HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you? But how to determine which make is best is that puzzle you, don't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

BRAINERD, MINN.

GEORGE SMITH, of Indianapolis, claims to be 97 years old, and says he has been married to 34 wives and is the father of 52 children. And Mr. Smith family didn't really need recruits, either.

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, who was an old Indianapolis friend of General Harrison, was given a formal reception at the White House. A distinguished assemblage was present to do him honor.

KENTUCKY has appropriated $100,000 for a liquor exhibit at the world's fair. No confidence is violated in the statement that this action has the explicit sanction of Dr. Keeley and his hypodermic syringe.

NEW JERSEY is not usually classed in the van of progressive movements, but the legislature is credited with having passed the best road-making laws to be found in the country. It would be well for other states to study their features.

A NEW building material, of uncertain origin but called "fossil coral," is being worked on a small island of the Suva, Fiji. It is so soft that it can be easily cut into any desired form, but soon hardens when exposed to the air, and acquires the characteristic of fire brick.

SURGEON'S grave in Norwood Cemetery is marked by a simple marble slab bearing the inscription "C. H. Surgeon;" Mrs. Spurgeon has suggested that the word "Waiting" be added, the suggestion is to be carried out.

THE Boston Advertiser points out the fact that it is fifty years since a vice-president has been re-elected. It ought to take about that long to find a live politician who would hanker for a second dose of salaried oblivion so near to the seat of power.

THE fact that the proposed bust of Lowell in Westminster abbey has simmered down to a pane of stained glass in the chapter houses are room for suspicion that the promoters have taken pattern from the Grant monument committee in New York.

GOLD has been discovered in New Jersey but we do not advise Western prospectors to make a rush for that favored region. If there's more than "enough to swear by or gild a halo or guinea," it was probably buried by some thrifty lobbyist in attendance on the legislature.

HOW much a man may love a horse and how far he will go to lose him recently been shown in the case of an old farmer out in Illinois, who traveled over 1,000 miles of country to find an old 825 plug which was stolen from him years ago. He got the animal at last in Georgia.

CARNEGIE should have credit for his gift of $100,000, the other day, for a library and gymnasium for his workmen. Should he pay them wages that they could live on comfortably without threatening strikes, it might not advertise his magnanimity quite so much, but it would make life more cheerful for his men.

A NEW YORK reporter recently applied to an organized charity for something to eat, and was refused. The officials told him to go "soak his sparkler" and distribute some of the money among the poor. In his hasty make-up he had forgotten to remove his diamond, and was once more reminded that inadvertency often spoils a good "scoop."

THE Supreme Court of the United States denied the application for writs of habeas corpus for Fielden and Schwab, the condemned Chicago anarchists, holding that the Supreme Court of Illinois was not a court of original jurisdiction, and that, therefore, it was not necessary that the accused should be present when the Court gave its judgment.

ACCORDING to the Omaha World-Herald there is a postoffice in New Mexico named Hotterwheel, which was so named during a presidential campaign. Considering the fact that the citizens of New Mexico are barred from voting for president of the United States, it is reasonable to suppose that at such a time Hotterwhel would be the coolest place in the country.

MR. FISHER, of Butte, Mont., has found a new weapon of defense against highwaymen. Two ragged rascals held up Fisher on Granite street a few nights ago and were suddenly put to flight by the efforts of a little pet skunk which he had in his pocket. It must be a considerable shock to a robber to put his hand in a wealthy-looking pocket and find only a mephitic pet there. Mr. Fisher's tastes in natural history are a little out of the ordinary run.

PROF. MCCOOK of Hartford has been making an investigation of the tramp nuisance. He finds that out of 1299 cases coming under his notice, 56 per cent. claimed to be American born and only 10 per cent. were unable to read and write. Such statistics, of course, are some or less faulty, and are not sufficient to draw any hard-and-fast conclusions from. They are significant, however, as bearing on the causes that lead to the nuisance. Mr. Lowell's statement, that there is something of the nomad in all of us, will occur to many.

