Donnelly's Chances.

The greatest absurdity, to our notion, that has recently come to the surface, is the assumption, by some of our democratic exchanges, that Ignatius Donnelly will give Gen. W. D. Washburn a close run at the coming election. The proposition seems really too absurd for candid consideration. The democrats in this city are disgusted with the action of the convention that nominated him and Mr. Cantwell, a life long democrat, who was elected a delegate from this county, finding on his arrival in St. Paul, that the pins were already set to nominate Donnelly, was so disgusted that he refused even to enter the convention, and he now as flatly refuses to support the slippery, unprincipled little demagogue and inflationist. Nor is he alone in this, for nearly every member of the party in this county takes the same position, and many of them declare that they will vote for Mr. Washburn to prevent a possibility of Donnelly's election. And so it will be throughout the district—many democrats will vote for Washburn, others will not vote at all, while a very few who delight in and devour crow with avidity whenever the dish is passed to them by their leaders will swallow Donnelly without wincing.

Illustrative of the class who have swallowed the dose body and breeches, without stopping to enquire or even care why they are asked to do so—and of the inevitable result of so powerful an emetic upon their system, we clip from the Stillwater Lumberman the cuts appearing in another column, which fully explain themselves and strikingly illustrate the status of the present campaign in this district, as well.

The fact is, Mr. Donnelly is as liable to be killed by lightning on a clear day in mid winter as he is to be elected to Congress from this district.

More About the State Auditorship.

CAPTAIN MAHLON BLACK, the Democratic candidate for the office of State Auditor, served his country for four solid years in the army to the late war, as a disabled limb will testify, where he earned the title he wears to-day—that of Captain. His personal character and standing as a citizen and a gentleman have twice carried him into the office of county auditor of Hennepin county, one of the strongest Republican counties in the State, with rousing majorities, over Republican competitors, and he stands to-day before the people of the State of Minnesota—for whose rights and whose interests, with those of his fellow soldiers, he risked his life, fought and bled on the battle field—stands with a character unblemished, a record of honor and integrity, and the unquestioned ability to fill honorably and well the high office to which he aspires—asking their confidence and support. But, says one, he is a Democrat. Does that, we should like to enquire, make him any the less a gentleman? Does that sweep into oblivion his record of honor and integrity? Does that render null all our obligations for his devoted services? Does that set aside his superior ability or disqualify him to fill the office to which he has been nominated? The proposition is inconsistent with the dictates of sound reason and common sense. If he was a candidate for a national office, if he was running for an office in which his politics could influence national issues or even our State government, we should oppose his election on principle, but he is not. His duties in the office of State Auditor can only be clerical, and, to them, the only prerequisite can be ability and integrity. We ask, therefore, does not CAPTAIN BLACK, the old soldier, the honorable man, merit our highest, our proudest consideration and support? Vote for him, friends! Vote for him, neighbors! Vote for him, Republicans every-where, and thereby place the seal of your disapproval upon the too common practice, in our party conventions, of entirely disregarding the wishes of the people and the dictates of common honesty!

The Great Minneapolis Exposition evidently opened the eyes of the Pioneer Press, to the ponderous magnitude of that city, and now it adds an independent Minneapolis editorial department to its Minneapolis news department with old Thaumaturgus Col. W. S. King presiding. It is a decided improvement.

Osborn & Nettleton propose on October 1st to issue the first number of the Red River Valley News, at Glyndon, Minn. It will be republican in its political faith, but chiefly devoted to news and the N. P. country. By the way, is it not about time to revive the N. P. Editorial Association?

Owing to a pressure of other matter and business, we are obliged to omit our usual interest of our County in Colorado. It will be resumed in our next issue, however, and continued to its close.

The Princeton Union, Rush City Post and the Little Falls Transcript, all republican papers oppose Whitcomb's election, and support CAPT. MAHLON BLACK. Hurrah!

It is a curious circumstance that the Democratic candidate for congress in the Third district, cannot vote for or against himself, as he resides in another district.

HON. A. McCres, of Perham, will undoubtedly receive the republican nomination on Saturday next, for the office of State Senator from the 41st district.

