IT is very aptly stated by an exchange that "Gov. Altgeld is the ablest speaker on the Bryan side." There is no disputing Altgeld's ability. This makes him all the more dangerous. In case of Bryan's election Altgeld would dominate the administration and be the real president.

THE Towne organ at Duluth, the Herald, is getting disheartened, and practically gives up the fight by saying: "If Bryan is beaten he can blame the record of the Cleveland administration for his defeat." They might add that Page Morris will be elected to congress over Towne owing to the free silver record of the latter political acrobat.

AN article which ought to be read by every one who is interested in the progress women are making in the public pursuits of life is "Women at the Bar," published in Demorest's Magazine for November, and illustrated with excellent portraits of some of the women who have made a name for themselves in the practice of law.

WELL, well, Charlie Towne, the adored orator of city of the unsalted seas, met his match at Barnum on Friday, where a joint debate between himself and J. Adam Bede took place. Cholly will lose his reputation as an orator, as well as his position as congressman, if this thing doesn't end pretty soon. Mr. Bede handled the gentleman without gloves and worsted him at every point and arraigned him as a supporter of the Bryan-Altgeld-Tillman crowd.

THE Duluth Herald claims that the only question now is how large a vote Charley Towne will receive. In order to quiet the nerve of the Herald man we will state that in 1894 Towne received 1204 votes in Crow Wing county, out of 1985 votes cast for the three candidates for congress. This year he will get less than 700, and the total vote will not fall much short of 2400. Page Morris will represent this district in congress for two years at least, and the people who elect him will never have occasion to say they were sorry for it, as they have been in the case of Mr. Towne.

CHARLIE TOWNE'S bluff was called by the St. Paul Dispatch, and the outcome leaves that political hypocrite suspended in the air. The Dispatch agreed to pay all court expenses and waive all formalities if Towne would consent to go to trial with his libel suit against that paper October 16th, in order to give Charlie a chance to prove his innocence regarding silver and silver mines. But, of course, the offer has been rejected. The general public is thereby given to understand that the Dispatch knew what it was talking about when it published the charges alluded to, and that the suit for $75,000 damges started by Towne was merely to throw sand in the public eye.

THE Lumber Exchange, in Minneapolis, was canvassed on Saturday, and the vote of the people in the building stood 411 for McKinley and 25 for Bryan, and that's about the proportion all over the country. Charley Towne's frog story, which he related at every stopping point in 1894 before he deserted his friends and landed in the Populist camp, is applicable to the noise that the minority is making in this campaign. Get one free silverite excited, for instance like Bro. Stivers was in front of the Sleeper block on Tuesday afternoon, and an uninformed man would think the air was full of 53-cent dollars. However, it is only a delusion, which lasts while the frogs are keeping the noise up.

THE ticket put up by the Populists on Monday evening certainly cannot appeal very largely to their friends in various parts of the county for support. The slate was dictated by the Democratic managers, and as a return the Democrats will put no county ticket in the field. The rank and file of the Democratic party, however, will not support the nominees, as the agreement never could have been carried out had more than a handful of the faithful known what was going on. The full strength of the Populist vote will not be given it either, for the reason that the only Populist outside of Mr. Errickson who sought an endorsement at their hands, Mr. W. H. Everest, for auditor, was turned completely down, and Mr. John Koop, a life-long Democrat, nominated over him by an overwhelming vote. Taking it altogether the Demopops could not have engineered the matter in any more successful a manner to insure the defeat of the whole ticket.

THE more the people consider the matter the more firmly convinced are they that it is just as necessary to elect Gov. Clough as it is to carry the state for McKinley and the republican candidates for congress, says the St. Cloud Journal Press. Gov. Clough has made a good governor, he is a man of the people, and is not ashamed of the fact that he owes his success in life to hard work. His success would give notice to the world that Minnesota still stands for good government and honest money. The election of John Lind would be accepted as notice that we had joined the populistic procession along with Kansas. We can't afford the experiment.

THE free silverites have two features to their argument—same as they have two candidates for vice-president, says the Little Falls Transcript. One argument is that free silver will make money cheaper—and the next is that the laboring man's dollar will be just as valuable to him as now. Whichever of these arguments a sound money speaker discusses, the silverite at once advances his other position. If the sound money man says that a 53-cent dollar will injury the country, the free silverite declares the silver dollar will be as good as gold. If the sound money man declares that a continuance of all money as good as gold, will not insure a man getting a dollar any easier than heretofore, the free silverite claims that his plans will provide a cheaper dollar.

HOW MANY of our citizens have silver bullion to be coined free at the mints? None. On the other hand how many of our citizens would be benefitted by opening the mills, factories and shops of the United States to the laborers of America? And the answer comes that every man, be he laborer, mechanic, tradesman, or whatever vocation he follows, would at once be placed where the benefits of industry and thrift could be appreciated. And still there are people who cry out, "give us free silver," when the fact is that it would be much harder to get a dollar under such circumstances than it is now, and we think nearly every one appreciates the fact that conditions should be bettered instead of made worse. Just how these people expect to get something for nothing (barring the mine owners) is beyond our comprehension.

IT is a great fad for our neighbor, and in fact all free silverites, to claim that the people who favor the gold standard are in league with the Britishers, in fact it is a stock argument. But how about these free (but limited) silverites who are supporting Bryan for president, a man who worked as hard for free trade, while a member of congress, as any member of that body? England would be benefitted a hundred fold by free trade, and Bryan is an advocate of that theory which would permit the old world to ship and supply the American people with foreign made goods, thus throwing American workmen out of employment. Bryan and Towne, for when Towne supports Bryan he is advocating his principles, are attempting to pull the wool over the eyes of the public in regard to this matter. Republicans who favor protection to home industry and who have been boodwinked to believe in this free silver fallacy will do well to study the question before deciding to vote for Bryan, whose election would mean free trade, as well as free silver. Your vote from president down should be cast for men who will protect this country from the invasion of foreign goods made by the pauper labor of the old world to the detriment of our American institutions.

The Outlook is Fine.

H. C. Head, the Republican candidate from Mille Lacs county for the legislature, was in the city from Saturday till Monday noon. He had been in Crow Wing county and parts of Todd county, and everywhere found the Republican party in excellent condition with good prospects. He regards the outlook as excellent for the legislative ticket in this district, and the conditions certainly justify him in being hopeful. Not for many years have the chances for success been so favorable to the ticket in this district. Mr. Head is not as well known as the others on the ticket, Messrs. Ferris, Jones and Hartshorn, but he is popular where he is known, and deserves the hearty support of all opponents of the Demopop combination.—Little Falls Transcript.

Daniel Webster's Warning.

He who tampers with the currency robs labor of its bread. He panders, indeed, to greedy capital, which is keen-sighted and may shift for itself, but he beggars labor, which is honest, unsuspecting and too busy with the present to calculate for the future. The prosperity of the working classes lives, moves and has its being in established credit and a steady medium of payment. All sudden changes destroy it.

Honest industry never comes in for any part of the spoils in that scramble which takes place when the currency of a country is disordered. Did wild schemes and projects ever benefit the industrious? Did violent fluctuations ever do good to him who depends on his daily labor for his daily bread? Certainly never. All these things may gratify greediness for sudden gain, or the rashness of daring speculation, but they can bring nothing but injury and distress to the homes of patient industry and honest labor.—From a speech delivered by Daniel Webster in New York, March 15th, 1837.

Appeals to Prejudice and Passion.

We are accustomed to think that such an occurrence as the French Revolution is impossible in our country, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. This may be true, and yet there are certain traits and qualities of human nature which are never entirely subdued by civilization, and which are the same in all countries. We have passed safely through several severe tests of our ability to avert social and political combustion, but we have never before had just such a situation as the present one to face. A great party is seeking control of the government by appeals to prejudice and passion, to mercenary and insurrectionary instincts. It aims to array classes against one another in a violent way, and to substitute emotion and excitement for intelligent and temperate discussion. Possibly our comfortable theory that political explosives are comparatively harmless when permitted to have free action, and that the influences of reason and patriotism are a sufficient protection against anarchy, is correct, but, at the same time, there is some room for doubt, and it is best not to be too certain where there is so much at stake. The part of wisdom is to look at the matter soberly, and with a due sense of the obligation that rests upon all good citizens to see that seditious and destructive forces do not gain ascendency in our affairs.

Free Government vs. Free Silver.

The Colorado Republicans on Wednesday in convention assembled while they believe in the free coinage of silver are loyal to their country's interests and accept the assurances of the republican party that its efforts will be devoted to the securing of an international agreement for the unlimited coinage of silver and the resolutions end as follows:

"We favor free silver, but we value free government more, and, while the success of the party upon the Chicago platform might bring silver monometallism, it would afford no hope of bimetallism in this country."

Silver Fails to Advance.

Within a little less than two weeks wheat has advanced nearly 9 cents, flax has advanced 6 cents, and July cotton $10 a bale, says the Canton Repository. According to "Coin" Harvey whose claim is that the fall in farm products is due to the fall in silver, silver should have advanced proportionately to these farm product figures. But it has not. The white metal in bar still lingers at 65 and 66 cents an ounce.

A Good Comparison.

A Sharon man's story of the Irishman who swallowed a potatoe bug and then a dose of paris green in the hope of killing the bug, is very similar to the political situation. The American workingman swallowed free trade four years ago, and now to cure the misery which he has suffered ever since, the quack doctor is trying to induce him to swallow an unlimited dose of free silver.

How About John Lind?

Won't somebody dig up the old howl of "corporation attorney!" It's evidently been lost in the shuffle.—Glencoe Register.

WHAT HARRISON SAYS.

Impossible to Maintain the Ratio of 16 to 1.

Ex-President Harrison put the impossibility of restoring the old ratio of 16 to 1 between silver and gold by the bare fiat of the United States alone, without support from the other commercial nations, very forcibly in his speech the other night. He said that the government could fix its money unit and declare any coinage ratio it chooses to do, "but it cannot say and enforce its decree, if you should call out the regular army and navy, and muster all our great modern ships, and add the militia, and put William J. Bryan in command of them—it cannot enforce the decree that 16 ounces of silver are the equivalent of 1 ounce of gold."

The ratio of 16 to 1 represented the difference of the commercial value of gold and silver at a period when silver bullion was worth not less than $1.29 per ounce, and when coinage demand existed in every civilized nation. Silver bullion was then worth in the market just what it would bring at all the European mints—naturally so. But to-day this universal mint demand no longer exists. Silver, to that extent, is no longer in use. The result is that silver bullion is freely offered at 53 cents per ounce, and the supply vastly exceeds the demand.