HARRIET HOSMER, the sculptor, leads a very retired life in Rome, and is not easily approachable to visitors, but sometimes she lets down the bars of her reserve to an American compatriot. Mrs. Mary Frost Ormsby, who went to Rome as a delegate to the International Peace Conference, was entertained by Miss Hosmer, who sent by her a warm greeting to Sorosis—a message that, Mrs. Ormsby delivered amid great applause to the members of Sorosis at their last meeting.

Trajan's Floating Palace.

One of the most wonderful buildings of antiquity was the Trajan's floating palace. It was a wooden structure of two, or some say three, stories in height and built upon a gigantic raft which was set adrift in Lake Nemi in Italy and towed from place to place, as occasion required, by rowboats. It was a model pleasure house, having gardens and courts covered with rich mosaics, and in its pleasure boats plying from it to the shore, while the occupants of the place amused themselves by fishing from its windows. It sunk in D. 106, and on July 15, 1535, it was said to have been rediscovered at the bottom of the lake. According to the description given of it as that time the structure was 500 feet long by 270 wide and 64 in height. The floating palace has never reappeared in history since 1535, and much doubt has been thrown on the accounts then written.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A GREAT COMMITTEE.

Minority Report in the Grain Investigation Case Submitted.

Mr. Moore Finds a Great Combine Organized to Lower Prices.

Committeeman Moore has submitted a minority report on the wheat investigation, which is a document of great import, containing over 20,000 words. A synopsis is given by Lou:

Representative Moore first expresses his regrets for being unable to sign the majority report, in consequence of the evidence which was to report the evidence, something more than a mere recital of the testimony, and should be accompanied by some comments upon the same. It was the committee's duty, he believed, to state the conclusions of fact which from the evidence in order that they may be the basis for the recommendations for legislation. He could not sign the majority report, because it did not make any of the findings of fact which he thought ought to be made in view of the testimony.

Mr. Moore then explains the reasons which moved him to assent to and sign the conclusions of the majority report. Signing for the majority report the minority report state:

THE COMBINE.

I cannot agree with the finding in the majority report that the evidence fails to show a combine by which fixes the price to be paid for wheat throughout the country, and that the Northwest, on the contrary I most emphatically dissent from the finding of the majority report that the evidence fails to show and I most emphatically denied that such a combine does exist throughout the State of Minnesota, and the Northwest, and that the direct effect of such combine is to depress the price of wheat of a large part of the crop of the Northwest.

UNDER THE LAW OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

Duluth and Minneapolis should have three times the capacity for receiving and shipping grain in the price of Minnesota grain than Chicago, Milwaukee, and Toledo, and yet under the natural operation of the law of supply and demand to the market at Duluth and Minneapolis, the price of wheat is lower than at Milwaukee, having but a little over 21,000,000 bushels to its capacity, and Toledo with 68,000,000 bushels gathered at Duluth and Minneapolis, and Milwaukee, and Toledo, power other than law of supply and demand. To illustrate the effect of the combine, I have proposed that the price of wheat at Duluth, with the fact that the lake and rail rates from Duluth to Buffalo, Milwaukee and Toledo, for the money taken July 2, 1891, and March 8, 1892, make the freight from Duluth to Buffalo, and the nearly equal rate and freight from Chicago to Buffalo.

Bear in mind in this connection that the total capacity of Duluth is 21,000,000 bushels, tonnage to and from Duluth, and that practically the same from Duluth to the seaboard is 21,000,000 bushels, and that the tonnage of the two ports being equal, what facilities, if any, that Duluth has, it is to finish, but in the fifth round Mehan pulled off his gloves and called the fight off. The gate receipts were given to Dreger. Two more matches have been arranged.

A VOTE ON SILVER.

The Free Coinage Senators Win on a Test by a Majority of Four.

One or Two, However, Voted Under a Partial Misapprehension.