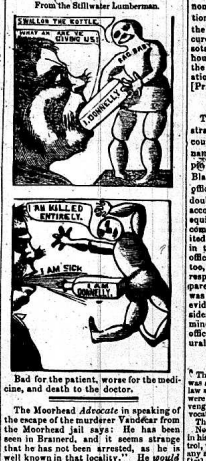
A letter from a friend at Boulder, Colorado, says a heavy frost visited that section on the 12th inst—the earliest known for years.

Chicago county took the sweepstakes at the Minneapolis Exposition.

BRAINERD TRIBUNE.

VOL. VII.—NO. 33. BRAINERD, MINNESOTA, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1878 WHOLE NO. 345.

THE DONNELLY CURE.



Bad for the patient, worse for the medicine, and death to the doctor.

The Moorhead Advocate in speaking of the escape of the murderer Vandeker from the Moorhead jail says: He has been seen in Brainerd, and it seems strange that he has not been arrested, as he is well known in that locality." He would have been arrested had the sheriff of Clay county telegraphed our sheriff, instead of notifying him by postal card. A man was seen by two or three of our citizens to crawl out from the car trucks on the arrival of the train here, but he was so covered with dust that they could not recognize him, though when three hours later Sheriff Whitney got the postal card, they recollected that the man they saw resembled Vandecar. He of course had made good his escape by that time, and though vigilant watch was kept up for twenty-four hours, day and night without cessation; and telegraph not postal card messages were sent out to intercept trains on the road, no tidings of him have since been received. It really does seem strange.

The elections in Canada on Tuesday for the Dominion Parliament, resulted in the success of the Liberal Conservatives, and the overthrow of the MacDonald dynasty—Sir John himself and his followers generally being defeated. Our neighbors are to be congratulated upon the final termination of an administration which has long submitted upon the life-blood of the confederation sinking it under an enormous debt, and which; though partially defeated before, was not entirely vanquished.

We, and three-fourths of the Republicans of Mille Lacs county are opposed to the nomination of O. F. Whitcomb, and opposed to him from principle. However, we presume the ring-screw and machine politicians will nominate him; but whether the mass of Republican voters will endorse, at the polls next November, the nominee of the minority of their party, and who would be indebted to the most corrupt element of the party, for his nomination, remains to be seen.—Princeton Union.

They will not. They will elect Capt. Mahlon Black.

We hoist the name of Mahlon Black, an honored citizen of Hennepin county, a gallant gentleman who served four years in the Union army, a man who has been twice elected auditor of Hennepin county, and a man well and favorably known to not a few of the Rum-River lumbermen. Throw politics to the dogs, in state and county elections, and elect this Black man; and in our opinion Capt. Black is the best man for the position of State Auditor.—[Princeton Union.

CAPT. BLACK—he earned his title honestly—of Hennepin, is the Democratic nominee for State Auditor. It is hardly probable that Black will be elected, but he will run ahead of his ticket eight or ten thousand votes.—[Princeton Union.

Yes, and he will be elected, too, and don't you forget it.

The Brainerd TRIBUNE (Rep.) repudiates the renomination of State Auditor Whitcomb, and hoists the name of the Democratic nominee, Capt. Mahlon Black. The TRIBUNE could not support a better man for the place.—[St. Cloud Times.

State Auditor.

Let us teach the ring politicians who propose to crowd three years more of Whitcomb down our throats, a lesson by supporting our worthy fellow Capt. Mahlon Black to the office of State Auditor.—[Brainerd Tribune.

We are agreeable to that and will do what little lies in our power to teach the rings a lesson. This seems to be the way with these matters.

The longer a man is in office as a general rule, the longer he wants to stay there, and as soon as he fairly gets settled in a good fat office, he begins to lay the wires for a continuation. This has been done a great deal too much by our State officers, and now the State Auditor, not satisfied with six years of glory, in his pine land ring operation, has effectually set up the plea and obtained the nomination for the third term. The people not immediately connected with this State land ring, are as a matter of course, opposed to a man who has swindled the State out of thousands of dollars by his conniving with the lumbermen in pine timber steals.

Capt. Black is the man we shall vote for, and there are hundreds of others in Chicago county who are just of the same opinion as ourself.—[Rush City Post.

Whitcomb Nominated but Not Elected.