In the face of this condition it is proposed by the Bryan metallists to open our mints to free coinage of silver—and to attempt to impart, by the mere stamp of the mint, the value of $1 to silver bullion which in all the world's markets is to-day commercially worth only 53 cents.

We are asked to do alone what all the other nations of the earth that are in the same class have ceased to do. If our forefathers, and if other nations ever since coinage began, could not disregard the differences in the commercial values of silver and gold, how can we? If 16 to 1 was a just ratio when silver was $1.29 an ounce, and when all countries kept their mints freely open to silver, how can it be now, when silver is only 65 cents an ounce and all mints are closed to it?—New York Recorder.

What Free Silver Would Do.

"Free silver would not mean that silver dollars were to be freely had without cost or labor. It would mean the free use of the mints of the United States for the few who are owners of silver bullion, but would make silver coin no freer to the many who are engaged in other enterprises. It means the debasement of our currency to the amount of the difference between the commercial and coin value of the silver dollar, which is ever changing, and the effect would be to reduce property values, entail untold financial loss, destroy confidence, impair the obligations of existing contracts, further impoverish the laborers and producers of the country, create a panic of unparalleled severity, and inflict upon trade and commerce a deadly blow. No one suffers so much from cheap money as the farmers and laborers. They are the first to feel its bad effects and the last to recover from them. This has been the uniform experience of all countries."—McKinley's Letter of Acceptance.

POPE'S MARE'S NEST.

HE CHARGES GOV. CLOUGH WITH MALADMINISTRATION.

The Secretary of the Silver Democratic State Central Committee Issues a Circular Full of Gross Errors and Misstatements, in Which He Charges Gov. Clough With Having Nullified the Will of the State Legislature in the Matter of the Forfeiture of the Hastings & Dakota Railway Land Grant Forfeiture—All the Facts Show That Gov. Clough Has Done His Whole Duty and Acted in the Interest of the State.

Gen. E. M. Pope of Mankato is the secretary of the Minnesota Democratic state central committee. Gen. Pope is known to the people of Minnesota as a gentleman of vivid imagination. As a member of the state legislature, as an apostle of the Farmers' Alliance, he became famous for the immense breadth of his visionary ideas.

Gen. Pope as secretary of the Democratic state central committee has suffered no change, mentally. If anything, he is more visionary than ever. He has dreams. His latest dream seems to be a species of nightmare, which has afflicted him to such an extent that his best friends are alarmed on his account.

He has dreamed that Gov. Clough has committed an act of mal-administration in state affairs, and he thus announces it to the silver newspapers of the state:

A Blundering Circular.

Minnesota Democratic State Central Committee, Globe Building, St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 22, 1896.—Dear Sir: Senate File No. 375, which became Chapter 165 of the Laws of 1895, was "A bill for an act to forfeit the rights of the Hastings & Dakota Railway company to select or acquire title to any of the public lands of this state."

This bill passed the senate on the 29th of March, 1895, by a vote of 33 to 6, as recorded on page 465 of the Senate Journal.

It passed the house on the 9th of April by a vote of 90 to 1, as recorded on page 742 of the House Journal. On April 18, 1895, the bill was approved, signed and deposited in the office of the secretary of state by Gov. D. M. Clough.

In the records of the state auditor's office, "Railroad Records," Book F, page 498, is recorded a deed of date April 13, 1895, executed by Gov. D. M. Clough, conveying to Russell Sage, trustee, all the lands involved in and affected by the legislative bill, which lands had been declared forfeited by that act.

So that between the date when that legislative act passed (almost unanimously) both houses of the legislature and the date when it was returned by his excellency, the governor, with his approval, he had destroyed all beneficial effects of the bill, nullified the will of the people of the state, thus expressed in the legislative act, and insulted the legislature by returning to them a bill which he knew and they knew had, by his act, been made empty of all results, and this righteous measure of the legislature was, in this manner, defeated in the interests of the corporation which was contesting with the state for the lands in question. This matter is brought to your attention as a matter of official record. We claim that it is proper that the official actions of this administration should be made public, as condemned, if they are worthy of condemnation. It is brought to your attention individually for your consideration, trusting that your judgment thereon will be expressed by your vote at the polls in November.

Very truly yours,
—L. A. Rosing, Chairman,
—E. M. Pope, Secretary,
Democratic State Central Committee.

To persons not acquainted with the circumstances, the charges against Gov. Clough would seem very serious, if true. Happily they are not true. The circular is simply a tissue of misrepresentation, falsehood, and misapprehension of facts.

Gov. Clough sought the opinion of Attorney General Childs on this case and Mr. Childs gave it as his opinion that there was no reason at law for the governor refusing to execute the deed covered by list No. 9, as it bore the certificate of State Auditor Biermann. Attorney General Child's opinion here given is very complete in its review of the history of the grant:

Attorney General's Office, St. Paul, April 12, 1895. His Excellency, D. M. Clough, governor, Sir:—I have examined the question of the right of Russell Sage, trustee, to a conveyance of the lands described in a proposed deed number nine tendered in his behalf for your signature.

The conveyance in question is sought by virtue of the matters and things set forth and referred to in the body of the proposed instrument. Briefly stated, the facts material to the question are in substance as follows:

In 1866 congress granted to this state to aid in the construction of railroads including one "from Hastings through the counties of Dakota, Scott, Carver and McLeod to such point on the boundary of the state as the legislature of the state may determine, every alternate section of land designated by odd numbers to the amount of five alternate sections per mile on each side of said road." Provision was made that deficiencies arising from previous settlement reservation or other cause should be supplied "from the public lands of the United States nearest to the tiers of sections above specified, so much land in alternate sections or parts of sections designated by odd numbers as shall be equal to such lands" thus disposed of. It was further provided that the said lands should "be subject to the disposal of the legislature of Minnesota for the purposes aforesaid and no other," and that when the governor of this state should certify to the secretary of the interior to the completion "in a good, substantial and workmanlike manner as a first-class railroad," of any section of ten consecutive miles thereof, the secretary of the interior shall thereupon issue to the state patents therefor of available lands "lying co-terminous to said completed section of ten miles and not exceeding one hundred sections" for the benefit "of the road having completed the ten miles aforesaid." Successive patents were to issue from time to time on the requisite showings and certificates. (Edgerton Comp. 97.)

The Hastings, Minnesota River and Red River of the North Railroad company was incorporated by the legislature of the Territory of Minnesota, in 1857, and its name was subsequently changed to Hastings & Dakota Railway company. It was authorized by its charter to construct and operate a railroad from Hastings over a route therein prescribed to a point on the Missouri river. The route thus prescribed was somewhat modified by subsequent legislation. (Id., 588, 593.)

The congressional grant above named was accepted by the state by an act of the legislature approved March 7, 1867 (Id. 592), whereby "all the lands, interests, rights, powers, and privileges" were "granted to and vested in" the said named company, subject to the provisions expressed in the said act of the legislature. The time for the completion of the road was repeatedly extended by acts approved March 4, 1869, March 2, 1871, Feb. 24, 1873, and March 8, 1878.

By reason of sales made by the company in 1872, 1880, and 1882, it conveyed away all of the railway owned, constructed or operated by it, but expressly reserved and excepted from such sale the land grant acquired by it as aforesaid. (State vs. Minn. Cent. Ry. Co., 36 Minn., 252.)

Notwithstanding such sales by the company, it continued thereafter to receive conveyances from the governor of this state of lands embraced in the said grant. What proportion of the company's road was constructed prior to such sale I am not advised, but assume from the recital in the proposed deed that it was not wholly constructed at that date. It is recited in the said deed, however, that the company fully completed, equipped and put in operation its line of road from Glencoe to Ortonville prior to the first day of January, 1880.

The charter of the company was forfeited December, 1886, by the judgment of the supreme court of this state (State vs. Minn. Cent. Ry. Co., Supra). The proceeding wherein such judgment was rendered was only instituted for and resulted in the forfeiture of the corporate existence of the company, and the decision therein reached determines nothing more. Notwithstanding such judgment of forfeiture the company enjoyed, pursuant to the general statutes of this state, a period of three years for the purpose of prosecuting and defending actions by or against it, and of enabling it gradually to settle and close its concerns, to dispose of and convey its property, and to divide its capital stock, but not for the purpose of continuing the business for which it was established. (Chap. 34, Sec. 416.)

Subsequent to the judgment thus rendered, and within three years thereafter, the company conveyed to Russell Sage, as trustee, all its right, title and interest in and to its land grants, "and all lands to accrue to said railway company under and by virtue of the said grants, with right and power to receive all deeds of conveyance therefor, which said deed was recorded in the office of the secretary of state on April 20, A. D. 1892."

In 1888 the supreme court of this state, in the case of Minnesota Central Railway company vs. Donaldson, 38 Minn., 115, speaking of the lands in question, say: "Plaintiff's default has been judicially determined and judgment entered forfeiting its charter, but the status of its land has not been affected; it still belongs to the plaintiff—a corporation forbidden in March, 1882, to continue the business for which it was organized, but in full life for certain powers enumerated in paragraphs 416 of chapter 34, General Statutes 1887."

To the same effect it was held by the United States circuit court, advertising to the declaration of forfeiture by the supreme court of this state in the matter above cited, that "the corporation * * * did not exist after the decree of the supreme court, but continued in organization and retained its officers and directors, and its stockholders continued to be such with all the authority possessed before. True, the corporation only existed for the purpose of settling up its corporate business and settling up its concerns; but to do this it had full control over all its property and could dispose of it for the purposes indicated in the statute, subject, however, to the rights of creditors and stockholders." (Hanan vs. Sage, 58 Fed. Rep., 651.)

The commissioner of the general land office, in passing upon the question of the right of the stockholders of the Hastings & Dakota Railway company to the enjoyment of the said grant, employs in the written decision the following language: "I therefore hold that the obligation of the United States under this grant is not discharged because the grantee corporation under the statute has become dissolved. The grant was to the state; the road has been built; the lands under the grant are certified to the state for the benefit of her grantee, and if, as appears, that grantee company has been dissolved its property rights under this grant clearly belong to its individual stockholders, who both in law and in natural justice are entitled to receive the benefit of these assets, subject to any contract, debts and disbursements against the fund as the trust conveyance to Sage in terms provided."

