was taken to the supreme court, where the judgment was reversed and the case remanded back to the district court for a new trial. The question involved is a matter of damages occasioned by the construction of the St. Olof mill dam, and the setting aside of this verdict will necessitate another expensive trial.

Decision on Barbed Wire.

Judge Brewer of the United States district court at Des Moines has rendered an important decision in the case of Washburn & Moen vs. The Grinnell Barbed Wire Company. A decision was made last spring sustaining the validity of the Glidden patent and the right of plaintiff to control it. It was decided at that time that the master in chancery should determine the amount of damages to be paid. He fixed the sum at $41,850. The defendants excepted and argued the case at the last term of the federal court in this city. Judge Brewer in his decision now reduces the amount from $41,850 to about $24,000, stating that while that amount for damages was probably too low, he would fix the royalty which the company should pay hereafter at a figure which should be large enough to compensate.

A Cruel Stepmother.

At Delaware, Ohio, Mrs. William Dunlap, who had formerly moved in good society, being a member of a leading church, was sent to jail for sixty days to subsist upon bread and water and fined $100 for cruelty to her stepchildren. The story of her cruelty as brought out at the trial is most shocking. A few days since she covered the body of one of the children, a little girl, with soft soap, pumped cold water on the little one, and scrubbed her with a broom. The other child, a boy, had been suspended in a deep well by a rope. Other cruelties were clearly proven by the Humane society in the prosecution. The woman was followed to the jail by a crowd of 300 people, who jeered and hooted and talked of tar and feathers.

A SHOCK TO THE NATION.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 25.—Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, vice president of the United States, died very suddenly at his residence in this city at 4:45 o'clock this evening, under circumstances that were particularly distressing to his family and friends, inasmuch as they had not anticipated a fatal termination of his brief illness, and nobody was with him when the end came. He returned from Chicago last Saturday, and since then had been complaining somewhat of pain in his head and breast, but nothing serious was thought of it. Last night he and Mrs. Hendricks attended a reception given at the residence of Hon. John J. Cooper, state treasurer, returning home in their carriage about midnight. Mr. Hendricks had taken off the heavy clothing which he usually wore, and put on a dress suit of lighter material, and before he got home he complained of chilliness and a certain degree of exhaustion, but attributed it to malarial influences. He sat by the fire for an hour or more before retiring, but declined to send for a physician, although urged to do so. He slept restlessly until about 8 o'clock this morning, when he arose, dressed himself, and ate quite a hearty breakfast, saying he felt much better and intended to attend to considerable delayed business during the day. He and Mrs. Hendricks walked out for nearly half an hour, and he apparently and cheerfulness. An hour later, however, he began to be troubled with pains in the region of his stomach, and Mrs. Hendricks sent for the family physician, Dr. W. C. Thompson, a life-long and confidential friend of the vice president. As the pains in the stomach continued to increase, he was given an emetic and afterward an injection, and relief came in the natural way. He arose from his bed in which he had lain only a few minutes and read the morning papers, talking cheerfully with his wife and an old house servant. Just before noon he had a relapse, however, and the physician was again summoned and administered the usual remedies, beside bleeding the patient, and Mr. Hendricks again expressed himself as being greatly relieved. He remained in his room all the afternoon, occasionally rising from his bed, to which he was compelled to return by the recurrence of the pains. To all callers who came, and they were numerous, he sent word that he was indisposed, but would be glad to see them to-morrow. About 4:30 o'clock Mrs. Hendricks, who had been at his bedside all day, went down into the parlor to see a caller, who had come to consult with her regarding the affairs of a reformatory institution, of which she was one of the managers, and the only attendants were the colored man, Tom, a colored servant, and Harry Morgan, Mr. Hendricks' nephew, and a page in Washington, remained with him. The servant went out and Mr. Morgan staid. Mr. Hendricks tossed uneasily in his bed and complained of great pain, but suddenly it seemed to cease, and he said to his nephew, "I am free at last. Send for Eliza," meaning his wife; and these were

REGAINED HIS PHYSICAL VIGOR

HIS LAST WORDS,

for the young man, not realizing the urgency of the message, did not deliver it at once. Just before 5 o'clock Mrs. Hendricks came into the room and found that her husband was dead. The end of a long and eventful life had come peacefully and quietly. He lay on the bed outside of the covering, only partly disrobed, with his eyes half open as if in a gentle sleep. On his face there were no traces of pain, but a pallor had come over it that indicated only too plainly that he had passed away. It needed no close examination to tell that he was dead, and Mrs. Hendricks screamed and ran down stairs. A servant was dispatched to the residence of Dr. Thompson, adjoining, and he came immediately, but by the time he had reached the bedside, the limbs of the distinguished dead man were becoming cold and rigid, and to Mrs. Hendricks' pathetic appeal, "Oh, doctor, can't you do something?" he was obliged to answer: "It is too late." Mrs. Hendricks became almost distracted with grief, and it was an hour or more before she became sufficiently composed to give any information about her husband's last moments. The family servants, two of whom had lived with them for years, ran about the house crying and moaning, and there was the utmost confusion for a time. When the news was bulletined down town it was generally discredited, and in a very few minutes a hundred or more of Mr. Hendricks' close political and personal friends had hurried to the house. Very soon around the entrance on the street, and it was found necessary to refuse admission to all comers except the immediate relatives. Mr. Hendricks died in his private chamber, a large, comfortable room in which he did the most of his work. Near his bedside was a case containing legal and political works, and on his desk were his papers, memoranda and a large number of letters which had been allowed to accumulate without answering for the last two or three days. His dressing gown and slippers were at his bedside, and near by was a small stand on which were various medicines and a goblet of water. Portraits, landscapes and bric-a-brac adorned the walls of the room, and were in striking contrast with the sad scene within. Dr. Thompson says that in his opinion, Mr. Hendricks died of paralysis of the brain, and there will be no occasion for a post-mortem examination to establish what the disease was. For several years he had not been a robust man, and was subject to frequent "bad spells," as he called them, during which he would be prostrated sometimes for days at a time. About two years ago he was confined to his room for several weeks by a gangrenous affection of the foot, which at the time it was feared would result in blood poisoning, and it was then thought that the end of life was near; but he apparently recovered entirely from this and was in his usual health. While in Washington during the last session of congress, he was overworked and almost worn out by the press of political matters, and upon his return home he signified his intention of laying aside all public business last summer and devoting the time to recreation.

A GREAT CROWD COLLECTED

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Nov. 25.—A bulletin announcing that Vice President Hendricks had fallen dead was received at the Baltimore & Ohio telegraph office at 6:30 last night. As Mr. Keiser, the chief operator, took it from the wire he ran to the telephone and called up the White House.

"What's that?"

"Mr. Hendricks is dead."

"No!"

"Yes. We have just received a telegram from Indianapolis announcing that he fell dead a few moments ago."

"Oh, my!" ejaculated the operator at the White House.

Dropping the receiving tube, he ran in to tell the president. Mr. Cleveland was at dinner when the operator broke in upon him with the news. Leaving the table he went up stairs two steps at a time and went to the telephone room and asked how the report came, and whether there was any confirmation of it. Being told that the message was from the manager of the Baltimore & Ohio office in Indianapolis, and that its accuracy was indisputable, he asked that any further details might be given him promptly, and returned to his sister, who remained in the dining room, in a state of excitement. Swallowing a few morsels, the president went up stairs, wrote a message of condolence to Mrs. Hendricks and dispatched messengers to the residence of cabinet officers, asking them to come to the White House at once.

THE PRESIDENT'S CONDOLENCE.

The president sent the following telegram to Mrs. Hendricks:

Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C., Nov. 25.—To Mrs. T. A. Hendricks, Indianapolis: The sudden and lamentable death of your husband excites my profound sympathy for you in the hour of your great bereavement, and I sincerely mourn the decease of one so lately associated with me in the execution of the people's highest trust, while the nation mourns the loss of an honored citizen and faithful public servant.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Senator Edmunds was apprised of the death of the vice president by a reporter, and was greatly affected. He said that he had known Mr. Hendricks a great many years, and they were intimate friends in old times in the senate, and said:

I have always had a personal regard for him. I regret exceedingly his death, I shall call a meeting to-morrow of all the senators in the city to make such arrangements to have the senate represented at the funeral as are proper.

Secretary Bayard said:

The news of Mr. Hendricks' death is painful to us all; but the condition in which the American people are placed by his death, through the failure of congress to pass proper laws regarding the presidential succession, the fact that there is now but one man between the American people and no president, is more painful to contemplate.