WASHINGTON, Special, April 20.—The bill to amend the act of June 28, 1889, approving the binding act of Arizona, was taken up in the senate. One sentence in it attracted the attention of

HER INFINITE VARIETY.

I love her as "Faith," when the sunlight steals
Through the church's heavy air;
And she kneels in her place with the possibilities
And her soul goes up in prayer.

I love her as "Charity," when her purse
Has always another nills
To fill the weight of poverty's curse
And make some weary heart light;

But when she stand in an earthly guise,
With her perfect love confessed,
In the trusting glance of her brilliant eyes,
It's as "Hope" that I love her best.
—Harry Romaine in the ladies' Home Journal.

HER SECRET.

Men jeer at women for their way
Of prattling secrets right and day;
But then—one secret I'll engage,
She will not tell for wealth and age.
She will not tell it though she pouts,
That secret is her age.

AN OLD LOVE AFFAIR.

BY EMILY LENNOX.

GOOD many circumstances combined to make Lydia feel that she was growing old at 28.

She had been four years abroad as Mrs. Grosvenor's companion, and she had done a great many things—her duty, notably—and yet her brilliant youth was over.

She grew very sad when she reflected. Had she often enjoyed life, it was; but now she had come to the conclusion that it must be her own fault—all owing to her own weakness. The truth had been forced upon her by a certain episode. Mr. Severance had asked her to marry him, and he seemed both surprised and angry when she told him she was already engaged—had been so for over six years.

"What are you waiting for?" he had asked brusquely.

"We are both poor," Lydia answered bravely. "He has his mother to support and two sisters to educate, and it is very difficult for a young lawyer to make any headway."

"In that case, I should give it up," said the Doctor bluntly. "Are you going to waste your youth in waiting for him? Miss Dayton? Don't you think it would be much more sensible for you both to dissolve your relationship? I am not speaking now as a lover, but as a friend. You are both old enough and reasonable enough to take the matter philosophically. If you love him, you should marry some man who could make your life sweet and pleasant; and perhaps he might find some girl who would help him out of his difficulties."

These words had sank deep into Lydia's mind, she thought of them for months. It was not that she cared to marry Dr. Severance; she knew she could never do that under any circumstances, and he knew it too. He had given up all hope of making her his wife, and gradually they were drifting into a friendly and confidential intercourse which suited them both better. Still, Mr. Severance's suggestion had lingered in Lydia's memory. She felt the force of what he had said, and was trying to come to a conclusion. Of course, she must have consulted the care for Henry Osborne as she once had, or she could not have argued the matter as she did. But she was still very fond of him, and when she had made up her mind to break off her engagement, the resolution cost her many a bitter pang.

She was a long time in writing the letter which gained the sanction of her action; but she sent it off at last, together with the little plain gold ring, now somewhat worn, upon its edges, and a great many letters signed in a bold hand: "Yours faithfully, Henry."

She felt as though she had been to a friend when she came back from the post-office, and in the sorrowful fullness of her heart, she told Dr. Severance what she had done.

"I think you have acted wisely, Lydia," he said, in the friendly fashion which had grown natural between them.

"I think so, Doctor," she replied, "but if I could only be perfectly sure!"

"Nobody ever does any important thing without doubts," he said, quietly, "nobody can tell about the issue of anything. But that ought not to concern us. What we have to deal with is the principle, and I think you are right there."

"I don't know," Lydia answered, her eyes filling up with tears. "It seems very false and treacherous when I think of throwing him over just because he is too poor to marry yet."

"If he is a man of sense," said the Doctor, warmly, "he will see it as you do. It certainly is not right for either of you to prolong such an affair forever. What does engagement mean, if not marriage? Yours was nothing but a mockery. Lydia. It absorbed your thoughts and your life without any return. It was bad for both of you!"

"Perhaps it was," said Lydia, with a wan smile, "I don't suppose happiness is worth calculating."