It would do well enough down in Texas or Arkansas, to say that a democratic nomination was equivalent to an election, no matter what the character of the nominee is, or by what means he secured his nomination. But in Minnesota, where the churches and schoolhouses flourish, it sounds strange to hear the old stereotyped saying, that a nomination is equivalent to an election.—[Princeton Union.

Capt. Mahlon Black.

The Brainerd TRIBUNE, one of the straightest and strictest Republican county papers in the State, hoists the name of Capt. Mahlon Black, of Hennepin county, for State Apditor. Mr. Black is the Democratic nominee for that office, and his qualifications are beyond doubt. We are opposed to Whitcomb on account of his inability to discern the equity connected with the questions that come before him, his one-sided and limited view of things, and his deficiency in the public spirit which every public officer should possess. He is charged, too, with actual incompetency in other respects, but as to that we are not prepared to judge. And his nomination was secured by a lot of ringsters who evidently have something in view besides the public good, and are determined to keep him in the Auditor's office during the remainder of his natural life.—[Little Falls Transcript.

"There is no law against shooting ducks as was generally supposed there was. The game law was amended last winter and the ducks were omitted, which was "quackery" with a long sence—no doubt think.—[Fergus Falls Advocate.

The following is the law on the subject:

"No person shall sell or expose for sale or have in his possession or custody, or under his control, with intent to sell or dispose of * * * any aquatic fowl, save only between the first [1st] day of September and the fifteenth [15] day of May.—[Todd Co. Argus.

The Ely-Lowe Scandal.

Winona Herald.

If it may be permitted to moralize, one reflection demands expression. It is that in these days young girls are left entirely too much without restraint. So long as parents allow their daughters unlimited freedom to follow the dictates of their own unripe judgment, to indulge unfettered their thoughtless and oftentimes, to come when they please and go when they please, associating and flirting without limit with callow young bloods as thoughtless as themselves, or, what is worse, exposed to the malignant influence of those who have years are steeped in licentiousness, though their exterior be smooth and attractive—men who look upon trusting young girls as legitimate prey—just so long will communities frequently be shocked by revealed wrecks of youthful female virtue. We say this not with special reference to the sad occurrence above, but to show the observant know to be quite too common a fault in the training of the daughters of this age.

THE NORTHERN PACIFIC.

Sends an Exhibit to Madison Which Surpasses That of all Competing Roads in Cereal Products.

The Same to be Forwarded to Freeport, Ill.—The State Immigration Pamphlet Being Judiciously Distributed.

Commissioner J. B. Power of the Northern Pacific Land Department has made up a nice line of exhibits and sent them to Madison, Wis., State Fair, whence they will be forwarded to the Freeport, Illinois, fair and placed on exhibition there.

Since sending them to Madison, Commissioner Power has heard from that place to the effect that the Burlington & Missouri and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroads were represented, and that with the exception of an excellent display of fruits, the Northern Pacific exhibit discounted all the other roads by ten to one, especially in the matter of vegetables, wheat, corn, oats, rye and barley.

Both at Madison and Freeport, Mr. Power has taken the precaution to have on hand a large supply of the Minnesota State Immigration pamphlets and to distribute them judiciously, not promiscuously, but to parties who are seeking after information.

At the close of the three fairs at St. Paul, Madison and Freeport, he will have distributed fully five thousand of the pamphlets and all to parties in quest of the desired information. Mr. Powers' theory in regard to this business is that by combining and distributing general information in regard to the whole State, the larger will be the immigration which each section will get. He has no relish for the narrow policy of the railroad companies which simply advertise lands on their line and no further. He believes in advertising the whole State directly and indirectly and in consequence has continued to issue the State pamphlet in connection with other Northern Pacific documents, so that people who don't like the northern section can seek other localities which may possibly please them and induce them to settle there.

It is in this way that the State of Kansas has made such a grand success in the matter of immigration. All the railroads are a part of the great whole, and work together for the general good of the whole.

In view of the generally acknowledged fact that the Northern Pacific is the only region where number 1 wheat was raised this season, the people of Iowa and other localities are looking there for their supply of seed, and no doubt a large amount of the wheat raised there will be sold for seed. This is likely to create a brisk demand for the entire crop raised along the line.—[St. Paul Dispatch.