This decision was affirmed upon appeal by the secretary of the interior in his decision under date of Jan. 19, 1894.

In carrying out the purpose of the congressional grant the state serves merely as the instrumentality through which the same is to become operative. The selections of lands are, with the contemplation of the act of congress, to be made by the secretary of the interior. It appears that that officer has certified the lands in question to the state "for the benefit of Russell Sage, trustee of the assets of the Hastings & Dakota Railway company." Such certification implies a prior certificate by the governor of this state to the secretary of the interior of the completion of the said railroad in the manner contemplated by law. It has, therefore, been determined by the federal authorities that the said trustee is now entitled to a conveyance of the lands evidenced by the said deed.

You are therefore advised that there is no reason in law why you should not execute the said deed. I am, very respectfully,

H. W. CHILDS,
Attorney General.

Some of Gen. Pope's Blunders.

Under these conditions, and within the law having no other course to pursue, Gov. Clough attached his signature to Hastings & Dakota Railway Company Deed No. 9. But Deed No. 10, with the certified list thereof, still reposes peacefully in the vault of the state auditor, and until the state legislature directs otherwise, state auditor Dunn will not certify it and Gov. Clough will not execute the deed thereof.

Now, as to Gen. Pope's circular. It will be seen from the foregoing that it he misquotes the title of the bill, Senate File 375. In it he makes no mention of the List No. 9 having been certified by the Democratic state auditor, A. Biermann, on Nov. 3, 1894, nor of the duty of the governor following such certificate. In it he declares that the governor by executing Deed No. 9 destroyed all the beneficial effects of the foregoing bill, when, if Mr. Pope had made the slightest investigation, he could have learned that Deed No. 9 embraced but 5,360 acres of land, and that under its grant the company yet claims 125,188 acres. And Mr. Pope goes on to say that by executing this deed Gov. Clough "nullified the will of the people of the state, and insulted the legislature by returning to them a bill which he knew had been made empty of all results," when, as a matter of fact, Gov. Clough and State Auditor Dunn gave immediate effect to the express will of the legislature, the one by declining to certify, and the other by refusing to execute Deed No. 10.

There is another chapter in this Hastings & Dakota forfeiture matter which Secretary Pope does not dwell upon and that is the subsequent history of the forfeiture act. Gov. Clough, before attaching his signature to the act, submitted the bill, as is customary with all bills, to the attorney general for his opinion on the measure. On April 17, 1895, Attorney General Childs rendered the following opinion:

Holds the Bill Invalid.

State of Minnesota, Attorney General's Office, St. Paul, April 17, 1895.—His Excellency, D. M. Clough, Governor. Sir: Herewith I return Senate File No. 375. The measure is, in my judgment, invalid as seeking in effect to deprive one of his property without due process of law. It is needless to recite the facts so well understood as those pertaining to the organization and dissolution of the Hastings & Dakota Railway company and its grant of public lands. Conceding that it was organized for the purpose of acquiring the congressional grant, which I am disposed to believe is the fact; that it never operated any of the lines of road constructed by it, and that it sold and disposed of the same as soon as constructed, it does not by any means follow that the state may now lawfully exercise the power assumed by the proposed measure. With those concessions made, it is not deniable that congress made a grant of lands to the state for the construction of railways across the territory of the state; that in the granting act the terms and conditions were prescribed whereby the lands might be acquired; that the state became merely an instrumentality for conveying the lands to the roads earning the same; that the said company constructed a road presumably in compliance with law because so certified to by the respective governors of that state; that the company had under the law of this state three years in which to dispose of its property subsequent to its dissolution, in which time it assumed to convey all of its rights in and to the said grant to Russell Sage, as trustee, for the use and benefit of its stockholders; that this conveyance has been declared by the courts a valid transfer of those rights to the said trustee; and furthermore, it may be noted that it was distinctly held by the supreme court of this state that the lands of the said company were not affected by the judgment of dissolution, but that they were in truth and fact subject to disposal during the statutory period of three years.

Whatever may be said of the improvidence of congress in bestowing the grant, it is not within the power of the legislature to provide corrective measures of the character indicated by the proposed measure. Whatever lands, if any, now exist available for completing the quota enuring to the defunct company, belong in equity to the cestui que trustent of Russell Sage. The bill seeks to divest them of property rights thus acquired, and in my judgment is therefore invalid.

Whether, in view of the importance of the question involved and the large number of the legislature who evidently share the opposite view, you deem it proper to approve the measure and leave conflicting interests to adjudicate their rights in court, will, of course, be determined by yourself. I am, very respectfully,

—H. W. Childs,
Attorney General.

Rejects the Relinquishment.

Notwithstanding the unfavorable opinion of the attorney general as to the validity of the act, Gov. Clough gave effect to the intention of the legislature and attached his signature to the bill, which became a law on April 18, 1895. And, in compliance with the provision of the act directing him to execute a deed of relinquishment to the United States of the Hastings & Dakota lands, on May 8, 1895, he did execute such a deed of relinquishment and forwarded the same to the secretary of the interior, but the secretary of the interior appeared to agree with Attorney General Childs and absolutely declined to accept the relinquishment of these lands from this state, holding the state to be simply a trustee as between the United States and the grantee. In thus rejecting the intended relinquishment, Secretary Hoke Smith, a gentleman of the same political persuasion as Gen. Pope, says after reviewing the question:

"The question now to be considered is whether the State of Minnesota can defeat the grant made by congress to aid in the construction of the Hastings & Dakota railroad, by an act of its legislature, intending to act as a forfeiture, and by the relinquishment of these lands by the governor of the state to the United States. Clearly, on principle and authority, I think not. These lands were certified to the state in trust for the company; the state accepted them as trustee of an express trust; it is not denied that the lands were earned by the company; this department and the courts have decided the company to be entitled to the lands earned before the forfeiture of its charter, and that the trustee of the company is authorized and is the proper person to receive them. The aforesaid relinquishment of the State of Minnesota is rejected. Very respectfully,

—"Hoke Smith, Secretary."

This is as the matter stands to-day, and it will remain for the next legislature, if it sees fit, to take action in the matter. The executive officers of the state have used their utmost endeavors to give effect to the will and intention of the legislature, as expressed in Senate File 375. The attorney general says the bill is ineffectual, and Secretary Hoke Smith declares that the legislature cannot relinquish lands granted to a grantee by congress. There the matter stands.

And at what price will this ultimate result be gained in the case of Mr. Bryan's election? At the price of the most violent and destructive crisis on record, such a crisis as can only be brought on by a sudden subversion of the standard of values and of the whole basis of credit. At the price of indefinite business paralysis and distress. At the price of the ruthless spoliation of the savings accumulated by the toiling masses. At the price of robbing our war veterans of half the value of their pensions. At the price of greatly increasing the number of unemployed by discouraging enterprise, and of curtailing the value of the wages of those remaining at work. At the price of the respect of the world for our intelligence and practical sense. And worse, far worse than all this, at the price of something that has never been forfeited since this republic was born—at the price of the greatest good a nation can possess and for the preservation of which it should shed its last drop of blood—at the price of our national honor. For this nation, so rich and powerful, would stand before the world as a wanton, reckless repudiator, as nothing better than a fraudulent bankrupt. This will be the cost of the experiment. Are you willing to pay this price?—Carl Schurz in Chicago.

Seesaw Money.

The Mexican dollar wabbles with silver. The United States dollar stands solid by gold. Measured in gold and maintained at a parity with gold, its value remains. Within three years the Mexican dollar has been as high as 70 cents, and it has been as low as 48 cents. Its value rises and falls with the demand for silver, and this varies with the trade in silk and the trade in tea, with the exchange on India and the payment of war indemnities by China and Japan, and all the world of trade and speculation. Within the year it has been as high as 60 cents, and has dropped to its present price.

This is the kind of seesaw money the United States is asked to adopt. Up and down. Now high and now low. Never good as a gold dollar, and never maintaining any certain ratio with it. Labor receives in this country in wages in a year $2,000,000,000. If these wages had been paid in silver this year the loss in the price of silver in the past six months would have cut the value of these wages down by [illegible],000,000, a tax on labor one-fifth as large as that of the cost of the federal government for a year.—Philadelphia Press.

Eureka Chemical & Mfg. Co., La Crosse, Wis.—Gentlemen: For forty years I used tobacco in all its forms. For twenty-five years of that time I was a great sufferer from general debility and heart disease. For fifteen years I tried to quit, but couldn't. I took various remedies, among others "No-To-Bac," "The Indian Tobacco Antidote," "Double Chloride of Gold," etc., etc., but none of them did me the least bit of good. Finally, however, I purchased a box of your "Baco-Curo" and it has entirely cured me of the habit in all its forms, and I have increased thirty pounds in weight and am relieved from all the numerous aches and pains of body and mind. I could write a quire of paper upon my changed feelings and condition.

It is thought that if the rising wind may drive the fires into Yellowstone Mount, Moses' bottom brigades went out to the suburbs from the Superior and Superior farm buildings. The railroad town of Itasca, within the city limits, is in danger, and Bass Brook people are commencing to fear for their own safety. It is reported that a bridge has been set afire on the South Shore railroad near Nebagamon, but no definite information can be obtained.

At South Superior the flames have swept through the forest to the Dugler Wind Mill company, and dwelling houses are threatened. Men have been at work for days in an effort to save the Kellogg weir out and the city fire engines and hose. The weir is a dam that cars ready to proceed to the most dangerous point. Unless it does until spring, it is hardly safe to turn up the soil much before the end of the period of previous plowing—four to six inches.

Learning From the Chinese.

The instinct of the plain people has been right in not calling our Oriental visitor "Lee," for, acting out his name as popularly pronounced, this wily diplomat has, in Eastern fashion, and I have always believed in the old adage as to "doing to worth doing at all is worth doing well."

A Wedding Hint.

We have all admired the craft of the Indian lover who takes the precaution to bell his pony before starting on his honeymoon trip, says the Season. Why, then, in the name of common sense, cannot we save ourselves pain and affliction and considerable risk by decoiling to bell the rice before allowing it to be showered after us on our nuptial day? It goes down the back of the collar and rages there the whole afternoon, sticks in the brims of hats and makes us a laughing-stock from morn till night. If something gets into the horses' eyes, maddens them and kicks the carriage and ancients. Now, bellet rice would be quite harmless, because London would be opposed and at worst we might start on our travels with only a few puppy dumplings in our laps and a flake or two at our necks. The hint is worth accepting. If honeymooning felicity is to be preserved.