Secretary Lamar said:

My acquaintance with Mr. Hendricks was not intimate. He has been for many years a great favorite in the South, and I think was regarded all over the country as a very safe, conservative statesman, a man of great dignity and force of character. He had the faculty of attaching friends to him very warmly. Although his death is very sudden and a great shock to us, I have often heard his friends express apprehension as to the condition of his health ever since his attack some years ago.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

When the cabinet adjourned the president issued the following:

Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C., Nov. 25, 1885.—To the people of the United States: Thomas A. Hendricks, vice president of the United States, died to-day at 5 o'clock p. m. at Indianapolis, and it becomes my mournful duty to announce the distressing fact to his fellow-citizens. In respect to the memory of this official and patriotic public servant, whose long career was so full of usefulness and honor to his state and to the United States, it is ordered that the national flag be displayed at half-mast upon all of the public buildings of the United States; that the executive mansion and the several executive departments in the city of Washington be closed on the day of the funeral, and be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days; that the usual and appropriate military and naval honors be rendered, and that on all the legations and consulates of the United States in foreign countries the national flag shall be displayed at half-mast on the reception of this order, and the usual emblems of mourning be adopted for thirty days. (Signed)

GROVER CLEVELAND, President.

T. F. BAYARD, Secretary of State.

A NEEDED LAW MAY BE PASSED.

The death of Mr. Hendricks leaving, as it does, but one life between the presidency and a vacancy in the office, to which no one under the law can succeed, will undoubtedly impel congress to pass the bill which has been pending so long to provide for a regular successor. Several times has such a bill been reported from committees of both houses, and once a measure for the purpose was passed by both; but they were unlike in the most essential features, and the senators and representatives were not able to adjust their differences. This event will renew the discussion, and it is to be hoped that some plan of succession will be decided upon. At the cabinet meeting to-night, the subject was introduced by Mr. Bayard, who gave the history of congressional action upon it, and quite a long discussion ensued. The president had no intention of referring to the matter in his message, but the painful reminder of the uncertainty of human life, coming as it does with direct force to him personally, will cause an addition to that document in which he will urge congress to act at once.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—Senator John Sherman was seen at the Fifth Avenue hotel, and said:

The death of the vice president would not affect the organization of the senate in any way as the case was extremely simple. Out of courtesy a president pro tempore was always elected in the presence of the vice president; when, when a party operates to place him in power, could not exercise much influence. He did not appoint the senate committees, which were named in caucus by the dominant party. At present the senate was without a presiding officer. It must be remembered that the senate, unlike the house, was a permanent body and there was no customs about electing permanent officers. I have not the slightest idea who will be elected. The matter is altogether of friendly consultation. I was a personal friend of Mr. Hendricks and knew him very well. He was a man of marked character, and a regular attendant of the Episcopal church. The death of Mr. Hendricks will probably have any effect on Indiana politics, and the loss of no one man nowadays makes much difference to the country. But he was certainly one of the most prominent of men in the Democratic party, and I remember him well when he first went to Congress in 1863 and took a leading part in the reconstruction policy. I think that Hendricks, Thurman, Morton and McDonald were all Ohio men living in Indiana. The contingency has never arisen in the United States in which a president of the senate has been elected to the vice presidency. I always remember that the vice president has died, and that was King, who was elected with Pierce. I don't want to discuss the probabilities, and we on our side certainly want to see Cleveland serve his term out.

THE PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—Justice Miller of the United States supreme court, in speaking of the presidential succession to-night, said:

"If Mr. Edmunds had been elected president pro tempore of the senate at the recent extra session it is probable that he would now be constitutional successor to the presidence in case of the death of Mr. Cleveland during his term of office, though the tenure of office of the president pro tempore can be terminated at will by vote of the senate."

"Do you think that the sudden death of the vice president will give rise to a constitutional amendment defining more clearly the status of the president pro tempore of the senate?"

"No, it is not needed. The president pro tempore holds office until the return of the vice president or until the senate elects his successor, nor is his tenure of office limited to the session. He is elected to the senate in his capacity as a senator, and his office is expired, limited only by limitation as does the senator."

EX-JUSTICE STRONG,

of the supreme court, said:

If Mr. Cleveland should also die before the meeting of congress, the country would be without a head, and a most difficult problem would be offered for solution. A constitutional amendment is not necessary, but a congressional enactment is certainly a needed one, and under the circumstances will probably be adopted at the incoming congress, vesting the presidential succession, in case of the death of the president, vice president and speaker of the house, in the secretary of state until an election could be held. In this contingency the secretary of state would be the most logical successor. The member in question would be true of the vice president, president pro tempore, or speaker of the house, in case of the death of the president. The succession would be the line of the vice president, president pro tempore, or speaker of the house, in case of the disability of either of these.

MR. HENDRICKS' CAREER.

EARLY DAYS.

Thomas A. Hendricks was born on a farm near Zanesville, Muskingum county, Ohio, Sept. 7, 1819. His father, Maj. John Hendricks, with his family, left Ohio the spring after Thomas was born, and settled at Madison, Ind. Maj. Hendricks remained at Madison until 1822, when he removed to Shelby county, then very sparsely settled, and opened up a farm. It was located near the center of the county, and Shelbyville, the county seat, was afterward partly laid out upon it. It was here that Hendricks grew to manhood. After the completion of his education at Hanover college, one of the pioneer educational institutions of the West, he studied law, and in due time was admitted to the bar. He first entered upon public life was long and varied. In 1848 he was elected to the state legislature from his county. In 1850 he was chosen a delegate to the convention which made the present constitution of the state, and was an active participator in the proceedings of that body. In 1851 he was elected to congress, and in 1852 was re-elected to the same office. In 1855 he was appointed commissioner of the general land office, and held the position until he resigned it in 1859. In 1863 he was elected a senator of the United States, and served a full term of six years. In 1872 he was elected governor of Indiana, and served as such until January, 1877, when he was succeeded by Gov. Williams. In 1860 he ran for governor against Henry S. Lane, and was defeated by 9,757 votes in Indiana over Judge Otto. Douglas was 23,523. In 1868 Conrad Baker defeated him by 1,161 votes. The same year, Gen. Grant's majority over Gov. Seymour in Indiana was 9,579. In 1872 his majority over Gen. Thomas M. Browne was 1,148. The same year Gen. Grant's majority over Mr. Greeley was 22,924. Gov. Hendricks was the only man elected on his ticket that year, excepting Prof. Hopkins, who was chosen to a non-political office. In 1876 he was a conspicuous candidate for the presidency, and had the wishes of the Democracy of the West been consulted it is possible he would have been nominated. The East, however, in the instance proved too strong for the West, and Mr. Tilden became the choice of the convention. To placate his disappointed friends, Mr. Hendricks was given the second place on the ticket, and materially increased its strength in all the Western states. In 1877, Mr. Hendricks' term of office as governor expired, he went into private life, and resumed the practice of law in his own state.

HIS SUCCESS AS A LAWYER.

He studied the law at Chambersburg, Pa., in the office of his uncle, Judge Thomson, an eminent jurist of that state. He thoroughly mastered its elementary principles and the minutiae of its practice. With this foundation, and with a natural legal mind, he was never at a loss, and was always strong in any cause without special book preparation. Before court or jury he was equally at home. In a trial he was never off guard, nor disconcerted by any unlooked-for turn in the fortune of a case. He encountered any such crisis with as much promptness, fertility and address as if it had been anticipated and prepared for. Mr. Hendricks was remarkable for the readiness with which he gathered up and got well in hand the questions, both of law and fact, in any case in which he was engaged. In this readiness no advocate in the country excelled him, and very few equaled him. He had no specialty as an advocate, being alike efficient in the civil and the criminal court, and in all kinds and forms of actions. Although out of office after his retirement from the gubernatorial chair, Mr. Hendricks was not out of politics. His voice was heard in every important campaign in his state, and he retained the liveliest interest in all political questions of the day. His adherents rallied around him again in 1880, and his name was once more prominent for the presidential nomination. A bitter fight sprang up among the Western leaders, and a strong opposition was formed against him. Senator McDonald at that time disputed his prestige with the Democracy of his state, and had also obtained considerable popularity in other part of the West. He became conspicuous as a possible presidential nominee, and with the aid of the Hendricks faction it is possible that he might have been the choice of the Cincinnati convention. It has always been claimed that Hendricks was the only obstacle to his nomination. It is certain that Hendricks fought his pretensions with bitter zeal, being determined, if beaten at all, not to be beaten by a political rival from his own state. As the convention was thus prevented from uniting on a Western candidate, it nominated the choice of the East—Gen. Hancock. Mr. Hendricks, though deeply disappointed, took an active part in the campaign, and was heard from the stump in many parts of the West. Mr. Hendricks was a delegate to the Cincinnati convention of July, 1880, and made the speech putting in nomination the name of Mr. McDonald. Mr. Hendricks himself received one vote for the nomination on the first ballot. His name aroused much enthusiasm, and on the second ballot he received forty-five and one-half votes.

NOMINATION AT CHICAGO.

At the Chicago convention in 1884, Mr. Hendricks was given the second place on the Democratic ticket and had the satisfaction of being elected. During the past year he never was in better spirits. He has traveled about the country much, has made many speeches and attended many banquets. He has hearitly enjoyed the dignity of his position, and has generally talked freely in the interviews, and occasionally offended members of his own party by his freedom. Mr. Hendricks has been a prominent man for many years, and, like all public men, has been criticised and found fault with, but no one ever called in question his private or official integrity. In this respect he was absolutely unassailable.