The Northwestern Tintinnabulator, of La Crosse, has suspended publication. Rev. Mr. Allen and John Allison put into the concern a great deal of hard labor and fed themselves out of pocket over $600. The Tintinnabulator was an interesting, high-toned advocate of temperance, and deserved success.—[Pioneer Press.

"Won't you come up and enjoy the eclipse with me this afternoon, Ed?" said a north side lady to her husband, who was sitting quietly reading upon him. He said he would, and at 2:30 the next morning, the front gate slammed as he took his departure, and the maiden went to her room to wipe the soot marks from her nose. The one is fond of fun in amateur astronomy."

The above is the experience of the gentleman who edits the Brainerd TRIBUNE in the absence of the proprietor. We would like to know what he was doing to make her face so sooty.—[Todd Co. Argus.

The post office department has issued a circular to postmasters to register after October 1st, 1878, all third-class matter, when requested so to do, for ten cents when postage is prepaid. Heretofore third-class matter could not be registered without paying full letter postage—six cents postage for entrance and the registry fee. Now all mailable articles of merchandise can be sent by the payment of one cent for two ounces and the registry fee. This is a liberal construction under which no article of value should be sent without being registered, when safe transit and prompt delivery can be ensured for the small fee of ten cents.

A pretty good joke, though rather severe, is now told on Mr. R. Crowe, of Sauk Rapids. It seems that "Uncle" C. Gilman was very much troubled by the inroads which certain pigs were making in his garden, and he consulted with Mr. Crowe, who is town supervisor, as to what he should do. "Shoot 'em—that's what you ought to do," said Crowe. A few days after, the hogs came again, and in conformity with the advice of the town supervisor, Mr. Gilman proceeded to "shook 'em" to the number of six good sized grunters. When the ownership of the hogs was ascertained, it was found that they all belonged to Crowe himself.—[St. Cloud Times.

We notice in our State exchanges a great deal of what, to us, seems unreasonable criticism of the manner in which visitors to the Fair were treated in St. Paul. Where a city is crowded beyond its capacity of accommodation, more or less inconvenience must necessarily follow. So far as the extortions of the hack and omnibus men are concerned, there is no excuse for it, nor is it fair to hold the city responsible. A good way to "get even" with the rascals would be for the people of the State, when arriving in St. Paul, to take their "grips sacks" in their hands, and disdaining the "hackman's offer of "twenty-five cents to any part of the city," resolutely "hoof it" to their hotels.—[St. Cloud Times.

Frightful Accident.

A little daughter of Mr. Roscoe's living about ten miles south of Wadena, was bitten by a dog on Saturday last. The brute tore off the whole side of her face, and the piece could not be found. Somerly that most some one has killed that dog.—[Wadena Tribune.

FAIR NOTES.

"HUCKLEBERRY'S" DISPLAY.

One of the finest, if not the very finest, agricultural displays in Agricultural Hall is that of our journalistic friend and altogether good fellow, Gatchell, otherwise "Huckleberry," of the Wadena TRIBUNE. Now Gatchell is not one of those who concludes that he lives in the woods because he is a denizen of the banana zone of the Northern Pacific. And so he determined, with the help of his friends and neighbors, to astonish the natives of Minneapolis with the productions of Wadena and surrounding counties. Therefore this enterprising newspaper granger packed a carpet-bag full of pumpkins and squashes, and potatoes as big as pumpkins and squashes, and specimens of all the cereals of that neighborhood and rushed down to the great exposition and opened them out at the end of the southern gallery of the Agricultural Hall, as the visitor is proceeding south.

Foolishness aside, Mr. Gatchell displayed full sheaves of cereals—amber of rye straw eight feet in height, timothy hay six feet high, with heads ten inches long—the last, product of Rev. Edmond Wright, of Woodside; thirteen varieties of potatoes, perfect beauties; one stool of winter wheat with 64 straws; wheat raised by John Morris on breaking done last Christmas (how's that for a good country), the very finest samples of barley, and a thousand other attractive features which will open the eyes of people as to that heretofore terra incognita Wadena county. The Globe congratulates Wadena county on possessing Huckleberry and Huckleberry on possessing Wadena county.—[Globe.