Fall Plowing for Sugar Beets.

Nebraska Experiment Station, which has done much to promote this industry, has published a special bulletin, explaining how and why preparation of the land for sugar beets should begin in the fall. The sooner the stubble and weeds are plowed under, if only to a depth of three inches, the better, followed by a spike harrow to make a loose layer of soil on top to prevent evaporation. It has been shown that land so prepared lost only one-third as much water by evaporation as land having a firmly packed surface. Unless the land is very rich, spread well-rotted manure after the shallow plowing, which will add to the yield and probably something to the sugar content. Subsoil and surface plowing are best, but if that cannot be done, plow as deeply as possible. The extreme dryness of the air and soil in most sections where sugar beets are grown, makes it important that manures should be well rotted. If the beets are to follow corn, clear off the stalks and harrow thoroughly. In the fall the plow can be run twelve or fifteen inches deep, but if it does not until spring, it is hardly safe to turn up the soil much below the average depth of previous plowing—four to six inches.

A MATTER OF SKILL.

By BEATRICE WHITBY.

"Ask the gentleman to step here a moment," said the policeman, addressing Bill.

"I must get out," Helen said, desperately. "I have to change trains here; I cannot wait."

"We must settle this matter before you go, miss."

"Then we must settle it outside on the platform. I cannot stay here."

As she spoke, Bill, accompanied by the gentleman, reached the door, which stood open. This Mr. Albert Jones was of prepossessing appearance. He was a handsome, prosperous, genial young man. His easy temper was seldom ruffled; indeed, a less contented man than he could have found little to grumble at in his smooth and golden path. But just now he looked hot and irritated, and he spoke angrily.

"What on earth is all this about, Smithers? Why on earth will you travel third when I pay for your second-class ticket? You are so infernally economical that you deserve to be locked up!" Then catching sight of Helen's figure from behind the policeman, whither she had withdrawn on his approach, he went on with charitable interest and some condescension: "If that is the person who fancies that Smithers has got her purse, I can assure her that she's mistaken. Smithers doesn't rob me, so I am sure he would not rob her. But if she can't get home without a ticket, I hope she will allow me to provide her with any money she may want."

This open-handed generosity, this convenient suggestion should surely have been received with gratitude and thanks; but exasperated, robbed, proud Helen chose to be offended. With the mien of an affronted princess she pushed her way past the policeman and answered this overbearing gentleman with extraordinary dignity and coldness.

"I did not think that your man had stolen my things. I knew he had not. And I do not want anything but to be allowed to leave the carriage. Would you kindly let me pass?"

CHAPTER II.

Miss Mitford's voice, face and manner were so unexpected as to be a little startling. But the young man instantly stood aside and raised his hat with an ingratiating smile. He smiled, not because he found her manner amusing, but because it was his habit to smile where women were concerned. They were always so very gracious to him that he had never yet found occasion to frown in their company. He half-offered his hand to help her to alight from the carriage, but he was just a moment too late, as she was already on the platform.

She found that the train to Noelcombe was behind its time; it would not be in for half an hour. During the earlier part of that interval, Smithers, who was now exonerated from suspicion, and Helen formed the nucleus of a group consisting of several officials, the policeman and Smithers' master, who, to that young person's annoyance, had entered with officious interest into the discussion concerning her loss. He was a young man of some energy, and energy to those who live idle lives, is a superfluous possession of which they are glad to find opportunity to rid themselves. Besides which, Miss Mitford was an unusually pretty girl and in distress. So he took the investigation of the affair into his own hands, directed every measure which was adopted for the recovery of the property, asked a hundred questions, and showed some talent for the detective trade.

The cross-examination to which she was compelled to submit was not the least unpleasant part of the unfortunate day. At length the subject, exhaustive as it proved, was brought to an abrupt conclusion by the arrival of the Plymouth Zulu. Helen withdrew to the ladies' waiting room, where she sat sulking in the stifling heat of the crowded room. She was cross, hot, tired, but she was glad to escape from her undesirable notoriety, and still more glad to be quit of the persistent gaze and searching interrogations from that complacent son of the low-born, purse-proud Sir Adolphus Jones, whose condescending attentions were intolerable.

Beggars cannot be choosers, and it is generally understood that they should be very grateful for any favor, however small, which is thrust upon them. Indeed, Helen was glad—truly thankful—to be spared the discomfort necessarily attending a journey which was to be performed without tickets, money or companion.

Beneath an armor of pride which counterfeited self-reliance, Helen concealed a courage no stouter and nerves no tougher than those owned by her gentle sisters; her braveness and her composure were but skin-deep. When a porter came into the waiting room and told her that the train in which she was to travel was due, and when she found her self-elected conductor awaiting her at the door, she was glad of his protection.

"The train won't be in for ten minutes," he said, at once. "I hope you don't mind me having sent for you, but I thought you would like a cup of tea or something before you go."

Could anything be kinder or more considerate? The very words, "a cup of tea," are refreshing to the female sex. Helen's head ached, and she realized that she was extremely thirsty; she imagined the comfort of a cup of tea, and yet she preferred her thirst and her weariness to accepting another favor at the hands of this stranger.

He was looking at her intently, rather more intently than he would have looked, perhaps, had he found her in less humbler circumstances. He had decided that she was governess—a young, much-to-be-pitied dependent, on her way to her work, where she would waste her beauty in a dull school-room among lesson books and naughty children. He was intensely compassionate over her fate. Unfortunately, she was slightly uncouth and abrupt, but no doubt she was shy and a little overwhelmed by the interest he had shown in her misfortunes.

Mr. Jones, young, good-looking, popular among his fellow men, and heir to a prodigious income, was not likely to be humble nor blind to his own advantages. The kind maidens, and their still kinder mothers, with whom he came in contact at every stage of his life, had flattered and cajoled him into the belief that his personal attractions were irresistible.

He would like to see her smile; her smile ought to be very sweet; there was a suspicion of a dimple indenting her pale cheek. How white, how travel-soiled, how grave she looked! He was so sorry for her. But her conduct was disappointing; for she, with frigid politeness, refused his offer of tea, and turned to re-enter the ladies' waiting room.

"Why not wait here?" he inquired earnestly.

"I should like to rest until the train is in," with what he called her unfortunate governess manner.

"You can rest out here," pointing to an adjacent bench; "there is more air out here. It is much better for you than being stifled among all those women. Do come, you are looking so awfully done up, and I will bring you a cup of tea down here."

But the waiting room door had closed behind her before his sentence was ended. It was evident that she was very gauche, but it was also evident to her observant and good-natured companion that she was tired out; he was convinced that she had refused his offer from some other motive than disinclination for the proffered refreshment.

"It is an awful thing for a shy girl to accept anything from a strange fellow," he reflected. "I was clumsy; I must manage it better. She shall have her tea, I swear, for I know she is dying for it," and he walked off to the refreshment room.

A few minutes later a maid, accompanied by Smithers, and carrying tea, cake, biscuits and a plate filled with white-heart cherries, entered the ladies' waiting room. There, at Smither's direction, the tray was placed on the table by Helen's side, with the words:

"The gentleman desired me to bring these, ma'am."

The retreating figure showed no consciousness of Helen's quick disclaimer.

"It is a mistake. I ordered nothing—I want nothing."

That tea and those seductive cherries stood untasted at this foolish girl's elbow. She looked at them wistfully, but she touched them not. When her train came into the station she felt that she was turning her back on a terrible temptation, as she bustled out upon the crowded platform, where she was immediately joined by Mr. Jones.

"This way, if you please. I've got you a carriage. My man will see to your luggage; it is with mine."

And he hustled her on till they had reached an empty compartment, the door of which was held open by Smithers.

"I am traveling third," she said, glancing within the carriage. "This is first."

"The man—the who-do-you-call-it at the ticket office" stamering over the prevarication, "gave me a first-class ticket for you."

As indeed he had done, and had paid for it, too.

"Thank you, but I like third best; it—it is coolest."

"As you please." The girl was less shy than disagreeable, after all. "I am going in there," indicating the smoking carriage next door, "so you would get this place yourself. The rest of the train is very much crowded."

Helen hesitated. She believed that the white ticket which she held had been provided by the generosity of the railway company; she also believed that by a fortunate coincidence—not by bribery and corruption—the selected compartment happened to be empty—the only empty compartment in the full train.

Smithers, with respectful mien, patiently held the door open. "Take your seats!" shouted a porter at her elbow. An eager crowd of excited excursionists surged past; a drunken man staggered close to her. Mr. Jones said nothing, but preserved an indifferent air. The drunken man settled the question. Helen shrunk away in disgust from him, and saying, "I really think I will go in here," entered the carriage precipitately, and with some loss of dignity.

"There was an excursion to Exeter from Barnstaple to-day," Mr. Jones explained. "They go back by this train. We shall get rid of the crowd there."

He was standing on the platform, still with his hand on the sill of the open window. He was thinking that it would have been pleasanter to travel with this handsome girl than to smoke next door. He was in search of an excuse to change his mind and join her. Miss Mitford, with a calm and unapproachable mien, returned his steady gaze. An excuse was not easy to find, but just before the train started he gave her an inkling of his intentions by his last words:

"You will find some papers in there if you care to look at them. I shall see you again at Barnstaple; I shall have done my smoke by that time. Au revoir!"

"He means to travel with me from Barnstaple to Noelcombe," Helen concluded, closing her lips tight and not looking amiable.

That is precisely what he had meant and what he also proceeded to do.

At Barnstaple he entered the carriage as though it was a matter of course that he should do so, and, taking the seat opposite to its occupant, he said:

"I hope you don't mind my coming in here? There was such a lot of men in the other carriage that they smoked me out."

She made some inarticulate sound which suggested her indifference to his movements.

A pile of illustrated papers lay where he had placed them, beside her on the seat. He pointed at them and asked whether she had been reading.

"It is too hot to read," she said.

"Perhaps you are one of those people who can never read in a train."

"I read sometimes."

"It makes your head ache, perhaps."

"Yes, it does."

"Does it make your head ache to look at pictures."

"No." After a moment's pause she added: "But talking makes my head ache."

"I'm sorry; that is particularly unfortunate, for I have a question or two which I really must ask you. You see, I ought to have a full description of your watch and purse, a minute account of your fellow travelers—every particular, in fact, of the circumstances to send up to headquarters as soon as possible. I am sorry to trouble you; but I want it down in black and white; it would not do to trust my memory in any important business."