MR. EDMUNDS TO BE PRESIDENT PRO TEM.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Nov. 25.—It is customary for the vice president to absent himself from the session of the senate before an adjournment in order that that body may elect a president pro tempore, who, under the constitution, is in the line of succession to the presidency of the United States. The Democrats had a majority in the senate when Mr. Arthur was vice president, and he did not follow this custom, so that when Garfield died he was without a legal successor. Mr. Hendricks followed the example of Mr. Arthur at the special session of the senate last spring, and did not permit the Republicans to elect a president pro tem., so that Mr. Cleveland now stands alone. But there is only two weeks before the meeting of the senate, when the Republicans will elect a vice president. It is pretty certain that Mr. Edmunds will be the Republican candidate, because it is known that since David Davis occupied the chair of the senate, and it was generally understood that the Republicans would elect him as president pro tem. as soon as Mr. Hendricks gave them a chance. There has been no talk of opposition to him, but now that the position assumes great importance, there may be some life between it and the presidency of the United States, there may be some rivalry. Mr. Edmunds does not care particularly for the honor and did not seek it before; and, according to his usual custom, will probably maintain now, Senator Sherman would like to be president of the senate and will be elected, if Edmunds is not. There is some talk about the hotel to-night about Logan, and the Democrats think the Republicans ought to select him as acting vice president, as a matter of consistency and to carry out the expressed will of their party. Logan's friends talk in the same way, and it is probable that he will make a fight for the place; but his popularity in the senate is not such as to justify him in expecting success. The prevailing opinion in the hotel lobbies, and among senators who are the city, is that Edmunds will be chosen. Senator Conger said to-night that he believed it would be Edmunds, but that the latter had expressed a preference to remaining on the floor and engaging in the debates, and especially to perform his duties as chairman of the judiciary committee; that he had of course the duties of presiding officer, and did not covet the honor; but in Mr. Conger's opinion the senate could unite upon him better than upon any other man. He thought it would be Sherman, if it wasn't Edmunds.

AN ATTITUDE OF INDIFFERENCE

A party of fishermen from Hancock, Mich., have returned from the north shore of Lake Superior, after visiting the scene of the wreck of the steamer Algoma. While there they picked up four floating bodies on the shore of Rock harbor. The bodies were forwarded to Winnipeg for identification, if possible, and burial. The party said there was over three hundred tons of freight from the steamer strewn over the shore. Portions of the pilot house, cabin, wheel and a number of life preservers were picked up. It is the opinion of the party that a number of bodies have not yet been recovered from the shore, where nearly the whole wreckage has been lodged. The steamer can be plainly seen on the sandy bottom of Rock harbor.

Col. H. M. Lazelle, who is detailed to witness the British army maneuvers in India, under special invitation from the British government, arrived at the Ebbett house from Fort Vancouver to report to the adjutant general as to what report he will be required to make of his observations. There is a strong belief in England that a strong demonstration will be made in Afghanistan in the coming spring, and if this be the case, it is considered probable that Col. Lazelle and Capt. Mills will be ordered to accompany the troops and report upon operations. Capt. Green accompanied Gen. Skobeloff during the Russo-Turkish war.

In a speech at Chelsea Sir Charles Dilke threatened a certain lady of influence with a year's imprisonment at hard labor for intimidating voters. The lady to whom he alluded, whose name he did not mention, is Lady Cadogan, wife of Earl Cadogan, under secretary for the colonies and president of the Conservative association. Sir Charles Dilke's committee assert that an organization of ladies, which has been making a house-to-house canvass, has used the Dilke divorce case, adding infamous untruths, to influence voters.

Saw a man who made $10,000 this fall in wheat. Saw another man about ten feet behind him who told me how he made it. His wife inherited $10,000 in cash. She wanted to double or lose it. Husband was perfectly willing. She gave it to him to invest in wheat and he lost it. Instead of investing a dollar he placed the whole in bank, and has the certificate of deposit in his wallet to-day. Speculative wives are now firm and in good demand.—Detroit Free Press.

NORTHWESTERN NEWS.

Iowa Commissioner's Report.

Des Moines, Special, Nov. 20.—The forthcoming report of the Iowa railway commissioners will show that the state's mileage has increased 1,280 miles during the year, and the funded debt $16,949,859. In 1878 $343,849,402 represented 8,357 miles of road. Now $357,789,918 represents 21,790 miles. The earnings for the roads in Iowa were reported as follows:

Passengers, mail and express	$9,891,100
Freight and miscellaneous	26,142,837
Total earnings for the year ending June 30, 1885	$36,123,587
Total earnings for the year ending June 30, 1884	35,753,271
Increase over the previous year for Iowa an increase of 1.07 per cent	$388,316

The passengers are 27.6 per cent of the entire earnings. The increase of earnings over the previous year, for all lines was $1,121,081; the decrease, $4,730,840, or a net decrease of $3,609,159, or 3.58 per cent. We think there is an error in the Sioux City & Pacific report, which shows earnings of $841,002 less than last year for the present year, which included the earnings of the Nebraska extensions, the present report evidently does not; this is one of the difficulties the commissioners meet with in their efforts to get accurate statistics.

OPERATING EXPENSES AND EARNINGS.

The operating expenses for Iowa for the year ending June 30, 1884, were	$35,735,271
The operating expenses for the year ending June 30, 1884, were	23,250,919
Leaving the net earnings	$12,484,355

The earnings for the 7,249.29 miles reported were $1,722.22 per mile of road.

The gross earnings for the year ending June 30, 1885 were	$36,123,587
The operating expenses were	23,093,581
The net earnings	$13,030,006

The net earnings for the 7,478 miles reported were $1,742 per mile of the road; the operating expenses for the year were a decrease over the former year of $17,334; the earnings, an increase of $388,315, or the net earnings over the former year for Iowa were $545,650.

The following roads reported a decrease in earnings.

Iowa Central	$201,501
Chicago, Burlington & Kansas City	17,569
Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs	44,710
Milwaukee & St. Paul	130,197
Rock Island	390,574
Omaha	54,017
Dubuque & Dakota	7,560
Illinois Central	334,451
Sioux City & Pacific	81,502
Iowa Northern	2,617
St. Louis, Des Moines & Northern	12,941

The other roads show a small increase of the earnings in the state over last year. The report speaks at length of special rates being allowed large shippers, and condemns the practice as a discrimination. It also protests against the abolition of car loads, but favors making a difference between rates for long and short hauls.

New Wisconsin Roads.

From all appearances Wisconsin is to have a bigger boom in railroad building during the coming year than it has experienced for many years. The new roads and extensions to be constructed during 1886, so far as learned, are as follows:

Milwaukee & Northwestern—Extension north through Michigan to connect with the Ontonagon & Brule River, 110 miles, and also from Forest Junction to Sturgeon Bay, sixty miles.

Dalrymple Road—North from Bayfield to the Indian reservation, 6 miles, then southwest to Stillwater 130 miles.

Merrill & Abbotsford—From Abbotsford northeast to Merrill, 40 miles.

Milwaukee, Peoria & Western—From Milwaukee southwest to Delevan, 40 miles.

Minneapolis, Sault Ste. Marie & Atlantic extension 100 miles.

Marshfield Road, known as Hile's Route—From Neillsville to Marshfield, 20 miles.

Minneapolis & St. Louis—From St. Croix Falls to Superior City, 100 miles.

Wisconsin Central—Extension from Waukesha to Milwaukee, 20 miles.

Menomonee Falls & Western—Fourteen miles.

This makes a total of about 650 miles, which will probably be increased by the extensions of the Northwestern and the Milwaukee & St. Paul lines to nearly 1,000 miles.

The Dakota Vote Canvassed.

Yankton, Dak., Special Telegram, Nov. 21.—The state board of canvassers met in this city and opened the returns from the various counties of the proposed state of Dakota, tabulated them and declared the result. The returning board consisted of the following:

Members of the state executive committee: Hugh J. Campbell of Yankton, chairman; H. M. Reed of Sully county, secretary; E. C. Beebe of Sioux Falls, John Cain of Huron, S. G. Updyke of Codington county, J. R. Hansen of Yankton county.

Those gentlemen were assisted by Joseph H. Teller, secretary of Dakota; A. J. Edgerton, chief justice; D. Frank Etter, M. D., superintendent of the Dakota insane asylum. The vote on the constitution and its separate clauses was as follows:

For the constitution	25,132
Against the constitution	6,522
Majority for constitution	1,861
For prohibition	15,552
Against prohibition	15,218
Majority for prohibition	334
Against minority representation	16,640
For minority representation	11,256
Majority against minority representation	5,384
For capital—
Huron	12,146
Pierre	10,305
Chamberlain	3,167
Sioux Falls	3,337
Alexandria	1,374
Scattering	602
Huron's plurality	1,835

Mrs. O. W. Williams of Norwalk, Ohio, who is a niece of Mrs. Senator Angus Cameron of Wisconsin, states that the dispatch to the effect that Mrs. Cameron has gone violently insane is incorrect. The lady has not become insane at all, but was for a time delirious, the result of an accident at the Brooklyn ferry. She is improving rapidly.