"There is a blessedness that is higher than happiness," quoted the Doctor. "Don't you remember, Lydia? I was in love with you once, and yet I have come down to congratulate place friendship, which is a great comfort to me."

"Yes," said Lydia, with a faint sigh. "But I fancy you were not so much in love with me after all."

Womanlike, she was not without some vague regret that in gaining a friend she had lost a lover.

It was several days after this that Lydia received a letter from Henry Osborne. It was dated a week before, but owing to a slight eligibility due to hasty writing it had remained a week about tour and reached her much belated. When she received it she fancied it was an answer to her own letter but the moment she opened it she knew it was written before hers; the two, of vastly different tenor had passed each other on the way.

"My darling," it began, "I cannot tell you with what strong feeling I write you this morning. I am so beside myself with joy that I cannot grasp my usual very intelligent account of what has changed the whole aspect of my life—our love, I mean to say. Years ago—you remember, I told you—your father left me several small lots in a little town in Western Pennsylvania. I was only a boy at the time, and no account was made of the legacy—for the property was worth only a few hundred dollars, and it has lain idle ever since. But now it has suddenly become valuable. The discovery of a large oil well on the adjoining lands has made my poor lots worth an enormous sum. Today I have sold them to a New York syndicate for a large sum. I am a rich man, dearest, and you know what that implies! I am coming to you at once! After all these years of waiting I have another chance (pardon me, I want to be married immediately. There is no reason why we should wait any longer. We have lost so much time that we cannot afford to lose any more. Oh, my darling! I am so proud and happy when I remember how faithfully you have waited for me all these years of poverty and separation. My heart glows when I think of it, and I thank God heartily for the blessing of your love! I shall be with you in a week. I am settling up my business with a view to taking you abroad for several years. Till I see you, then, I remain, darling, through all time to come, Yours faithfully, HENRY."

Poor Lydia! Every word was a dagger in her breast. She knew, as she read it, that her own letter had by this time reached its destination; that Henry had read it, and that he would not come to her now. She laid her head down and wept bitterly.

Lydia was not a mercenary woman. It did not affect her that she had just ruined her chances of marrying a rich man; but she had a passionate love for happiness, a wish to make the most out of her life and its possibilities. She had always known that as Henry Osborne's wife, she would find that sweet content which would make her always appear the best her nature could allow. She had not given up this hope without a struggle; and now—oh, how his generous praise of her fidelity lacerated her very soul! But she was not too proud to write to him—such a letter! It must have moved Henry Osborne to forgiveness, so full was it of remorse and reawakened love, of passionate entreaty and desperate fears; but he did not receive it. Her first epistle had reached him on the day when he was expecting to come to her Overwhelmed with anguish and bitterness, he had not deferred his journey a day longer, at the same hot impatience, but he went in another direction from either no one knew—and Lydia's second message was returned to her unopened.

Lydia did not mention this to Dr. Severance. Her own pride would have kept her from it, even if she had been less considerate of his friendly feelings; but both reasons influenced her to silence. It was a curious thing that Henry Osborne's name had never been mentioned between them. There was no reason for it, they knew. When Lydia had told the Doctor of her engagement, it had been in general terms. So the matter was quietly dropped between them, and the Doctor made a poor guess at what ailed Lydia, when very pale and sad, and as time went on.

It was two years afterward that he called for her one morning in his carriage.

"I have some news for you," he said, shaking her hand very warmly. "I have succeeded at last in finding somebody who will marry me."

"I congratulate you," said Lydia, smiling, "when is it to be?"

"As soon as possible," the Doctor replied, briskly. "Put on your hat and coat. I have come down to call on her. I am sure you will like her, Lydia. She is one of my patients. I have cured of a spinal affection, and she means to repay me by becoming my wife."

"I don't call that such a heavy bill," said Lydia, thoughtlessly.

"If you think it is, pay it yourself," said the Doctor, laughing. "Come, Lydia, I want you to go with me."