He drew out a book—it might have been a note book—and pencil from his breast pocket, and began in a business-like way to question Helen and write down her answers. She was impressed by his manner and set at ease by this explanation of his intrusion.

"Your name?"

"Helen Mitford."

"You came from Meriton, you said—started about 2:30? How far do you live from the station?"

"Two miles."

He entered this important item carefully.

"Meriton is a pretty village," he remarked. "I have often passed through it on my way to Dromore."

Helen started and looked at him.

"You know Dromore?" he pursued.

"Yes."

"The Chilterns are awfully nice people."

Lady Chiltern was Helen's cousin and most intimate friend; but she had grown frigid again, for what had the Chilterns to do with the note book or the theft?

"Would you kindly describe your fellow travelers?" he proceeded, with solemnity, his pencil poised in the air and his dark eyes watching her expressive face.

"A thin, middle-aged man—I thought he was a dissenting minister—sat next to me. There was a woman—a smart woman with feathers and dirty hands—opposite to me. The other people were men; I hardly looked at them. I could not recognize either of them."

"Poor men!" murmured the gentleman, writing in his book.

This superfluity of the dialogue was a mistake on his part. A delicate color rose to Helen's cheek; she averted her eyes, and her attentions from her vis-a-vis and fixed them on the landscape. The scenery through which they were passing was magnificent. Great hills, topped with rugged boulders of gray granite, clothed with short turf on which droves of horned sheep were browsing, streaked and belted with woods of oak and ash, rose almost perpendicularly from out the smiling valleys.

Mr. Jones was not wanting in penetration. He replaced his notebook with a smile at his own expense, for he soon saw that his companion's attention was absorbed by the scenery at which she was gazing with rapture in her eyes, a pleasant smile rippling her mouth, and that she had forgotten him.

He was an admirer of fine scenery himself—woods, as coverts, and mountain streams as harbors for trout, were always particularly interesting to him; but while Miss Mitford looked out of the window, he looked at her, not the landscape. They were approaching Noelcombe, where they must separate, and he had made no way with her. If he allowed her to leave him thus, it was probable that he should see her no more; therefore it was that he must draw her attention to himself once more. Hitherto he had found, with her amiable sex, such a task wonderfully easy.

He began again, with pencil and notebook, his examination and cross-examinations on the yell-worn topic. This was, of course, a little tiresome, but Helen answered with great precision and accuracy, and with her eyes on the window.

"Oh, look!" she suddenly cried, with a deep-drawn breath of happiness, pointing through the open window; "there is the sea!"

EFFECT OF MUZZLES.

Their Enforced Use Has Changed the Breed of London Dogs.

The muzzling order has now been so long in operation that one is able to see its practical results, at all events, as far as London is concerned. They are really very remarkable, especially from a point of view not likely to be immediately taken.

The supremacy of the fox terrier is gone. One misses the little vivid white spots that moved about so quickly and made streets and thoroughfares gay, and, it must be admitted, noisy. Most of these dogs were mongrels, and, being of no appreciable value, and probably of no clearly-defined ownership, they passed quickly, in a wholesale way, into the lethal chambers. London is rid of them, but at all our towns, the white terrier, with the odd markings, is still in the ascendant.

On the other hand, here in town, we have the Irish and the Scotch. These are, as yet, pretty pure; they keep to themselves, after the manner of the provincials, but in a couple of years mongrelism will assert itself, and London will be overrun. As it is, the hardy little Aberdeen, with his long body, short legs and nondescript markings of black, and gray, and mustard, holds the street, and the Irish terrier loafs about, social and easy-going.

They are both excellent in their own way; but, for all that, one misses the sharp, quick vitality of the fox terrier. Even as a mongrel, he seemed to concentrate in his active little body all doggy qualities, especially fidelity and hatred of cats.—London News.

WHERE TELEGRAPHY FAILED.

A Former Member of Parliament Who Was Skeptical to the Last.

There was a man who lived in London many years ago who had once been elected member of parliament, and never neglected an opportunity to emphasize the fact. He was quite an infidel as to new discoveries and new sciences, being perfectly satisfied that if the world should turn over all the water would spill out of his well, and only giving in to steam locomotives by slow degrees.

But all the vials of his contempt were poured out upon the idea of a telegraph; and he was wont to say that nobody need try to come "the green" over him in that way, for he had been an M. P. Finally a high road was built, and one day workmen began to put up telegraph poles right in front of his house, and to stretch the wire. His exultant neighbors promptly asked the question:

"Well, old fellow, what do you think of telegraphs now?"

He was cornered, but died game. Drawing himself up an inch taller, he said:

"Gentlemen, when I was in parliament I gave this subject my very attentive consideration, and I said then, as I say now, that it may do for letters and small bundles, but it never will take a cotton bale—never!"—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Don't Wet a Lead Pencil.

The practice of wetting a lead pencil on the tongue before using it is an unclean habit, to say the least, and perhaps also a dangerous one.

A woman of fine bearing and elegantly dressed stepped into the counting room of one of the local papers a few days ago to insert an advertisement. Having no pencil of her own, she picked up a pencil which was tied with a string to a pad used for writing. At once she moistened the lead with her tongue and began to write.

An elderly woman who was standing by reminded her that the pencil had just been used by an old man, ragged and dirty, greasy and filthy, who also had contracted the same habit of wetting the pencil on his tongue every time he wrote a word. The disgusted woman flung the pencil away and scolded the young man behind the counter until he sharpened a brand new pencil for her use and benefit.

The habit is a foolish one. Instead of making the pencil write more freely and easily it hardens it and makes it write blurred and irregular.

Newspaper men and those who use lead pencils a great deal never dampen the lead in the mouth or with a sponge. Besides being injurious to the lead, it is a dangerous habit, inasmuch as disease has been known to be conveyed in that way into the system.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Bicycle Saddle.

When pneumatic saddles were introduced, a year or two ago, their sanguine supporters believed they would become universal; but to-day we do not see very many of them in use. There are several objections to the pneumatic principle when used as a saddle or seat for bicyclists, the chief one being that the air becomes heated, expands and makes the saddle uncomfortable. There is still a great deal to be done in improving this portion of the bicycle, and although a number of so-called "hygienic" saddles have been introduced, we are yet far from having found an ideal seat.

Even the "Christy," with the broad seat, acknowledged to be the most hygienic form of the article, is not comfortable for all women. It is so rigid and inflexible that the inevitable jar causes much suffering after the ride is over. It may be the "best we know," and doubtless is, but a fortune awaits the inventor who shall combine the Christy advantages with a substitute for its disadvantages.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Why He Talked to Himself.

There is an Irish porter employed in a large commission house in New York, one of the kind that will make a witty reply to any sort of question. He is very fond of expressing his views in general, and has great admiration of his arguments. If he fails to get a listener he will talk to himself in lieu of something better. A member of the firm, being annoyed one day at his constant muttering, which he was unfortunate enough to hear, sent for him.

"See here, John, did it ever occur to you that your constant talk and muttering is a great annoyance to people that happen to be around? Why on earth do you chatter away to yourself, anyhow?"

"Shure, I have two reasons fer doin' that."

"Two reasons! Well, what are they?"

"One of them is that I loike ter talk to a sinsible man, and the other is that I loike ter hear a sinsible man talk."—Harper's Round Table.

Club Houses in a Hotel.

The new Astor hotel adjoining the Waldorf is to have its entire fifteenth story set aside for clubs and club members. Alterations in the original plans of the building have just been decided upon, which will make this an ideal home for many of the small social organizations that now have some difficulty, owing to their limited membership, in bearing the expense of an entire club house. The clubs to which rooms are rented will be exclusively of the best class socially, so that the feature of using a common dining room will not be open to objection on the part of any of the organizations.—New York Letter.

The Logic Was Good.

"Can any of you tell me why Lazarus was a beggar?" asked the female teacher in a west side Sunday school. "Why was Lazarus a beggar?" she repeated sternly.

"Please, ma'am," replied a small boy, whose father was a merchant, "because he didn't advertise."—Buffalo Times.

AGRICULTURE

WHEAT ON STUBBLE.

Farmers Disapprove of the Plan of Replowing After Corn.

The Practical Farmer in a recent issue had a symposium of the views of farmers over a large section of the state on this question: "In preparing corn land for wheat, whether it is best to replow or not, and will the same treatment be applicable to oats stubble?" Over twenty farmers gave their views on this question, and the great majority of them disapproved of the plan of replowing after corn, although a few preferred it. In our boyhood days it was always the custom to plow the ground in the fall, after the corn had been cut preparatory to sowing wheat, but we never expected to secure as good a crop in this way as on land that had been thoroughly prepared previously. We did not suspect the reason then, but it seems quite clear to us now. After working all summer long, in the cultivation of the corn, to prepare an ideal seed bed for winter wheat, solid at the bottom, loose, but not too fine at the top, it was simply foolish to undo all our work by plowing that ground. We are convinced now, that had the corn been cut off low, and the drill used, we would have secured a great deal better crop of wheat.

With regard to oats stubble the case is not so clear. The stubble is in the way, and besides, there is plenty of time, when a farmer wills it, to plow his oats stubble, and harrow and roll it until he can secure an ideal seed bed. We once more call the attention of our readers to the fact that there is no time to be lost now in starting in to prepare the ground for winter wheat. We would burn off the stubble, where it will burn, so as to get rid of insects, kill the weeds that may be starting, etc. Plow the ground a reasonable depth, and then harrow at once, and each week until about the middle of September, which is early enough in this latitude to sow winter wheat. We would then use a press drill, where one can be had, and where this cannot be had, would use the best drill that we could obtain.

It was for a long time believed that winter wheat could not prove successful in Iowa. This is now shown to be a mistake, as winter wheat for a number of years has proved a better crop than spring wheat, and we see no reason why it cannot be grown in any part of the state on lands that have been subject to a clover rotation. We would not care to try it except in an experimental way on other lands. To be successful, however, the seed bed must be thoroughly prepared, and it cannot be prepared on land that has been plowed, unless the plowing is done early, and the harrowing has been frequent, so as to secure the kind of seed bed that winter wheat invariably demands. It may be said that wheat is too low in price to justify its cultivation. Wheat is now as high as almost any other grain, and in fact proportionately higher.—Wallace's Farmer.

A Homemade Heater.