Mr. Day has returned from Washington, and is confident, Ziebach will be appointed governor of Dakota.

He claims that she is a witch, is bewitching the hogs and stock, and by attributing the hog cholera prevailing near Randolph to her bewitchedness, as it were.

Bridges, the young man who robbed the firm of Cumberledge & Smith of Athol, Dak., charges one Washburn, son of a former business man of Athol, with complicity in the crime. Last August Evans had an accident done to call his old home. Probably his visit will be a long one, for now it transpires that before leaving he ruined his sister-in-law, a young girl.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

St. Paul has a snow-shoe club, and will soon have toboganning and all other arctic sports.

Congressman H. B. Strait, of the Third District, gives it as his opinion that efforts would be made at the coming session of congress to revise the tariff, and he believes that such revision could be accomplished without detriment to either employers or employes. He said that he would vote for Morrison's horizontal reduction last session, because it was the best that could be done. He was not in favor of a horizontal reduction, but favored a revision and incidental reduction. He doubted whether a silver bill would come up for action, but favored a suspension of the coinage.

Ralph N. Marble, the recently appointed register of the land office at Duluth, is a native of Manton Marble, former editor and proprietor of the New York World, and was recently the confidential agent of the administration, appointed to visit England, Germany, France and other European nations, and obtain all possible information on the subject of gold and silver as standards of value. Young Marble has resided in Duluth for the past few years, and has been engaged in the lumber business.

The case of Sarah M. Sherman, administratrix of the estate of Nathan E. Sherman, against the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway—order from Freeborn county—was decided in favor of the plaintiff in the supreme court by Judge Gilfillan. The suit was brought by the plaintiff to secure a certain amount of damage from the railroad because of the death of her husband by the cars of the road. In his decision Judge Gilfillan says: "The evidence goes to show that the railroad company was negligent in not having protected the frog or the space between the main rail and guard rail where the deceased was killed. Such places unprotected are places of very great danger, especially to employes coupling or uncoupling cars, and it is the duty of the railroad company to guard its employes against the danger, if there be a reasonable, practical means for doing so, and to use all proper diligence and care."

Traveling men complain because the Northern Pacific does not allow them to ride on its freight trains.

Miss Curry B. Kilgre, the first lady applicant for admission to the Philadelphia bar, was denied that privilege Thursday.

Huge Gilman, of Manchester, England was fined £30 for forcibly kissing a young lady in a railway carriage. The article is cheaper in this country.

The 16-page boom edition of the Sauk Centre Tribune which was issued on its sixth birthday was one of the most exhaustive we have yet seen. Brother Brower deserves great credit.

The Northern Pacific road has issued a special tariff on cats, making a reduction varying from 15 to 50 per cent from points on its line in Minnesota to Duluth, Superior, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Minnesota Transfer.

An old soldier traveled all the way from Arizona to Washington in quest of a government position and was promptly assigned to the almshouse. Democrats must not take this as precedent for there is no almshouse big enough to hold them all.

Senator Vest the strutting little gobbler of Missouri, marched into the President's private office with a party of ladies the other day and was politely but promptly shown the door. For the first time in his life the little senator blushed.

The Aitkin Age gives the Tribune a little needful advice in its last issue, and the Tribune gives editor Brower a horrible roasting, while the Journal devotes a few inches of space to traveling insurance agent. It seemed to be in the wind.

The last and most ridiculous rumor concerning Louis Riel is to the effect that he is still living and that the man executed was a devoted follower who greatly resembles the Canadian rebel. The story is probably unfounded and no thinking people will give it credence.

About 3000 workmen were thrown out of employment recently by the stoppage of work in the cigar factories of Stratton & Storm New York. The shop was recently organized in due form as a union shop, but the boycott put on its cigars nearly a year and half ago, and had not been taken off.

A petition has been signed by over fifty Scandinavians of Fergus Falls protesting against the appointment of L. L. Anne as receiver of the land office at that place. The protest is not against Mr. Anne's qualifications, but against his being appointed as a representative Scandinavian. Democrats generally are satisfied with the appointment.

Cost of the West Hotel.

In various boom literature issued at Minneapolis the cost of the West hotel has been stated at about $1,700,000. Architect Buffington, the builder of the hotel, has just commenced a suit against Col. John T. West, the owner, for balance of compensation which he alleges to be due him for services. His claim is for five per cent, on the cost, which he figures at $900,000. This at last we have an official statement of the cost of the West hotel.

A Relic of Early Times.

The Superior Inter Ocean is printed on the same old-fashioned Washington hand press on which were struck off the first copies of the St. Paul Pioneer, some time way back in the "fifties." As an interesting relic the Superior Historical Society has several times made efforts to gain possession of it. Last year when C. E. Foote was running the paper they offered him 500 cash subscriptions in exchange for the press and recently they have been in correspondence with the owner of property, who has proposed to sell the press outright for $500.—Duluth Tribune.

King Alfonza Dead.

MADRID, Nov. 25.—King Alfonso died this morning of consumption accelerated by dysentery. The widow of the king is completely prostrated by his death. Throughout Monday night the king had spasmodic fits, the results of fever and delirium. The doctors of Madrid and two of El Pardo were in constant attendance upon him. They decided on Tuesday morning that the king was in a dangerous condition. The fits continued throughout Tuesday, and the king died at 8:45 o'clock Wednesday morning. The pope's benediction arrived before he expired. All the officers of state and the cabinet ministers, except the minister of war and minister of the interior, were present when he expired. The cabinet met immediately and the queen was appointed regent. In accordance with the law, the members of the cabinet have tendered their resignations, but will remain in office at the regent's pleasure. The body of King Alfonso will be interred in the palace of the Escurial. Orders have been issued that the troops be confined to the barracks. Great anxiety prevails here. A rigid censorship is exercised over press telegrams. Queen Victoria was the first person in England to receive an official notification of King Alfonso's death. Besides sending a message of condolence to Madrid, she dispatched a special messenger to the Spanish embassy at London within half an hour of the receipt of the news.

The Dude.

And now the dude,
The gaudy dude,
Looks at the glass,
The looking glass;
And on the face reflected there
Tries to find a single hair.

He wants a beard,
A bushy beard;
He wants it bad,
Extremely bad;
For winter's coming on space,
And frosts will bite his pretty face. I

He strikes a scheme,
A desperate scheme,
He smiles a smile,
Triumphant smile;
Says he, "Why didn't I wig before?
I'll buy one at an auction store."

Discovery of Burgoyne's Treasure Chest at the Bottom of a Creek.

There are any number of men here who possess charts and drawings of locations said to contain millions of buried treasures: Down the river there are caves and bays innumerable. Capt. Kidd's vessels are believed to have anchored and of the exact conformation is given in charts held by persons who are only waiting for the necessary capital before finding fabulous wealth. The opportunities "of fortune-hunters on the Lower Hudson are not greater than those from the Canadian line south of the scene of Burgoyne's surrender. It is known that when the King's troops started south, intent on the defeat of Gen. Gates, and then by capturing Albany, shutting off Gen. Washington from the flower of the continental troops, their officers were well supplied with money, and tradition has it that in 1775 when the English soldiers were passing through Comstock, Washington county some of the leaders buried a chest full of the prospect of a surprise by the enemy so they filled a large brass cannon with gold plugged it up and shot it into the creek, forty rods south of Comstock and from that time to the present there has been many different parties at Comstock in search of this treasure. One is a man named Chapid from New Jersey, with a partner from Brandon Vt. Chapid spent a month at Comstock a year ago last winter, making observations, and last week he reached the village again with a professional diver from Boston and other men. To-day it is announced that they have found the cannon, but the water at the point is thirteen feet deep, with a strong current, and there is about three feet of sand, old logs and other debris over and about the treasure. These accumulations will be removed and the cannon, which is bottom side up, will be hoisted ashore. There is great excitement in the vicinity.

A Model Wife.

Jones was well aware that his wife was in the habit of rifling his pockets when he was asleep, but, like a wise man, he kept silence on the subject. One night, however, he awoke and caught her in the act.

"Ha!" he exclaimed, "what are you doing, my dear?"

The lady started, her cheeks flushed, the pantaloons dropped from her grasp, and she was about to make a full confession when a bright idea entered her head. Recovering her composure she said:

"I was looking to see whether your pantaloons needed any buttons."

"They do, they do, my dear," he exclaimed, springing from bed, "needed 'em for weeks, mouths, and I wondered why you didn't sew 'em on; but I waited, for I was sure you would get to it some time. And how kind of you to get out of bed at this time of night to attend to 'em. Say what you will, there's nothing in the world like a good wife. Let me turn up the gas a little, so's you'll have all the light you want in sewing 'em on. Got your needle and thread and the buttons? No. Well, tell me where they are and I'll get them for you."

Mrs. Jones proceeded to sew on the buttons, while her husband sat on the side of the bed and encouraged her with words of praise for her wifely care and thought for his comfort, occasionally remarking that go where he would he would always say there was nothing in the world like a good wife. Then he went to the wardrobe and brought out several pair of trousers, a coat, two or three old vests, and a number of shirts, from all of which buttons were missing, and cheerily observed:

"While we're at it, we'll make a night of it."