This was how she happened to drive with the Doctor to an elegant house in Fairhead Avenue, where they were ushered into a large room, dusky with draperies and rich furniture. From somewhere out of the shadows came a slight girlish figure.

"Why, Frank," she cried joyously, and then, perceiving the lady in waiting (Lydia, to recover her shy dignity, afterwards thought she seated on the piano stool rose hastily, and turned around.

"Edith," said the Doctor, taking the hand of his fiancee and holding it quietly, "this is my friend, Miss Dayton. Lydia, this is my future wife, Miss Osborne."

"I'll am not mistaken," Edith said, with great embarrassment, "we have met before."

She held out her hand awkwardly, but Lydia did not seem to see it. Back of Edith stood Henry Osborne, looking at her with a pleasant smile.

"We have met before," Lydia faltered. "Dr. Severance did not tell me it was Miss Osborne—"

"My name is Henry," Edith said, breaking through the stiffness of their meeting. "Henry, I—I think you remember Miss Dayton."

"Quite well," he said, coming forward, with a smile which struck a dart to Lydia's heart. "I hope you are well, Miss Dayton."

Dr. Severance looked puzzled; but before long Henry was chatting volubly with Lydia about his foreign travels, and Edith was overflowing gracious things which only heightened Lydia's embarrassment. It was a long not away; but the doctor was astounded when she burst into tears the moment they were out of the house.

"You might have told me!" she cried, passionately. "I'd have died sooner than have gone!"

"Told you what!" the doctor asked, astonishment mingling with pity.

"I didn't know, that you were acquainted with the Osbornes. You never said so."

"You never mentioned their names, and I—I told you I was engaged to Henry."

"Good heavens!" ejaculated the doctor, on whom the first ray of light was dawning. "Lydia, you never mentioned Henry Osborne's name to me. How was I to know that to whom you were engaged?"

"What will they think of me going there after—after—Oh, she added, fiercely. "I never want you to meet their insolent sneers."

"I am sorry," the Doctor said, with genuine chagrin, "I hoped you and Edith would be delighted from Henry is a strange fellow, and I could not entirely trust Edith and had been disappointed in a love affair, and took it very hard; but upon my word! See here, Lydia, I believe you are fond of that man yet!"

"I am not!" she cried angrily. "You are an old friend, Dr. Severance, but you are going too far."

"Well, well, I beg your pardon. We won't say anything more about it."

He sat Lydia down at Mrs. Grosvenor's door and drove away in a quandary.

"If those two people are not in love with each other still," he mused, "I am a quack."

Nevertheless; when the Doctor and Edith were married, Lydia did not go to the wedding. In fact which he conveyed thoroughly some time afterward in conversation with his wife; and extreme Edith said Lydia had been disappointed in a love affair, and took it very hard; but upon my word! See here, Lydia, I believe you are fond of that man yet!"

"I am not!" she cried angrily. "You are an old friend, Dr. Severance, but you are going too far."

"Well, well, I beg your pardon. We won't say anything more about it."

A feature of the occasion was the presentation of cut glass to Mrs. Ingersoll and also to Mr. E. O. Webb, it being his good fortune to be celebrating a similar occasion.

The Day stock of clothing and furnishing goods was disposed of by the assignee to a Boston creditor on Monday and was in turn bought from him by J. F. McGinnis & Co., who are now busy removing the same to their store at the corner of Front and Seventh streets. The goods were bought at a bargain, and Mr. McGinnis informs us that he proposes to give his customers the benefit. When the stock is arranged they will have a fine display. Look out for a big announcement in next weeks DISPATCH if you are looking for bargains.

Larger Quarters.