The heater is made of galvanized sheet iron, is 5 feet long and 10 inches in diameter. The pipe at the left for carrying off the smoke is 5 inches in diameter—ordinary stove pipe; its height will be governed by the depth of the tank. The pipe at the right is slanting, 7 inches in diameter, and is provided with a cap for covering the opening. Through this the fuel is put. The cap must contain two holes which will permit of a proper draft. At night, fill the water tank, and the last thing before going to bed put the fire and the fuel in the heater. In spring, remove it from the tank and store in some dry place. If properly taken care of, so that it will not rust, it will last for several years. Any kind of fuel can be used, and it is surprising how little it takes. For removing the ashes, an old dipper is just the thing. The original, from which a drawing was made and is reproduced above, cost $3.75.

ing ground for a thousand and one odds and ends, resulting in a heap inextricably confused. The accompanying illustration shows a way of utilizing this space that will add to stable conveniences. The space is boarded up and that portion having the greatest height is made into a harness closet, while the rest is made a grain bin, with one or more compartments. To reach the bottom of the bin when the grain is low, a part of the front is hinged so as to turn down.

Early Blight in Potatoes.

A press bulletin by Prof. L. H. Pammel, bearing the above title, has just been issued by the Iowa Experiment Station, the publication being induced by reports from the Iowa Weather and Crop Service to the effect that "Early Blight" is reported to be quite prevalent in Iowa this season, and has been on the increase for a number of years. Prof. Pammel says that while it has been to some extent confused with "Potato Rot" or "Late Blight" it is entirely distinct from it, the "Late Blight" not having been known, so far as he is aware, in Iowa, and of the many specimens received by him both early and late in the season, all prove to be "Early Blight." The description of the disease is as follows:

The disease makes its appearance in early July and continues until the potato plant dies. The affected leaves show circular spots, several of them frequently coalesce. The spots are usually found near one margin of the leaf. When great areas are involved, the leaf begins to dry and the edges to roll up as though scorched. Soon the whole leaf has a shriveled appearance. A closer examination of these spots will reveal small brown masses which consist of numerous spores or reproductive bodies. The tubers are always small. In some cases numerous small holes are found—the work of the green leaf flea-beetle. It may be responsible for some of the trouble and may help the fungus to get an entrance, but in most cases the fungus works independently of this insect.

As a means of prevention Prof. Pammel suggests treatment of the potatoes in the field and thorough cultivation. At or just before the blooming period an application of Bordeaux mixture is advised, followed by at least two subsequent applications ten days apart. The formula for Bordeaux mixture is as follows: Six pounds of copper sulphate, four pounds of lime, twenty-two gallons of water. Dissolve the copper in one gallon of hot water, slack the lime and then mix the two.

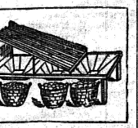
Preparing Broom Corn.

The following from a commission firm of Chicago gives growers of broom corn some useful hints in regard to putting up their corn for the market:

The corn should be well seeded and at the same time the growers should avoid scraping the fine fibres from the tips. Let the corn thoroughly cure before baling and butt it down well before laying it in the press. This will make nice smooth ends and give the bales a good appearance. Corn is frequently received with the bales broken in two when the corn is short. In order to avoid this, when laying the short corn in the press there should be layers put in the center of the bales for binders to hold the corn together and this will make good solid bales. Care should be taken not to put rubbish or scrapings from the cylinder in the center of the bales as this is worthless and a total loss to broom makers. There are always a few who resort to this practice and it is injuring the reputation of all the western growers. We do not see why the western farmers should not realize as good prices for their corn as the Illinois farmers, providing the brush is well handled and of as good quality. The last few years the quality of their corn has not been up to the standard, but we trust that this year they will have a fine quality of brush, which will bring the West to the front again.

Potato Assorting Device.

The device shown below for assorting potatoes is made by constructing a box 12 feet long and 4 feet wide, with three partitions. The back piece is about 4 feet high, the next 3, and the third 1½ feet. Nail pickets on for screens, put them rather closely together on the first incline, and further apart on the second. This separates into three grades.



Potato Assorter.

Shovel them on the slide above the first incline and push down slowly and the assorting is accomplished.

Maintaining Fertility.

The following is an extract from a recent bulletin issued by the Ohio experiment station: As between manure and comercial fertilizers, the latter gave the largest yield the first year, but the manure showed its effects for several years after all benefit from the chemicals had disappeared. At Rothamsted, England, commercial fertilizer, heavily applied, gave an increased crop for the next nineteen years, the total increase being sixty-six bushels over an adjoining plat of the same size which received no fertilizer at the beginning. At the same place, a plat heavily dressed with barn manure has shown an increased yield for twenty-three years, though no fertilizer has been applied since, the total increase being 341 bushels, and the last crop being double that of the plat which received no fertilizer at the beginning.

Grain grown continuously on the same land will recover only about one-third of the fertilizer applied; but if crops are grown in rotation, including grain, roots, and clover, all of the fertilizer will be recovered.

Dissolved bone-black was no more effective than phosphoric acid; but nitrate of soda was more soluble and more readily taken up by growing crops than linseed meal, cottonseed meal, or dried blood.

Suburban Gardening.

A great deal of improvement is quite possible, says Wisconsin Farmer, in the vicinity of our cities and towns. Rapid transit by the bicycle and the electric motor leaves many morning and evening hours for healthy recreation to suburban residents and much leisure to the unemployed members of families that can be utilized on the home lot to rescue it from the waste of weeds and transform it into the healthful garden of flowers, vegetables and fruits. The line of work chosen should of course be determined by locality, personal taste, etc. Remarkable progress has been made by skilled seedsmen and florists in the production of high grade plants and seeds, and only a small outlay is required, if intelligent culture and a division of plants between neighbors is pursued, to render possible the beautifying of the home lot to a very high degree. In many Eastern villages and suburban districts this work is now taken hold of by village improvement societies, the whole community uniting in helpful ways for the improvement and beautifying of the village and the home. It is certainly praiseworthy work and opens a wide field for improvement.

Theory as a Foundation.

It is true that there is a great deal of levity indulged in when speaking about book and paper farmers, but what is the lawyer, until he builds a practical knowledge on the foundation which he receives in the law schools? The physician is only theoretical when he begins practice, but he has a scientific foundation upon which to build his future life and prospects. Should not the farmer have the same foundation?

Where can it be better acquired than there? Here is a man who never attended an agricultural college, yet he is a practical farmer; but it has required 40 or 50 years of his life to attain the knowledge he possesses, and every other farmer is pursuing the same course, each independent of the other. It was a waste of energy, a waste of time, and if those men, knowing what they do to-day, could have started out in early life with all that knowledge, and had that foundation to start with, they would have succeeded better.—L. J. Worst.

Farm Notes.

Sufficient mulch to keep the surface shaded increases the fertility of land.

Keep the cattle off the clover while the frost is on it.

Carefully save and keep dry the ashes from burnt corn; they will fertilize the garden finely.

Save the seed corn now, and hang it where it will get thoroughly dry before hard freezing weather.

Some farmers practice fall seeding of timothy, but the better practice with sowing timothy and clover is that of sowing in early spring without the aid of any nurse crop.

Winter wheat growers should recollect that the Hessian fly does its first work on the early sown wheat in the fall. The eggs that hatch out and appear next spring are laid in the early sown fall wheat. The fly will do little damage to the wheat sown the latter part of September or fore part of October. If there is no apparent danger of the fly, the middle of September, all other things being equal, says an exchange, is the proper time to do the sowing.

Sheep and Ensilage.

It has been found that ensilage is good for sheep when not too sour or moldy. A writer says it will be desirable, however, to feed some dry food, and that half of the corn should be siloed and half of it well cured dry. Make the silo perfectly air-tight, by double boarding and tarred paper between each wall. The air space need not be more than six inches. The bottom of the silo must be cemented perfectly tight, covering the sills inside and the whole floor. Of course this does not admit of any way of drainage, which will be unnecessary, unless the silo is filled with actually wet fodder. There will be no drainage from corn cut when the ears are glazed as the rule is in ordinary harvesting of this crop. The inside of the silo should be well painted with hot tar.

FIGHT WITH A CATAMOUNT.

A Californian's Desperate Encounter.

In the old Spanish town of San Juan Capistano, near San Diego, Cal., lives Gus Wangenheim, a man who loves gunning for all sorts of game. The other day he went out to hunt doves and rabbits on the hills back of the old mission of San Juan. Dove hunting is pretty mild pastime compared with what was in store for Mr. Wangenheim. He was tramping along a cattle path and had just fired and missed a jack, which bounded through an opening ahead, when he heard a noise back of him. Turning, he found himself face to face with a huge wildcat. The brute had been following him, attracted, no doubt, by the scent of blood from the game in his pouch.

One barrel of his gun was empty, the charge having been wasted on the rabbit, but Wangenheim coolly proceeded to empty the remaining load in his gun into the hide of the wildcat. The cat had turned partly, and the charge of light shot struck it squarely in the side and the brute tumbled over in its tracks. Mr. Wangenheim was surprised at the effect of his shot, for he had hardly expected to kill the cat with one charge.

Dropping his gun in the path the hunter ran to where his unexpected prize lay and grabbed it by the hind leg. Just at this moment he realized that he had made a serious mistake. The cat was not dead. However, the hunter had no time to correct the mistake; not even time enough to drop the hold he had on the leg, before the brute, recovering from its stunned condition, and, enraged to fury by the wounds in its side, attacked him viciously.

He realized that it meant a fight to a finish, and with the first shock of surprise over, his courage came to him. He is a powerful man, and he had use for all his strength now. Over and over the two rolled in the path and out into the chaparal and underbrush. Hugging the long, lithe body close to him, the hunter struggled and squirmed like a catch-as-catch-can wrestler would to get the better hold, all the time feeling the sharp claws digging into his flesh, while his clothes were torn to shreds and blood covered his body.

There was but once chance for him, and that was to choke the brute to death. At last he braced himself for a supreme effort, and closing his fingers with all his strength around the throat of his adversary he bore the body to the ground and threw his whole weight upon it.

The dying struggles of the brute were terrific, and again and again the man thought he must lost his clutch upon the sinewy neck, but a desperate courage came to him and he held on. The struggle lasted perhaps half an hour. Then the man felt a convulsive shudder pass through the massive frame of the cat, and after that it was still.

STORIES OF NANSEN'S CREW.

Polar Bears Too Familiar When the Fram Was Frozen In.