A Joke on Beecher.

Some way observing Mr. Beecher hanging his hat, with some pains, on a peg immediately over his berth, managed to detain him in the smoking room until all had retired, when they out and removed the hat to the peg over the berth of an ordinated lady of single proclivities. When Mr. Beecher essayed to retire he took a whisk, and every hand was prepared not to see what the row was all about, and there stood Mr. Beecher, amazed, while Mrs. Stowe exclaimed, "Oh, Henry!"—San Francisco Cor. N. Y. Times.

George Washington Revised.

"George, did you chop down the cherry tree?"

"What do you say?"

"Did you chop down the tree?"

"Ax me no questions and I'll tell you no lies."

"George, you have a hatchet."

"So's a hen."

"You chopped down that tree."

"Didn't."

"Young man, commere to me."

"What do you want?"

"To play hide and seek."

So the old man went out to seek the hide.

The scene which ensued in the woodshed beggars description. It was touching in the extreme.

ROMANCE AND REALITY.

"Here is the bed where Nellie slept,"
She turned the snowy coverlet down;
Is though the latter the ivy creeper—
What a blissful change from the heated town!

"Good night." She left me; the moonbeams
On flower-carpet and dainty bed;
I smoked and dozed and, half asleep, tried to tell
I couldn't get Nellie out of my head.

"My aunt had never a friend," I said,
"Named Nell, or Nellie, yet I am here
Seated on Nelli's, or Nellie's bed—
My clothes on Nell's or Nellie's chair.

"This I always liked that name,
The gods are propitious, and I, perchance,"
Who voted the country dull and tame,
Am here to-morrow, Nellie's guest.

"How fragrant the soap, and this ever quaint
Has the water held in which Nellie washed—
Nellie, whose sweet face haunts me so!
And the basin, too—what a pity it is mashed!

"How soft this towel! Nellie, or Nell,
How hung it here, O, Nell, O, dear, sweet girl
She is to be sure; and this brush—ah, well,
I wish I could drop my heart in a curl.

"I'e she a blonde? or is she brunette?
I'm sure to love her. Three nights of bliss
Are all I can hope for. Ah, Nell, Nell,
I should meet my fate in some way like this."

I sank on the pillows. "O dear, sweet Nell,
To think that your dear head has pressed this
And down,
And your limbs reclined here, my country belle,
One day to be queen of my house in town."

But alas! I woke from the sweet dream
That sighed through the trees the whole
night long;
I rather think it was the fleas.
Though the thought seemed wicked, and lase,
small fee of ten cents.

I looked in vain in the breakfast room
For Nell, or Nellie. She was not there.
"Where is Nell?" I said, "we were too soon!
Miss Nell has not finished her morning
prayer?"

"Nellie, come here." With cheeks aflame,
I could not raise my eyes from the floor.
But soon was the air of the sweetest dame
As Nellie, her poodle, rose in at the door.

A young lady at Fredrickton, N. B., had a narrow escape from drowning in Tuesday last she fell over a wharf and had sunk the third time, and for the bottom when a Mr. Orr put down a pole and pulled her out. The pole describes her sensation as not unpleasant, could distinctly see the people on the wharf and wondered why they did not assist her; saw the pole coming down and thought it of immense size and length; the moment it touched the water she grasped it and says she could have climbed to the moon on it. Mr. Orr says she came up the pole like a squirrel.—[St. John Telegraph.

Last month a Turk, Fein Fashu, governor of Bunjaloka, with twelve wives, children, and a great deal of money, left Vienna, and took lodgings in the Hotel Daniel. Three wives were put in a room, with a guard of two eunuchs at the door. The other wives took a whole floor to occupy the registration of the party at police headquarters. The most of the wives were in full trousers, wearing their raven black hair closely cut and dyed the little finger nails red. The eunuchs for these ladies were entitled to their personal freedom, and the German reporter naively says, "They only have to be seen to be seen." Each eunuch carries a gun on one arm and a baby on the other.