D. M. Clark returned from Chicago on Thursday night of last week where he had been for several days selecting a large stock for his new store to which he will move on May 1st. The Swartz building on Sixth street will put in shape to receive the new stock and also the present mammoth line of hardware, etc., in the store now occupied by him. The upper floor will be occupied by a fine a line of furniture and house furnishing goods as were ever displayed in this city, Mr. Clark giving his personal attention to selecting the same. On the ground floor the shelf hardware and crockery will be displayed, the tin shop and workroom being in the rear. The basement will be used for stoves and heavy hardware. It is Mr. Clark's intention to be able to fit out any person with a complete line of goods for housekeeping, including carpets, of which he displays an elegant line of the latest patterns. In addition his harness shop will be given a nice location in the new quarters, and altogether he will have one of the finest equipped stores in the northwest.

You Can't Afford to Miss it.

The entertainment to be given by the Odd Fellows on Wednesday evening next will be one of the finest yet produced in Brainerd. The fact that it is free is no sign that it will not be excellent, for that society has spent much time and gone to a large expense to celebrate their anniversary. Rev. J. W. Frizzell, formerly of Brainerd, will deliver the address of the evening. The Masonic Quartette, of Minneapolis, will be a feature that will add much to the enjoyment of the occasion. They are spoken of as follows:

The Masonic Quartette appears nightly this week with McKee Rankin in "The Canuck," at the Lyceum, and their friends and acquaintances have considerable sport in watching them. Attired in toboggan suits they sing two quartettes for Jean Baptiste Cardieux and New England friends. In this they are at home, but when, a little latter, they join in the Virginia reel, it becomes evident that they are handier with their voices, so to speak, than with their feet. In the next act they appear as harvest hands and are quite awkward enough for the role they take. Their singing is excellent, however, E. P. Browning's sweet tenor being well backed up by Messrs. Marshall, Root and Forbes.—Minneapolis Evening Journal.

Grand Concert.

The First Congregational church people give their grand concert next Monday evening at the opera house. About 75 people will take part in the music and tableau. Doors open at 7:15 p. m., curtain rises positively at 8 p. m. Tickets 25 cents to all parts of the house. The following is the programme:

Deaths.

Jacob Karna died of consumption last Tuesday, age 23 years.

Spencer Knudson, an inmate at the county poor farm, died on Sunday last.

An infant son of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Miller died Wednesday, aged 18 months.

Creoles Coming.

Downing's Creoles and New Orleans Minstrel Company will appear at the opera house next Thursday and Friday evenings, April 28th and 29th. They are spoken of highly by the press.

There is a strong possibility that Dr. Rosser, of Brainerd, will move to Grand Rapids in the near future with his family, and make this their future home. Dr. Rosser is a very eminent physician, and as such would receive a cordial welcome to the village.—Grand Rapids Herald.

Council Proceedings.

At the regular meeting of the council on Monday evening the members were all present except Alderman Bain. The following claims against the city were presented and allowed:

Tribune	$23 35
C. M. Patek	6 50
F. Abear	5 00
W. H. Konans	50 50
I. U. White	13 80
N. E. Paine	7 66
R. R. Whiteley	27 00
J. H. Gibson	8 00
A. A. Graham	8 00

The bill of R. K. Whiteley for $6 was disallowed, because the council had made no contract with him for surveying electric light plant at dam.

A motion was made and carried that the matter of settling with the bondsmen of ex-City Clerk Murphy be referred back to the finance committee and city attorney with power to act.

The street committee, to whom was referred the matter of paving the streets, asked for further time which was granted.

City engineer was requested to file copy plat of sewers and connections with the city clerk.

S. Walker was granted permission to deposit sand on Laurel street, between Tenth and Bluff avenue.

Alderman F. J. Slipp was appointed chairman of the street committee.

The petition to have the dray license reduced to $5 per year was ordered placed on the table.

The petition to have an arc light placed at corner of Third and Juniper streets was referred to electric light committee with power to act.

Applications of Felix Graham, J. W. Jones, Frank Westley, J. R. Britton, F. E. Tiffany, A. Lehman, John Frankan and J. P. Saunders, for twohorse dray licenses each, were read and same ordered issued.