As is only natural, all the people of Tromso take the liveliest interest in the Nansen expedition, more especially as three men of the ship's complement, viz., Pilot Jakobsen and two sailors, belong to this port. So any of the Fram's men who happens to be about is always surrounded by a knot of eager listeners, to whom he has to recount his adventures, often illustrating his meaning by a rough sketch with a piece of chalk or a pencil. The men are all good-natured fellows, and seem willing enough to talk, and many is the excited discussion as to whether the Fram should have entered the ice north or south of the New Siberian islands, and so forth. Here are some of the yarns which have delighted the Tromso people:

In the perpetual darkness of winter, in the desolate polar regions, we could hardly see our hands before our faces. One night, when the whole ship's company were snug below, we suddenly heard the dogs barking most furiously. It was Ship Carpenter Mogstad's watch, so he went up on deck to see if anything unusual was going on, but as he could see nothing, he went down below again, concluding that the dogs were just barking for the sake of barking, as is their wont. However, the noise was repeated at intervals, so he went up on deck again, and, taking a lantern, saw that several of the animals had disappeared, and that some others were overboard on the ice. Mogstad called out for Henriksen, and they both let themselves down on to the ice from the deck of the ship, which at the time was high above the ice surface. They walked off a little distance from the ship, to see if they could find any tracks.

As they were searching about, with no more formidable weapon than a small lantern between them, all at once a polar bear sprang up before them. Then there was a race between the three—the men and the bear—to the ship. Mogstad, a bit more light-footed than his mate, reached the Fram first, but fell down twice on to the ice as he was climbing up her side. At the second fall he could not help muttering to himself, "Now the bear's got you, my friend." But despair steadied his nerves, and he managed to hoist himself safely up behind the ship's bulwarks. He had hardly got on board, however, when he heard his comrade call out, and saw that the bear had got hold of him and had bitten him. But Henriksen, who is a big, powerful, resolute fellow, dealt his assailant such a blow on the head with the lighted lantern he was carrying, that the brute, half stunned and half scared, let go its prey, and Henriksen seized the opportunity to skip up the Fram's side. The bear revenged itself by seizing one of the dogs. On a closer investigation being made, it was found that the bear had paid two visits to the ship during the night, creeping in through an open port holt, and had carried off a dog each time.

One day, when Nansen and Johansen had to pass along a somewhat narrow path they were suddenly attacked by a bear. Johansen, who is a man of no ordinary strength, caught hold of his enemy's throat with a grip of iron, and held him at arm's length till Nansen was able to get his rifle and lay the bear low. North of 84 degrees no animal life was found to exist, and this would seem to cast some discredit on the hitherto prevalent theory that if a sufficiently high altitude could be attained, one would come to dry land and open water, because birds are to be seen flying toward the extreme north. This northerly flight of the birds is now believed to be attributed to their having lost their way or being blown out of their course. One day at 82 degrees latitude a seal was perceived from on board the Fram with a flounder in its mouth. On the approach of the vessel the seal went up away over the ice. A flounder was also observed at about eleven miles from Bear Island. The depth of the water in the extreme north also seems to indicate that there can be no land near. Soundings taken at 84 degrees latitude gave a depth of from 1,310 to 1,530 fathoms (2,400 to 2,800 meters), and farther north the lead reached even greater depths—as much as 2,180 fathoms (4,000 meters), it is said.—London Standard.

Instantaneous Water Heater.

A greater boon to the housekeeper can hardly be imagined than a quick means of heating water. A water heater which has just made its appearance appears to have many good points. It is automatic in action, and takes care of itself night or day. This heater combines quickness of action and very high thermal efficiency, with a complete circulating system controlled by a thermostatic regulator. The water, as it is heated, goes to a storage tank or boiler (so-called), and as soon as the temperature in this boiler reaches the degree for which the regulator is set, the gas is automatically reduced, so that only so much is burned as will keep the water hot. The house pipes are connected with this boiler, as usual, so that warm water can be drawn in the bath room, or at the various basins about the house. When warm water is drawn, cold water flows in to take its place, and the regulator at once turns on the gas to heat the cold water, and then stops, as before. This heating system insures a full supply of warm water at any moment, night or day, and at any part of the premises. It also reduces the consumption of gas to a minimum, and it removes one of the most serious objections to gas stoves for general use. It is claimed that this device will heat twenty-four gallons of water with forty-seven feet of gas, and much better results can be obtained by precautions to save the loss in radiation. It is also stated that the heater will utilize from 95 to 98 per cent of the total heat of the gas.

For Milk Lovers.

To make milk digestible all that is necessary is to shake it well, and to sip it slowly. Shake the milk violently for a few minutes in a covered goblet, and then drink immediately, but not hastily, before it has time to separate again. After standing for some hours, as, for instance, all city milk has done on its way to town, the perfectly homogeneous article that came from the cow is separated, first by the rising of the cream from the gaseous or cheesy milk, and later by the tendency to divide into whey or curd. Although this latter process is perceptible only in souring milk, the fluid undergoes such constant changes that it should always be shaken before drinking it, unless it is taken quite warm from the cow.

New Style of Canvassers.

The up-to-date canvasser now travels in a bunch. Under the direction of managers and chaperones, companies of lady agents will soon be touring the country, judging from the advent of such an organization here. They hold rehearsals, just like their theatrical sisters, and each girl is thoroughly coached as to what to say and how to say it. Early in the morning they receive their assignments and scatter over the city or town, watched by spotters, who report to the manager any breach of contract on the part of the canvassers. The rules are of the early-to-bed-and-early-to-rise sort, the hotel bills and traveling expenses are paid by the manager, and the entire outfit is an object lesson of the benefits to be derived from discipline, drill and organization. The female book agent need not be lonely and helpless any longer, unless she proposes to flock by herself.—New York Letter.

Cascarets stimulate liver, kidneys and bowels. Never sicken, weaken or gripe.

French Rules for Milking.

Work rapidly; slowness causes loss of cream. Milk thoroughly, to the last drop, because the last milk is the best. Milk at the same time every day. Milk cross-wise—that is to say, one fore teat on the right and a hind teat on the left, and vice versa; the milk thus flows more copiously than by parallel milking. Milk with five fingers, and not with index and thumb, a fault too common with milkers. Do not employ any kind of milking machines. To milk young, restless cows, raise one of the fore feet. Never strike them. Always keep the hands clean, and also the cow's udder and dairy utensils. During milking avoid distracting or disturbing the cow. Those who neglect any of these prescriptions infallibly lose milk.

Grass for Lowlands.

Sow the grasses on the rye and cover them with a harrow. Do this as soon as possible after the ground is dry in the spring. Sow timothy, red top and alsike clover. Use four pounds of timothy, three pounds of red top, and three pounds alsike clover per acre. These three varieties go nicely together. They all flourish best on low land. The overflow should help rather than harm them, and they mature about the same time. It is somewhat surprising that alsike clover is not more grown when we call to mind its affinity for such situations and the excellence of the hay which it produces.—Prairie Farmer.

Artificial ivory is now made from condensed skim milk.

The United States debt increased by $12,342,000 during August.

Rubber Horseshoes.

If the latest phase of modern ingenuity proves a success, there will be no more heavy trampling and the rythmic clicking of the hoofs of four-footed steeds. There has been invented a new horseshoe—a steel frame about which is built a cushion of vulcanized rubber. The advantage claimed for it is that as the rubber instead of metal strikes the ground, there is no concussion or jar, and the horse's hoof, leg and shoulder are saved.

Thirty-three per cent of the diseases of horses, it has been said, are maladies of the foot, and there is little question but that even the best shoeing, as it is done by burning the hoof, is in a measure injurious. The new horseshoe is to be put on cold, and the hoof simply pared or cut to fit it. It is nailed on in the ordinary way. An additional advantage of the rubber sole is that it will give the horse a firmer hold upon wet or treacherous pavements, and, by securing him a good purchase, enable him to go up or come down steep hills with a heavy load far more easily than at present.—New York Tribune.

CALLED IT A POPULIST CONVENTION.

One Straight Out People's Party Man Named on Their County Ticket.

The Balance are Democrats and Free Silver Converts.

There was a county convention at the court house in this city on Monday evening, and it was held in compliance with the call issued by the People's party. But as the People's party in this county, as elsewhere, has been absorbed by the Democrats, and its movements are dictated by the so-called Democratic general, the nomination of only one straight out Populist was all they could expect—and it was all they got.

The convention was called to order by Chairman J. E. Johnson, and he was retained as chairman of the meeting, John W. Martin being elected secretary. The appointment of a committee on credentials followed, and these gentlemen were named—W. W. Winters, Andrew Hall, O. P. Erickson, John Engman and S. W. Quinn. The committee retired, and after interviewing nearly all the gentlemen who had assembled for the purpose of acting as delegates, the following were announced as entitled to seats:

First ward—Jens Molstad, Frank Britton, Jerome Kelleher and Ed. Chamberlain.

Second ward—A. Olson, John McCarthy, J. M. Hayes and Peter Walters.

Third ward—Andrew Hall, Otto Turbop, W. W. Winters and J. E. Holmes.

Fourth ward—O. P. Errickson, A. A. Bander, James Collier and Solomon Johnson.

Fifth ward—S. W. Quinn, J. E. Johnson, Florain Senti and J. K. Pearce.

Daggett Brook—Philip Harmon.

St. Matthias—Robert A. Magee and R. H. Capistrant.

Crow Wing—O. S. Channing.

Ft. Ripley—Ole Larson.

Deerwood—John Engman, John Bark and W. S. Archibald.

Bay Lake—David Archibald and C. B. Skellings.

Davenport's—Daniel Holmes.

Ponton's—Wm. K. Roseukrans and Geo. J. Bock.

After the above report was made Mr. Hayes moved that the convention go into one of the jury rooms and converse together with the view of coming to an understanding. The convention retired and after ten minutes returned. The chair then appointed Jerome Kelleher, O. P. Errickson and R. A. Magee as tellers, and the convention proceeded to nominations as follows:

County Treasurer—J. M. Hayes, by acclamation.

For Auditor—W. H. Everest and John Koop. The vote resulting in 5 votes for Everest and 25 votes for Koop, and the latter gentleman's nomination was made unanimous.

Register of Deeds—Geo. H. Stratton and A. G. Gallup. The vote standing 3 for Stratton and 26 for Gallup, and the latter gentleman's nomination was made unanimous.