Two hours later, when Mrs. Jones, with a weary sigh, removed the thimble from her finger, Mr. Jones patted her on the cheek and said:

"I say it again, my dear, say it again, that wherever I go I will make it known, proclaim it from the housetops, should it be highway robbery in its treasure, a crown to that husband, and his ornament to her sex."

Then Mr. Jones, chuckling to himself, lay calmly down and slept the sleep of the just.—Detroit Free Press.

Fried Potatoes a la Macaire.

Baron Brisse says that this excellent dish was originated as follows: Louis Philippe and his family were breakfasting at the Tuileries one morning, and the Prince of Joinville was so absorbed giving an account of one of his voyages that he refused a splendid dish of fried potatoes which was handed him. His narrative finished, he turned around and asked for potatoes, but such justice had been done to the dish that none were left. A footman ran to the kitchen for more, but there were none ready.

There was no time for hesitation; the audacious chef threw the trimmings of the potatoes served at the royal table into a frying-pan with a large lump of butter, tossed the mishapen pieces until of a golden color, pleasing to the eye, and finished the dish with a finely chopped parsley. The Prince found the potatoes so good that he inquired the name of the dish. No one knows what answer he received, as, being very deaf, he repeated: "Ah fried potatoes a la maniere! I find them excellent and hope they will offer them to me often." The King and Princess laughed so heartily that the tears rolled down their cheeks, but the deed had been done and fried potato trimmings cooked in a frying-pan had received their baptism.—From the Cook.

Julia Dent Grant.

The following beautiful tribute to the wife of General Grant is from the Washington Republican:

It was the happy fortune of him whom the Nation mourns to love and be loved by Julia Dent—the model daughter who became the ideal wife and mother. Who can estimate the indebtedness of the Republic to this lady? Who can say—who will venture to say—that a less fortunate marriage might not have prevented the development and fruition of all the great possibilities of Grant's nature.

The story of the wedded life of this couple is a benefaction to humanity, teaching lessons of the purest domesticity, commending mutual love and confidence as the only sure foundation of a happy home and the best equipment for a worthy career.

There were dark days in the early years of this couple; they trod a narrow, rugged path, but they made it wide enough to go side by side, hand in hand, heart by heart, for they clung close to each other. There were times when, had the wife been disposed to be fretful, complaining; when, had she been anything but the tender true, loving, bright, joyful woman she ever was, her husband might have fallen by the wayside, his high destiny unfulfilled, his name almost unknown. "Amid the storms and the sorrows of life the affections of man may vary, but unchanged and unchanging is the true heart of woman—she loves and loves forever." The storms were not so dark nor the sorrows so thick as to cause any change or shadow of veering in the affection of U. S. Grant for his young wife, and her doubtless love was the light of a fixed star.

There were years of poverty in the autebellum life of the Grants, and the wife was called by stern necessity to forego many of the luxuries which lend a charm to home and mitigate the cares and troubles of existence. But poverty did not chill the heart, dim the eye, subdue the voice or weaken the confidence of the wife. And the husband, cheered and solaced by hopeful sympathy, kept his trouble, from the world and quietly pursued the path of duty, although it is scarcely possible that he could have been entirely ignorant of his own great capacities.

It was then that when Grant entered the volunteer army, called out to serve the republic, until the collapse of the rebellion at Appomattox, there was scarcely an hour when his reputation was secure. The world can never know how much he was made to suffer by cruel misrepresentations. But when malice and detraction were doing their worst he had one safe refuge—the love, the trust, the unwavering faith of his wife. And when the war was ended, and the world was paying homage to the genius of Grant, there was one person who had no surprise at his achievements, for he had accomplished just what she had expected. Her faith had anticipated all, and she was not any that her faith, her love, her consolatory and cheering influence had made it all possible.

Of Mrs. Grant as mistress of the White House, it must be said by him who writes justly that she was fitted for the place more admirably. She had no ambitions to take part in the affairs of State. She did not care to be influential in the disposal of patronage. Her only desire was to be a good wife to the President, as she had been to the Captain, to the leather dealer, to the Colonel, and to the General. All that public duties required of her she did, not ostentatiously, nor yet with bashful timidity, but with the grace that comes with good sense and right purposes. Her happiest hours were those devoted to her children, and no children in this or any other land had a better mother. Wherever the Grants have been or however situated, whether in poverty in Missouri or in splendor in Washington, whether in the highest stations at home or the most honored guests of Kings and Emperors of Europe and Asia; whether in the lap of luxury or suffering the waves of financial disaster, Mrs. Grant has been true to the promises of her youth—has been the best gift of God to man—a model wife and mother.

There is a deplorable deadlock in the capital of Hawaii, where the king refuses to receive the French Consul in his boots, and the Consul refuses to appear bareheaded before the king. The people are wonderfully self-contained under the terrible strain, and it is hoped that a revolution may be averted. We suggest to the King and Consul that they might compromise on a neat pair of low-cut shoes. They are very comfortable this time of the year. But the Consul must be careful not to wear white socks with them. There are some things that a proud people won't stand.—New York Tribune.

A traveling company recently gave "Hamlet" in an Arizona town, with the following notice of the event appeared in the local paper: "A company of strolling players visited this place at Barney Hill's. They played a dizzy man called 'Hamlet.' We never heard of the drama before and we never want to see it again. It is the silliest thing in the way of a show we ever fell up against. There ain't no horses, singing, fighting or dancing in the whole blamed thing. The hero was a lively dog fight in the middle of the play that was a great success. The actors were not killed, but the duck that played Hamlet was tarred and feathered. He will recover."

A little miss of 3 years, who lives under the shadows of Hope Church, was playing with the neighbors' children when she slipped away in to her prayers. She accompanied them, and, when they arrive at the church, she observed that she was the only one without a book. So she jumped down and hunted around from the bookcase in the room, returned to her chair and opened her book like the others, and underneath she read aloud unabashed. After reading she shut her book and waited till they had all kneeled, then she assumed a like position, putting her hand to her face, but keeping a lookout between her fingers the while to observe what was taking place. When the others rose from their knees, she rose to one side of the pew, and, calling her by name, said: "I like this game first-rate. What is the name of it?"—Springfield (Mass.) Homestead.

One of the scientific papers, in explaining why a gun burst when fired with the muzzle under water, tells a singular story of a gentleman's attempt to fire a Colt's navy revolver after the first cartridge had lodged near the end of the barrel for want of a sufficient charge to drive it out. The gentleman kept on shooting, not knowing whether the bullet had escaped or not, and the barrel finally ripped open. It was sawed in two longitudinally, and twenty-six were found following bullets wedged one into the other, and so tightly compressed by the successive explosions that none of them looked like flattened dies.

The geology of natural gas wells is interesting and instructive. The weight of evidence seems to show that it is useless to prospect for natural gas except in synclinal troughs, the theory being that the gas, owing to its volatility, seeks the highest cavity in the rock, escaping from the hollows of bended strata. An instance of this is shown in the Great Kanawa valley, above Charleston, W. Va., where the whole region has been honeycombed with borings for salt. The only gas wells struck lie in a belt a few rods wide along the crest of the Brownsville anticline, and all the salt wells of Western Ohio follows the line of the "Cincinnati arch," and so on.

Mr. Burgoyne says that Michael Fahey owns a pig, but no cat. The pig is a pet in the family, having been left an orphan at a very tender age, and brought up by hand. This has naturally brought the Faheys and the pig into terms of great intimacy, and the latter has the run of the household. The building is, or rather was, badly infested by rats. Mr. Fahey was struck with a great scheme two months ago. He commenced feeding rats to the pig, feeding them to the pig. Piggy soon preferred rat meat to any other, and wouldn't touch anything else. He fell from his master's table. Then he commenced catching them for himself. He would stand for an hour watching a rat-hole, and when the festive rodent would come out the pig would make a dive for him. The rats soon learned that the tents and it was all day with his entirely. So successful has the pig been! rat-hole, and the rats are getting so scarce in the Fahey mansion as to make strangers at a church festival.