The clerk was instructed to write Ambrose Tighe and ascertain what he intended doing in regard to putting in new water mains.

The president appointed a committee consisting of Ald. Lagerquist, Towers and Slipp, to ascertain the compensation due the finance committee for auditing the books of the late city clerk and treasurer.

J. W. Jones was elected street commissioner on the first formal ballot, the vote being sight for Mr. Jones and one for Jno. Faulkner.

A motion was made and sustained that ten hours constitute a day's work for street employees. Moved and seconded that the foregoing motion be amended to eight hours, and the vote on motion as amended resulted as follows: Williamson, McMurtry, Fogelstrom, Ferris, Slipp, Johnson and Lagerquist voting in the negative. Towers and Titze in the affirmative. The amendment was lost and original motion carried, the aldermen voting as above.

The liquor license of L. W. Chase was transferred from Sixth street to Front street.

New liquor licenses were granted to R. R. Wise and Chas. and Henry Moberg. Council adjourned.

Do You Want Land?

Eighty acres of land, partly under cultivation, to exchange for residence property in Brainerd. The land is within a half mile of a thriving village and within two miles of one of the largest paper and pulp mills in Wisconsin. If you wish a bargain call on or address this office.

A Wonderful Success.

The Duluth Evening Herald has the following to say of a Brainerd institution:

The Workingmen's Mutual Savings Association of Brainerd, is a new institution in the West, but has been tried and proven in every case a success throughout the Eastern states. It is gotten up solely to benefit the laboring man and those who desire to save money. Any man can earn money but very few can save money after it is earned. This association will enable any man to save money. The principle on which it is built up is that of mutual aid. You pay $6 initiation fee and after that $1.50 each month. Each man who takes out a certificate and pays his monthly dues is paid $400 when his number is reached in the series. Each member is paid this amount in rotation, beginning with No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, etc. As soon as one man has been paid his $400 he is expected to take another number and begin paying in again. All lapses made of course are to the advantage of those who remain in the association and pay their dues regularly. The association is officered by perfectly reliable men known to many Duluthians, and their honesty is vouched for by a $50,000 bond with good and sufficient securities deposited with the First National Bank, of Brainerd. The organization has been growing with wonderful rapidity, and at the present growth will reach a membership of over 10,000 in the first year, thus enabling the association to pay off the first 440 members the first year. In the city of Duluth alone from fifty to 100 members are being secured daily by only two agents. Agencies are being established over the entire Northwest and are meeting with phenomenal success. Those who take membership early secure the lowest numbers and are paid off sooner. Thus all are anxious to secure the first membership. However, it would take twenty-two years nearly to pay in at $1.50 per month as much money (namely, $400) as a member takes out when his membership comes due. It is safe to say that those subscribing now will get their money with five years at the outside, paying in $90 and taking out $400. To explain the principle still further, figuring on the number we will show how long it would take No. 10,000 to get this $400. The first year we would pay off 440 and lapse 9233, which leaves 8237 unpaid at the close of first year's business, or in other words No. 10,000 is then No. 8237. The second year we pay off 440 and lapse 2076, which then leaves No. 10,000 at No. 5711. The third year we pay off 440 and lapse 1238, which leaves No. 10,000 at 3063. The fourth year we lapse 677 and pay 440, which leaves No. 10,000 at 916. This number will be paid off and lapsed during the fifth year, and if No. 10,000 has clung to the association this length of time, he will receive his $400, and will have paid into the recreation fund of the association his full limit of $75. This estimate is made on the supposition that we only keep the membership up to 10,000 certificates.

Notice.

It would confer a great favor on me if any one having a patent Invalid's Chair would rent it to me.

A. C. DEMELLES.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The Goods Are Pure.

The business of the Royal Baking Powder Company comes to us in the regular way, and is not, therefore, entitled to any special mention on that account. But the fact that other baking powder companies have been making war on this company and using all manner of unfair means to injure its business is itself an appeal to the love of fair play which is a part of the character of every good American citizen.