Sheriff—O. P. Errickson, by acclamation.

County Attorney—Passed, the committee to have power to fill the vacancy.

Probate Judge—John F. Hurley, by acclamation.

County Surveyor—Passed, the committee to have power to fill the vacancy.

Coroner—Ed. Chamberlain, by acclamation.

Superintendent of Schools—A. R. Cass, by acclamation.

County Commissioners—First district, R. A. Magee; Third district, J. K. Pearce; Fifth district, David Archibald.

After this business had been transacted J. E. Johnson was elected chairman of the county committee, and J. W. Martin secretary, with the power invested in the chair to appoint the balance of the committee.

A committee on resolutions, consisting of David Archibald, Jerome Kelleher and Ed. Chamberlain were appointed, and they reported resolutions pledging loyalty and support for the free silver ticket from president down to coroner, and the convention ratified the same.

J. M. Hayes then addressed the convention from a free silver standpoint, and H. C. Stivers also made a few remarks, stating that the ticket just named pleased him very much, and he considered it one of the best tickets ever placed before the people of the county.

The convention the adjourned.

The City Council.

The city council met in adjourned session on Friday evening last, President Purdy and Ald. Gage, Gardner, Reinthal and McMaster being absent at the opening but came in later. Ald. Adair was called to the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and also the clerk's financial report for August, which was accepted.

Claims against the city were audited as follows:

Tribune, printing	$22 75
W. D. McKay, freight	3 90
H. M. Phillips, freight	1 54
Wm. Bell, labor	5 00
Frank Fisk, labor	2 00
Sipp Bros., supplies	40 72
Pay for firemen	26 00

Bills of D. M. Clark & Co., for $20.16, and N. E. Paine, $28.70, were referred to the street committee.

A motion was made and carried that hereafter the police be requested to attend to drying the hose in East Brainerd.

The committee were granted further time in matter of vacating portion of 3rd Avenue in West Brainerd.

The city attorney was instructed to notify Supt. Wilsey in regard to the obstruction of street crossings by railroad trains.

A resolution was introduced and adopted granting the N. P. Ry. Co. the right to relay such portion of the "Boom Lake Branch" that crosses South Fifth and Sixth stipets at any time, it relaid to correspond with the grade of the streets.

The following communication from C. N. Parker, regarding the electric light plant, was then read and filed:

TO THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF BRAINERD—GENTLEMEN:

From a recent conversation between Mr. D. D. Smith, of your electric light committee, and myself, I understand that some repairs on the electric light plant in the city are necessary at this time, and in view of the pending proceedings relative to the purchase of the plant by the Brainerd Traction, Light & Power Co., I deem it proper for me to submit a brief statement, showing why the purchase has not been completed, and indicating my position concerning the repairs required on the plant. I desire to be perfectly frank in the matter, as well as to relieve the city council and the electric light committee from all embarrassment in the premises as much as possible.

Under the financial conditions of the country as they now exist, and as they have been for some months past, it has been absolutely impossible to procure the necessary investment of sufficient capital in any scheme of a speculative character, and it is possible that the Brainerd Traction, Light & Power Co. may be unable to complete the purchase of the electric light plant and take hold of the proposed improvements before next spring. In the meantime, if it becomes necessary for the city to make some repairs on the plant, I do not doubt that the necessary expenditures made by the city must be taken into consideration, and that when the transfer is finally made, such affairs can be fairly and properly adjusted; and should the purchase be finally consummated, as we hope it may be, the preservation of the plant by the city during the interval, will be a matter that the Brainerd Traction, Light & Power Co. will not attempt to overlook, and the council may be assured that the matter will have a proper disposition.

C. N. PARKER,
President.

Brainerd, Sept. 25th, 1896.

A motion was made and carried that Mr. L. P. White, be requested to have the vacant building in Block 159, either taken down or repaired.

Council adjourned.

CRAZY ARGUMENTS.

FREE COINAGE FOOLISHNESS IS CLEARLY EXPOSED.

Stock Arguments of the Cheap-Money or Free Coinage Party Answered—Hard Times Caused by Continued Agitation for Cheap Money—Sympathy Admits That the Demonetization Party Desired for Silver Monometallism.

First—That the free coinage of silver will restore cheap prosperity.

It will not. It will drive more than $600,000,000 of gold out of the country, and it will require years of work by the mints to replace this amount in silver.

Second—That silver was demonetized in 1873.

It was not. To "demonetize" means to abandon the use of money. Up to 1873 we had two money metals, gold and silver dollars. Since that time we have coined $378,000,000 full legal tender silver dollars, and they are all in use and all full legal tender.

Third—That the present hard times result from the gold standard.

One cause of hard times is the continued agitation for cheap money. Under the old standard we had unexampled prosperity until the agitation for more silver and low tariff unsettled business.

Fourth—That the old standard has ruined the country.

The wealth of the country more than doubled from 1870 to 1890.

Fifth—That the gold standard has cut wages in half.

From 1870 to 1890 wages increased 28 per cent, and their purchasing power 51 per cent.

Sixth—That Silver is not legal tender.

Silver dollars are legal tender to any amount for debt, public or private, and unlimited in amount as legal tender to the amount of $10.

Seventh—That free-coinage will make $71 1-4 grains of pure silver equal to $1.

Three-fourths of the earth's population have free coinage of silver, but $71 1-4 grains of silver sell for 53 cents.

Eighth—That the dollar of our debts must be restored.

It was restored in 1878, and over $23,000,000 of them have since been coined.

Ninth—That silver has fallen in value because it is denied free coinage.

Silver began to fall 179 years before we stopped free coinage.

Tenth—That this country is big enough to adopt free coinage and restore's silver's value independently of the rest of the world.

If three-fourths of the people in the world have failed, how can 70,000,000 people succeed?

Eleventh—That the "money power" has cornered gold and made money scarce.

There is $9,780,437,000 of gold in the world, and no combination could possibly corner it.

Twelfth—That we are being driven into bankruptcy by scarce money and high interest.

In 1873 we had $18.58 per capita; in 1894 we had $35.44 per capita. Since 1873 rates of interest have fallen 50 per cent.

Thirteenth—That the larger the volume of currency the higher the prices.

France has $35.77 per capita; Switzerland has $9.97. Prices are the same in both countries.

Fourteenth—That primary money only is a measure of values.

Gold is the primary money of both France and Greece. France has $22.19 gold per capita; Greece has only 23 cents. Prices are the same in both countries.

Fifteenth—That free silver will make the farmer's wheat sell for $1.

But that silver dollar will only purchase what 53 cents will buy at present.

Sixteenth—That the silver men demand bimetallism.

In his Centralia speech, W. J. Bryan said: "The Democratic party has declared for a single standard of silver." That means silver monometallism.

Seventeenth—That free silver will raise wages.

From 1860 to 1865 a 49 1-2-cent paper dollar raised prices 116 per cent, and only raised wages 43 per cent, compared with gold wages of 1890.

Eighteenth—That free silver will raise the price of silver to $1.29 per ounce.

With an annual purchase for coinage of 2,250 tons per annum, the price fell from $1.17 to 78 cents between 1887 and 1893, and the production increased 96 per cent.

Nineteenth—That nature has fixed a ratio of 16 to 1 by yielding annually at the mines in weight about sixteen times as much gold as silver.

This is not true. The ratio in which the two metals have been produced has varied continually and very greatly. According to the most trustworthy statistics we have, the ratio of gold to silver produced was about 1 to 8 from 1493 to 1520; about 1 to 42 from 1521 to 1600, and less than 4 1-2 from 1851 to 1860. Between these extremes the ratio has varied very widely.

Quantity, Not Quality.

Candidate Bryan has a great deal to say nowadays about the "quantity" of money in circulation. Never in the history of the world has the quantity of money in the United States has nearly doubled, and during this era the country reached the climax of prosperity.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Step Toward Fiat Money.

It will ask you to remember the fundamental facts in this controversy. It is really a fight for honest money and honest currency against the debasement of the currency and the impairment of credit. Free silver is but a step toward fiat money. At bottom the Bryanites are hostile to the money metal esteemed by those who put their money in the savings banks, who are investors in any form of productive capital, whether bonds or real estate or cross-roads stores. Every demagogue in the land, every man who hates with a venomous hatred the world-to-do because they are well-to-do, the thrifty because they are thrifty and have worked and saved, are arrayed against us.

But free silver is not the worst thing in the Chicago platform. The platform contains an attack on the supreme court, and therefore upon the main dependence of our liberties. It contains a demand that the laws shall not be enforced in certain contingencies. This means lawlessness, and it is fitting that with the demand for free silver should go the demand for free riots. The men who are ready to strike down the currency of the country are ready to strike down at the same time that safeguard of our liberties which we have received from our forefathers in the constitution—the supreme court.—Theodore Roosevelt to the Commercial Travelers of New York.

American Farmer Is All Right.

There is no need to worry about the American farmer's vote. It will be cast on the right side of the great questions that are to be settled in this campaign, and the howling of the free coinage demagogues, who are trying to legislate millions of dollars of extra profit into the pockets of the silver mine owners, will have no effect upon the result.—Chrystal Herald.

Fabio Romani.

Aiden Benedict's Fabio Romani is a fine creation. It surpasses Monte Cristo in its intensity of action, in its subtlety of plot, in its cause and effect. There are no chasms of sequence that must be bridged by the imagination. It steps immediately upon a high, artistic level of intense active interest, and keeps that level up to the terrific, emotional climax, which is the submerging of the expiring bodies of the principal characters in the rolling waters of the bay of Naples, amid the crashing thunder of an earthquake, in the weird light of an awful eruption of Mt. Vesuvius. Fabio Romani is a tale of the dead, founded first and last upon the Judas like duplicity of woman. Mr. Charles Macklin, as Fabio Romani, the wronged husband and implacable avenger, gave a powerful representation of the part. Mr. Macklin has a magnificent physique. His acting is a combination of the robust and intense.

The above attraction will appear at Sleeper Opera House to-morrow evening, Saturday Oct. 3, and the announcement is sufficient to insure a packed house. The entire cast is strong and even and the costumes are rich. The spectacular effects are magnificent.

Prices, reserved seats 50 and 75 cents, general admission 35 cents and gallery 25 cents. Reserved seat sale now open at Atwood & Johnson's drug store.

Candidate for Sheriff.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of sheriff, subject to the approval of the republican county convention.

Yours Respectfully,
H. POPPENBERG.