THE ST. PAUL GLOBE.
DAILY, 1886! WEEKLY,
SUNDAY.
THE REPRESENTATIVE NEWSPAPER OF THE GOLDEN NORTHWEST
It distinctly represents DEMOCRATIC IDEAS, LIVE ISSUES and ECONOMICAL GOVERNMENT, and in the interest of the latter, it is firmly in favor of the REDUCTION OF THE WAR TAXES
As levied on the labor of the country by the present iniquitous tariff.
It will fight Monopolies;
It will fight Intolerance;
It will fight Illiberalism;
It will fight Proscription in whatever party found.
While it is Democratic to the back-bone, it is broad and liberal in its political views and tolerant toward those who differ from it in opinion, and is an especial representative of the non-office holding and non-office seeking people.
It is not an organ, except of MORAL FORCES AND LIVING IDEAS. It will stand manfully by President CLEVELAND in his struggle to restore honesty to the Government service, and in his declared war upon party bossism and the rule of partisan cliques.
As a Newspaper, the GLOBE shall not be excelled in either the East or the West. It is a member of the Western Press Association and has the exclusive franchise for this territory of the United Press Association. Besides, it participates in all the news advantages of the New York Press Association and the leading News Associations of European and other countries. It has its own leased telegraph wire to Chicago and the Brainerd cities, and maintains a force of correspondents representing every important city and town in the Northwest, and to this list of active news gatherers it is constantly adding.
The management of THE GLOBE is always alert for that which will instruct and amuse, and presents a mass of every day news and novel feature suggested by the brightest and most aggressive American journals. The attractive illustrated articles, racily written; the choice daily stories; the charming social chat; the valuable labor department; the crisp relation of local events; the ably edited farmer's department, which aid in making the GLOBE the brightest and breziest of Family Papers, are all evidences of this.
A SAMPLE COPY of the GLOBE speaks for itself, and secures a subscriber every time it is shown. The WEEKLY GLOBE,

Notice of Mortgage Sale.
Whereas default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Gideon Ingersoll and Julia Ann, his wife, mortgagors, to Thomas Sale, mortgagee, dated the 16th day of January, 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the county of Crow Wing, in the State of Minnesota, on the 22d day of January, 1884, at 2:30 o'clock P. M., in book "E" of mortgages on page 236, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of $1,000 and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.
Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in said mortgage, at the auction at the front door of the court house in the village of Brainerd, in said County of Crow Wing and state of Minnesota, on the 12th day of December, A. D., eighteen hundred and eighty-five, at 10 o'clock A. M., to satisfy the amounts which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and the costs and expenses of sale and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage.
Dated, November 6th, 1885.
THOMAS SALO, Mortgagee.
W. A. FRAYER, Attorney for Mortgagee.
Dated Brainerd Oct. 30, 1885.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.
Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed by Ole Olson and Ingeborg Olson, his wife, mortgagors, to Joseph Atkinson, mortgagee, dated the 17th day of December, 1883, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Crow Wing, Minnesota, on the 3d day of September, 1885, at 2:30 o'clock p. m., in book "C" of mortgages page 145, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of one hundred and eighty-two dollars ($182.50), and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.
Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in said mortgage, at public auction at the front door of the court house in the village of Brainerd, in the county of Crow Wing, and state of Minnesota, on Monday, the 14th day of December, A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amounts which shall then be due on said mortgage with the interest thereon, and the costs and expenses of sale and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.
The premises described in said mortgage, and to be sold, are situated in the county of Crow Wing and state of Minnesota.
Dated, Brainerd, Minn., October 16th, 1885.
JOSEPH ATKINSON, Mortgagee.
W. A. FRAYER, Attorney for Mortgagee.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.
Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered on the first day of April, A. D. 1884, by Frank W. Wilson and Ella Wilson, his wife, mortgagors, to Charles F. Weaver, mortgagee, of Ramsey County, Minnesota, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in Crow Wing County, Minnesota, on the 3d day of September, A. D. 1885, at 2:30 o'clock P. M., in book "C" of mortgages, on page 236, and assigned by the following described premises, situated in said Crow Wing County, Minnesota, to wit: Lots number five (5), and six (6) in block one hundred and twenty (120) in the town of Brainerd, according to the official plat thereof on file in the office of the Register of Deeds, and on which said mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date hereof, the sum of six hundred and eighty-five dollars ($685) and no proceeding at law or in equity having been instituted to recover said debt or any part thereof.
Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in said mortgage, at public auction, in front of the Court House in the City of Brainerd, County of Crow Wing, and state of Minnesota, on the fourteenth (14th) day of December, A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock A. M., to satisfy the sum herein claimed due, and twenty dollars (20) attorney's fee as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, together with the costs and disbursements of sale.
Dated October 28th, 1885.

Accidental Shooting.

On Wednesday afternoon a DISPATCH scribe learned that one of the Tift boys had been shot and killed by one of his brothers, and a visit to the house between 3d and 4th streets confirmed the rumor. Around the stove sat the family, bewailing the sad catastrophe, while in an adjoining room lay the cold and rigid remains of what only a few hours before had been a bright and promising boy of 12 years, and whose death will be added to the already long list of "Didn't know it was loaded" items. It seems that the accident happened in this manner: William, a boy some eighteen years of age, was handling a Winchester rifle which he supposed was empty. Right in front of him and leaning against a low bedstead stood his 12 year old brother, Geo. Tift. The older brother was working the lever which pumps the cartridges into the gun from the magazine, and as this one cartridge which was still in came to its place the gun was accidentally discharged, and the ball struck George in the breast, passed through his body and came out in two pieces, having been split on a bone, these two pieces going through the back of the bedstead and the side of the house. The boy dropped to the floor with the exclamation "Oh, Willie, what did you do it for," and in about eight minutes was dead. There was nothing about the matter that would indicate that it was anything but accidental and the coroner after viewing the remains concluded that an inquest was not necessary. The family is in hard circumstances as a glance at their surroundings indicate, and a subscription paper was circulated on Wednesday evening in order to procure a burial for the deceased and which we understand was subscribed to quite liberally. It is indeed sufferers Thanksgiving day for the afflicted family, and should be a warning to others of the caution necessary in handling fire arms.

Got their Shekels.

Agent Sheehan commenced his annuity payments at Leech Lake on the 11th inst, where nearly 1,600 Chippewa Indians were given their cash payments, their annuity goods not having arrived. Here Col. Sheehan took the precaution to leave the rolls complete for the goods payments, in charge of Dr. Allen, superintendent at Leech lake, who will distribute the same immediately upon their receipt. No dissatisfaction was manifested by the Indians, as they felt satisfied the delay of the goods was in no fault of the agent. There being a large number of what is known as the Mississippi, including the White Oak Point, Gull Lake, Rabbit Lake, Snake River and Mille Lacs bands, whose annuities expired last year, many of whom had not received pay for five years, owing to their advanced age, sickness and other causes could not travel to place of payment, have, by Col. Sheehan's persistent efforts in going from point to point and hunting out these needy wards of the government to whom this money was long since due, been paid in full. These deferred payments which have just been cleared up by the Indian agent would have been paid when due but for the roving, homeless habits and nature of the Indians. Agent Sheehan goes next to the White Earth, Otter Tail and Red Snake bands to continue payments, and the relief afforded by these early payments will be a great benefit to the Indians, and the danger of suffering during winter avoided.

Should be Sufficient.

Complaint has been made by the jobbers of St. Paul that their traveling men are greatly inconvenienced by not being permitted to ride on freight trains on the Northern Pacific road, claiming there is not a sufficient number of trains run to permit their men to visit more than one place a day. Officials say it is not so, as the following number of trains are run: Between St. Paul and Brainerd, three passenger and one freight each way; between Brainerd and Detroit, three passenger and two freight trains westbound and three passenger and one freight eastbound; from Detroit to Fargo, three passenger and one freight train each way; on the Little Falls and Dakota branch one passenger and one freight train each way; between Fargo and Jamestown, westbound two passengers and two freights and three passenger and one freight eastbound. Between Jamestown and Mandan, one freight and one passenger train daily. This number, the Norther Pacific believes, should be satisfactory.

Didn't Work for Knot.

On Monday we received the following letter from D. J. Knox, of Aitkin, which explains itself. We were misinformed about the matter as to whom Upham was at work for and gladly make the correction. The following is the letter:

AITKIN, Minn., Nov. 23, 1885.

DEAR SIR:—In your issue of the 20th inst., appears an item headed "What Has He Done," and therein you connect my name with an affair of which I know absolutely nothing except from hearsay.

I have no store, and Mr. D. C. Upham was not employed by me, as book-keeper or in any other capacity. Mr. Upham was manager of W. Potter & Co.'s Villard hotel, and those gentlemen will probably give you the facts should you desire them.

I would, therefore, request you to correct your statement as far as I am concerned, and oblige

Yours, very truly,
J. D. KNOX.

They Will Return.

Dan Morris Sullivan appeared to a good audience at the opera house on Wednesday evening. This combination is well known in this section and they are always greeted with a house full of people anxious to hear their Irish melodies, which are always the best to be had. The troups have decided to give another performance here on their return trip next Wednesday night, Dec. 31, and it is needless to say that their audience will be large and appreciative if anything can be judged by their reception last night. There will be an entire change of programme. Admission will be 50 cents, reserved seats 75 cents, balcony 25 cents and children 15 cents. Let all who enjoy an evening of fun attend.

Numerous Shooting Stars.

As he sat on the step one Sunday evening he claimed he had a right to a kiss for every shooting star. She at first demurred as became a modest maiden, but finally yielded. She was even so accommodating as to call his attention to flying meteors that were about to escape his observation, and then got to calling him on lightning bugs, and at last got him down to steady work on the light of a lantern that a man was swinging about in the depot in the distance where the trains were switching.—Ex.

Can't Blow the Bass Drum.

There is just one instrument in the band which our genial photographer Hopper can't blow and that one is the snare drum. He gets along all right with the rest, no matter which one comes first.—Aitkin Age.

Thanksgiving Day.