The fact that the Royal Baking Powder Company has succeeded far beyond any of its competitors is no doubt reason enough for some of them to say anything against the Royal Baking Powder that they can get newspapers to publish. We do not know whether that sort of thing has injured the Royal's business or not. We don't suppose it has, but of one thing we are sure, when the goods of any company have been on the market, as Royal Baking Powder has, for a whole generation, and been consumed by almost the entire population to a greater or less extent, with perfect satisfaction to a it, and without having injured the health of a single person, then it will take more than spite or jealousy to injure its business. The baking powders made by the most eminent chemists and always pronounced pure and wholesome. This, added to the experience of the millions who have used them, will stamp as absurd the attacks of other manufacturers who are prompted by jealousy of their great success to publish false statements about the Royal Company's goods.—St. Louis Journal of Agriculture.

A COLUMBUS FOUNTAIN.

Beautiful Memorial of the Anniversary to be Erected in New York.

New York city is to have a local celebration of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America, and an organization of Spanish residents of the city will then donate a bronze fountain as a memorial. The society is known as the Circulo Colon Cervantes, and as Colon is the Spanish name of Columbus the reader can easily translate the entire title. General Arturo Baldesano y Tugete, Spanish consul at New York and president of the society, will try to obtain from Havana enough old bronze cannons to furnish the material.

SENOR MIRANDA'S DESIGN.

The idea originated with Senor Fernando Miranda, a well known artist, and he drew the plan, which was accepted at once. The figures will represent Columbus, Commander Vicenti Yanez Pinzon, of the Nina, and his brother, Commander Martin Alonso Pinzon, of the Pinta, standing on the globe at the point where the discovery was made. Senor Miranda, the designer, is a native of Valencia, Spain, and was a pupil of the sculptor Pujoes, of the court of Isabella II. He was knighted many years ago, and King Alphonso XII made him a commander of the Royal Order of Isabella. He is therefore Count Miranda, but when he came to the United States in 1876 he dropped all titles, and is now plain senor.

Chickens as Miners.

There have been mines and miners and mining, but no prospector ever evolved a more ingenious story for the delectation of the "tenderfoot" than that which is related by a Butte (Mon.) correspondent of the New York Sun as a solemn fact. "A few days ago," he declares, "J. A. McConville, who lives in Montana street, killed one of his chickens for dinner, and was surprised to find a quantity of gold nuggets in its crop and gizzard. Having thirty-one chickens that had scratched in the same patch, he began postmortem prospecting on them. In each chicken he found nuggets, and the total quantity gathered had a cash value of $37. The gold was sold to the State National bank and pronounced 18 karat fine. Mr. McConville bought fifty chickens and turned them out to do scratch mining on the gold fields surrounding his hencoop. After four days he killed one chicken and dished two dollars' worth of gold from its crop."

A Scotchman's Wit.

Mr. Adam, of Aberdeen, Scotland, recently won the cash prize for the best definition of "wit." Mr. Adam's answer was: "Wit is the power to say what everybody else was just going to have said if they had happened to think of it." Many newspapers affect to consider that the best part of the whole affair is the fact that a Scotchman should have known what "wit" is. Any person at all familiar with Scotch legends and folklore ought to know that the land of the thistle has always produced men whose keen appreciation of humor has materially helped them along in life.

A Fearful Destroyer.

The uses of electricity are to be still further extended. General Sorrell is said to have invented an electrical instrument for striking a ship when fourteen miles distant from New York a blow equal in force to 50,000 foot tons.

A Good Sized "Province."

Newspaper readers who see accounts of happenings in the French Congo country are not perhaps aware that this "province" is five times the size of France, and is supposed to contain a population amounting to 8,000,000 souls.

Symptoms of decay are said to be apparent at Peking, the present capital of China, and Nankin, the ancient capital. Neither city is half so large as it was a century ago.