The 26th dawned bright and fair.
It was Thanksgiving day.
And on the platter, round and fat,
The turkey gobbler lay.

The free lunch counter was the bar,
Of turkeys there were three:
A tramp slid up and ate them all,—
A turkey gobbler he.

The banks, postoffice and county offices were closed nearly all day.

All the business houses were closed in the evening, and a majority of them in the afternoon.

The churches were quite largely attended in the moraing, devotional exercises being held in nearly all of them.

The turkey shoot at Gilbert Lake and trotting park drew quite a large crowd. The day was fine, the sport was exciting and the turkeys were fat.

The dance at the roller rink Thanksgiving evening was quite largely attended. The way the regular Thursday evening dance, but the dancers were more plenty on account of the day.

About 200 ladies and gentlemen enjoyed the fine skating at Gilbert Lake. It is said that the ice was never in better condition than it is at present and if the snow keeps off the place will become a popular resort for lovers of the sport.

The church people and others who took the matter of giving the poor of the city a Thanksgiving into their hands did a very good deed. The headquarters for supplies was at the Baptist church, and there was no end to the provisions, clothing, shoes, etc., which the good people brought in. These were distributed by teams to the deserving poor and many a heart was made glad thereby. It is estimated that over a hundred dollars worth of supplies were donated.

Thanksgiving day originated with the Pilgrim fathers, who landed in what is now Massachusetts, Dec. 30, 1620. For the first two years they endured extraordinary privations, some of them nearly starving. The harvest of 1623, however, was a bountiful one, and the governor of the colony set apart a day to be observed as a day of thanksgiving and praise, and of feasting. The custom was kept up year by year, and soon came to be regularly observed throughout the New England colonies, although its growth was slower in other portions of the country. The first national thanksgiving proclamation was issued by President Washington and other similar proclamations were issued by other presidents, but it was not made a national holiday until 1862. Now nearly every state and territory in the union make official recognition of the day. Among the New Englanders, especially, it is pre-eminently a day for family reunions. The date is usually the fourth Thursday in November.

Lumbering Interest.

The last of the outfit of Wilson & Gillespie, of Minneapolis, for their upwoods lumbering operations, have gone forward from Brainerd, and their camps are equipped and ready. They will cut this season a little north of Sandy lake, about thirty-five miles from Aitkin, whence nearly all their outfit has been taken by teams, so late is the river open. They will put in 8,000,000 feet this season; against only 1,500,000 last year.

W. C. T. U.

There will be a meeting of the W. C. T. U. at the Baptist church next Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. All interested are invited, as business of importance will be transacted.

Had His Fun.

A Duluth school boy found a small dynamite cartridge and thought it would be fun to explode it in school. While the teacher was hearing a class he lighted the fuse. Later the doctor amputated three of his fingers and hopes to be able to save the rest of his hands.

For Rent.

The Norwood House is for rent and parties desiring a good location, a new house with every convenience, etc., can do well to enquire on the premises of Mrs. E. French, Norwood street, at the corner of Seventh.

Licensed to wed.

Marriage licenses were issued by the clerk of the court this week to George Bertram and Miss Annie J. Wright, and Phillip Betzold and Annie Goodderz.

Louis Demulos who represents Beaupre Kelley & Co was in the city Thanksgiving Day and was asked by a DISPATCH scribe what the business men of St. Paul think of the future of Brainerd. "Well sir, they have great faith in your city." said he. "The truth is that there have been less failure here than in any town on the line of the Northern Pacific road. Your merchants pay their bills promptly when due, and are making some money, I think. Not so with other towns. Yes, sir, Brainerd is bound to go ahead."

Dr. Stanley's Dental rooms present quite a neat appearance. He seems pleased with Brainerd and reports lots of business.

Accidents That Are Costly.

"You occasionally hear people find fault because managers of railroads do not prevent accidents," said a railroad man in Jersey City the other day. "There may be bears among railroad men who rejoice in wrecking railroads that they do not own, but to the practical railroader a train wreck is a big loss directly, besides the loss in prestige which follows."

"Is the billing stock so costly?"

"Yes, a freight train, for instance, that rolls down an embankment, where half of it is burned, will give you a good idea of the loss. The average engine is worth $7,000. A common freight car is worth $275, or perhaps $300. The ordinary gondolas are worth from $225 to $250. An engine is easily ruined beyond repair, but a wreck can knock $3,000 out of it just as easy as ruining it of a logs. A burned car is a ruined car, of course, and repairs on those that are crushed may cost anywhere from $50 to $200 each.

If a passenger car, such as is used on ordinary roads, is burned, $3,000 goes up in smoke. These figures are for the cars in use, and not now out of the shops. From this you can see that wrecks may happen which cost a company $10,000, and yet nothing is likely to be said about them in the papers unless some one gets hurt, and not then if the railroad men can keep it quiet."—N. Y. Sun.

Some of the coast negroes of Africa still worship the shark and regard its stomach as the road to paradise. They offer it poultry and goats two or three times a year, and at least once a year try to propitiate it by offering a ten-year-old child. The little victim is bound to a post in the sands at low water, and, as the tide rises, mingles its shrieks and screams with those of its mother until the ravenous fishes drag it out of sight.

Admiral Alden's tomb in Portland, Me., is now covered by a monument of red granite, which bears a bronze medallion portrait and three other bronzes, setting forth his naval battles and services in the survey of the Pacific coast.

A Salesman's Remark.

One of the requisites of a good salesman is knowing just what to say, and when to say it, to customers who are undecided and hardly know what they want, and to whom a word spoken at the right time is sufficient very often to effect a sale. Sometimes, however, salesmen with the desire of satisfying a hesitating customer, say things which have the opposite effect from that intended, as the following anecdote will show:

A gentleman who was several years younger than his wife, and who was besides small and rather boyish in appearance, entered a dry goods store in one of our towns with his wife and requested to be shown some carpets. The proprietor himself, to whom as it happened they were unknown, waited on them. He showed them very politely his extensive stock of carpets, and exhibited with great pains their beauty and excellence of quality. The gentleman and his wife seemed somewhat undecided as to what suited them among the various patterns displayed, and the proprietor, with the laudable desire of assisting them to decide, remarked, blandly to the gentleman, pointing to one of the carpets, "I think, sir, this is the carpet your mother likes."

The gentleman looked a little surprised, but quietly said, "she is not my mother, sir, but my wife."

The lady said nothing, but it is needless to add that she did not find any carpet to suit her, and they left the proprietor, who felt that he had lost a sale by his unfortunate remark, a sadder and wiser man. If there is anything that a woman will not forgive it is to be thought older than she is.—Detroit Free Press.

Roadside Fruit Trees.

A writer in the New York Tribune, in treating of the utility of planting fruit trees by fences says: "One advantage attending this planting is the economy of drawing handsome returns from soil otherwise unproductive, as roadways or lanes. The roots of the trees search this through, and find abundant available food, for no growth robs the soil, not even grass, while it is continually receiving manurial droppings. Another very important gain results from the safety of the trees from wounds. The fence shelters the stem from sun-scald and from cattle-rubbing, and the roots are safe from that ruin of orchards, the plowshare, which not only tears the roots while in the height of Summer activity, but, what is worse, though least seen or suspected, shears off the feeding rootlets at the same fatal season—these intermediate points being found near the surface where the most wholesome food is most abundant. Fence-row trees live longer than trees exposed to injury in open orchards. Trees of every habit should be chosen, and preferably Winter sorts of color green or unattractive before ripening in the cellar. Such fruits, while the most valuable, do not attract depredators, and field crops are out of the way before the time arrives for gathering the apples. Such rows of well-shaped trees embellish a farm, help to shelter its surface and add to the beauty of the landscape.

BABY'S NAME.

Then father took the Bible down
And in his clear old fashioned hand
Upon its Record broke ye
He wrote the name as it should stand,

But protest came from all the rest
At this unusual a little bairt
The dearest, sweetest and the best,
That antiquated name to wear.

And aunts and second cousins cry
"A name so vore and ordinary
Could not be found if one should try
Let us that name appellation 'Mary'."

And over and over again they land
Her yellow curls, her baby grace
"Oh, call her Mabel, or Maude,
Or Christine," for her aged lace.

"But time will change this golden locks
"To match the grey in dusky spindrier,
Far better name her 'Beatrice,'
Or 'Imogen,' serene and mature."

"Oh, name the child for Aunt Louisa,
For she, good soul, is well-to-do,
The eccentric name to please her father
And we can call the darling 'Lou.'"

Most prudent counsel, all too late!
'Twixt Mabel's and Matthew's pages
Appeals, unspeakable as fate,
The name beloved of all the ages.

The Ancient gem, its purity
Unspoiled shall grace our latest beauty;
Sometime on dearer lips to be
The sweet synonym of love and duty.

And gracious womanhood adorn,
However fortune's gift may vary,
Till one day like Easter morn,
She hears the Master call her "Mary."

A HIDDEN HERO.

J. S. Winter, in Harper's Bazar.

Lord Archie Falconer was keeping his hunters—to the time of a modest employment of barrackes, and he was his way to see them, when he chanced to meet with Marcus Orford.

His way lay through a poor and forlorn-looking district, laid out in small streets and narrow courts of ugly flat ureloks houses, built in rows to the cultivation of nothing but a certain air of crushed and melancholy meek mattress, and stained a dusty mildew between the barracks and the town of Warnecliffe. It was peopled chiefly by such of the Benedicks among the rank and file of the Black Horse as were not on the strength of the regiment.

Marcus Orford was laughing as Lord Archie approached him, and he felt his own face expanding into a broad smile instantly.

"What are you laughing at?" he demanded.

"I found yesterday," the other answered, "that Armitt was down with a severe attack of congestion of the lungs—a very serious case, his wife told me the doctor had pronounced it. I sent a basket of things down to him this morning—ice and grapes and jelly and so on, you know—for, poor devil, it must be hard times to be ill in such a hole as that"—jerking his stick over his shoulder to indicate a row of squalid little, dirty, "behind" houses—"and Moore brought back word that he was very bad—as bad as he could be. So I thought I'd come round and, however, he is to-day. 'Tis a tidy little place, but nicely kept and comfortless, and I found half a dozen youngsters all squatting about the doorstep and evidently expecting every minute to hear that the end had come. 'Hollo, my man,' said I to the biggest boy, a lad of 7 or 8, 'are you one of Armitt's boys?' 'Yes, sir, we're all his,' he piped out. 'Oh, are you?' I said, thinking to have really well look at my grey as he generally does. 'And how is your father this afternoon?' 'Very bad, sir—moribund—as I was saying to he,' the youngster piped out in reply. 'An' the doctor says he'll die afore morning, there'll be some 'opes; but it he don't live, till morning, he won't have no 'opes at all.'"

Lord Archie laughed outright, and Marcus Orford continued: "But I don't believe Armitt will live one morning, poor chap; and if not, what his wife will do with all those youngsters is rather a hard question."

"Yes; decent fellow, Armitt; I had him in my honeys for a time. Pity he married without waiting for leave; he's such a drug on a man, unless the wife happens to have some business of her own; and, Armitt, poor beggar, is so overridden with children, and his wife's line of business not of much use to her."

"What was it?"

"Oh, she was a circus-rider, and a ripping smart girl, too. I remember seeing her the year I joined. She had a pretty little face, and a pretty little figure too, and a lot of light crinkling fair hair tumbling about it, and over her head in shining flecks of light; I never saw such jolly hair."

"She's a jolly little woman now," Marcus Oxford remarked. "Well!"

"We were all, more or less gone on her," Lord Archie continued, "and little favorite, we used to call her. Her circus name was Mademoiselle Favorita—Jim, you know, Jim Jones, of course, none of the fellows could make any impression upon him, for whatever, not, the very smallest, and one afternoon, about 6 o'clock, I met her going down to the circus with Armitt—and then I knew why. And, sure enough, very shortly after that she and Armitt got married. He'd got in for leave, and waited till he got it, which he would have done, they might, have got on very well, but he married her straight out of hand, and there they have stuck ever since. Armitt ought to have got on, for he's a gentleman—a Variety man, too; but he's been unlucky, sinking all round."

"You don't mean it," Orford cried, in huge surprise, "that he's a gentleman—and a 'Variety man'?"

"Oh, but I do, though—an Oxford man. I remember his face distinctly as a man of Brasenose when I used to Paul's, but for the very life I couldn't then, and have never been able since, to put a name to it. And, yet I almost fancy—and I think of it every time I get a fair look at him—that I've seen the face with a tuft above it."

"A tuft! you don't mean it!" Orford cried.

"Yes, I do. I get back to a certain point, and then I seem to come to a dead-wall, which blocks me completely."

"Oh, you must be mistaken, or be mixing him up with somebody else," Orford declared. "It couldn't be, you know; somebody would be sure to recognize him."

"Well, it may be," Lord Archie admitted—"I may be, but still I've had the same impression ever since I have been in the regiment. Still, I can't say, I may be mixing him up with somebody else."

"Why don't you ask him outright?"

"I did hint at it once. One of the horses was sick, and we had a good deal of trouble with him; and one afternoon I was watching Armitt put a bandage on, when the conviction that I had known him before came upon me strongly as ever. 'This is not the first time you and I have had to do with a horse together, Armitt,' I said to my groom. He looked up at me quickly, a flash of a look as if I might be a detective who had been tracking him for years, and had hunted him down at last. 'For God's sake, don't my lord,' he said, all in a hurry; 'it's no use pretending that I was once a—' 'An undergrade at Brasenose,' I put in when, seeing the fellow was quite scringing shiver that I felt sure I'd put my hand on an open wound, and wished I had let him alone. 'I would to forget all that, my lord; look that life and everything connected with it long since,' he said, desperately. 'I wouldn't have joined the Black Horse if I'd ever guessed you would have been gazetted to it.' 'Oh, it's all right. I'll not remind you of it again, Armitt,' I told him; for, of course I didn't want to make his burden any heavier for him to carry. I knew his face, but could not remember his name, and should not try to find out. 'Only I said I recognized you perfectly well that you didn't call me 'my lord' in the old days.' 'Don't talk about the old days,' he burst out. 'I forgetted all that made them worth having, and I can bear it but don't remind me of them, if you know what pity is—don't.' So of course I told him I would not, and I have never tried to find him out; but I've thought about it, and tried to fix the name I knew belonged to the face, but I never could; it has always eluded my memory just as a dream often does. Yes, there is a queer story at the back of Armitt's hard life, I know that. I'm a good deal of a man to have been a tuft at Brasenose, and then a private in a smart regiment, with a wife picked out of a circus. And he's fond of her, too; oh, yes, for she is such a bad sort, and looks wheedly pretty. Yes, it's a queer story, very. Well, I must be getting along—by-by!"

"By-by!" retorted Orford, turning on his way, wondering much about the story he had just heard. Meantime Lord Archie went further along the street, and turned in at an archway between two of the little fatureless houses, which brought him into the stable-yard. He just cast an eye over the stables, and then inquired of the groom which was Armitt's house.

"The man pointed it out, and Lord Archie crossed the narrow, flagged little street, and knocked softly on the panel of the door. It was opened by the pretty fair-haired wife who looked worn to death, and had a baby in her arms, and half-a-dozen children, a little more than infants, clung to her skirts, and the bigger ones stood in the background looking at the door.

"Good-day, Mrs. Armitt. How is your husband?" he asked.

"Very bad, sir, very ill," she answered with quivering lips and eyes brimming over, not, because she had been weeping, mind, but because the sympathetic tone went straight to her poor aching heart, and quite had swept by a strong hand; "he's very ill, indeed; and Dr. Granger scarcely gives me hope at all."

"Who's attending to him? Have you got a nurse or anybody to help you? Lord Ashton's doctor?"

"Yes, my lord; Mr. Orford sent one in as soon as ever he heard Armitt was ill—very good of him, I'm sure, I never get over it, my lord—never." And lowering her voice almost to a whisper, "He's a gentleman, sir, in his mind; I know it; I'm sure of it."

"What kind of a something?" Lord Archie asked.

"I can't tell that, my lord," she answered; "but something there is, for certain. Armitt is a very quiet, close sort of man, and though he's one of the best husbands living I never drew breath, and has never given me a cross word since we were married, and he's never raised his hand to one of the children—and they are trying at times, there's no denying—he's never told me a word about his past life, never a one. I don't know anything about him, my lord, not even where he was born or whether he has a relation in all the world. But he's good, true, my lord, and though he's no better now than a common soldier, he's a gentleman, Armitt is and something wrong and fancy he was even more than that."

Lord Archie's conscience pricked him a little that he was paying a honor to keep from this distressed little soul, with her pretty fair hair and blue eyes and tender face, that he knew the truth of much of Armitt's hard life, and, on a sudden thought came into his mind.

"Would he like to see me, do you think?" he asked.

"I feel sure he would, my lord," she answered.

"Well, you might ask him," he said, for he had no desire to disturb what probably were his ex-groom's last days by recalling, or bringing to his mind the incidents of the past—incidents which he most likely needed no stimulant, and which, if he recall, would now be crowding back upon him, as the report that he was dying had nearly done with the present.

So she went up the creaking little stairs, and he heard her softly knocking lord Archie standing in the midst of the group of awe-struck and bewildered youngsters, till she came down or two of them, the eldest boy amongst them, and found that Marcus Orford's little anecdote had been literally doctored in the matter of pronunciation and accent, and that he is no more with all others, spoke very well indeed, and if not quite up to his own standard, still very far above the average of a better class of children than those living in that part of Warnecliffe.

And then Mrs. Armitt appeared again, and said the sick man was very anxious to see his lordship if he would go up. So Lord Archie went up alone.

It was a poor little room in which he found himself when he reached the top of the creaking little stairs, but it was clean and orderly. The quilt upon the "bed was white, if coarse, and there was a pleasant faced middle-aged nurse in a white cap sitting beside the patient, who rose and made her obeisance when he came in, liberally doctored in the matter of pronunciation and accent, and that is no common