The editor of the Marshalltown (Ia.) Statesman says that, after considering the question all winter, he cannot tell the occasion every spring that the circus is immoral; but then the fill poets come along with the big pictures, and his mind changes as follows: "As we gaze at the lions, tigers and monkeys, and think that nature made all of them, we are moved to sure, and when we look at the beautiful young lady, who standing on but a blue ribbon round her waist, and one leg pointing to the sky, we think that she is high born, and think that nature made her too, just as she was, except the ribbon, we begin to lean up to the circus. But when the brass band begins to play and the elephant comes round, we begin for a front seat to get in ahead of the ministers, who always wear stove-pipe hats and won't sit down in front."

She came to the station a little late and had to make a rush for the train. When she reached her seat her hat fell off. She got it on, but it slipped off on the other side, and when she tried to straighten it up her hair came tumbling down. She put it back in place before she had reached her, and would have lost it again if her baby's taken it away from her. She reached up to put a bundle in the rack above her head, and burst the collar button off her dress before she could find one. She then dared take the out to repair the damage. Then just as she thought she had got comfortably settled down in her seat, she proceeded to juggling with enough things to load a Saratoga trunk to the month, exploded, and she nearly worked herself into fits in getting it together again. Then by the time she got her valise shut up her ticket was gone, and by the time she got the hat straight and back into its place her hair tumbled down, and she got out an shoe, got her hair twisted up and hairpinned it with a couple of hairpins, the train went off, and when she got off at New Prague she tucked the gaping valise under her arm, and tried to control her hair with both hands, with still one hand, and as she went fluttering and struggling into the depot one couldn't help thinking that it would be safer and more convenient to run her in sections and fog her against everything. I have seen this woman on several other trains, and she has never been able to get through a journey of ten miles, where she is going to give way next.—[Hawkeye.

GEN. MILES SAFE.

The official report of Gen. Miles to Gen. Sheridan regarding his recent operations with the Bannock Indians, disproves the story that he had been surrouded, and states that he surprised the hostiles with the result of 11 Indians killed, 31 prisoners, 200 ponies captured, and Capt. Vol. Infantry, in the late war, and went through many battles then, as also with the Indians since, without receiving a scratch, until this sad event. He was about 35 years of age, a splendid physician and the soul of honor and bravery.

DEFALCATION.

Irregularities are reported in Manufacturers Gas Co., of Fall River, Mass., of which Chas. P. Stickney, until within a few weeks, has been treasurer. Stickney had nearly full control of affairs. Some time ago he was asked to resign, and the fact so worked upon him that he became thoroughly prostrated, and it was feared would die. Defalcation placed at from $10,000 to $30,000. Joseph A. Baker, who examined the books, says no irregularities have been discovered although it is intimated fraud was committed.

TREASURY THIEF.

W. S. N. Wilson, assorting letter office clerk of the redemption division of the treasury department, was arrested as a defaulter. Wilson had been recommended on the 16th inst., for dismissal by the chief of his division principally on the ground of general indeficiency, The examination of his books shows that on the 9th inst., he abstracted $1,000 from a package consigned to him for delivery to the custodians of the vaults in the general order of business. Wilson has been fifteen years in the department. He admits the theft. He gave bail.

MURDER.

The preliminary examination at Deadwood, of M. L. Cauk, for the murder of Mrs. Collison has been concluded, and the accused was held without bail to await the action of the district court. A special from LaSalle, giving later news, says: The amount of the express robbery there was $14,000. The driver from whom the package was taken says three men set upon him and chloroformed and beat him insensible. Chicago detectives are in LaSalle working the case up.

Total amount of creditors claims proved, $22,720,805. Total losses to creditors of all national banks during the last sixteen years upon $500,000,000 of capital and $800,000,000 of deposits, is estimated not to exceed $6,500,000, an amount probably not equal to the losses which have fallen upon creditors of savings banks and State banks the past year.

ALARM AT WASHINGTON.

The Capital police and citizens have lodged information at police headquarters that the language made use of at a meeting on the east steps of the capitol, was of the most incendiary character. Some of the speakers advocated a raid on the United States treasury and helping themselves to the funds there. The District commissioners have made a requisition for forty sets of cavalry equipments, pistols, ammunition, etc., for the use of the police department. The commissioners have also made a requisition upon the chief of ordinance for some canteens, carbines, slugs and a quantity of carbine catridges, for the use of the District military, to be turned over to Major Hanneman, commanding the District artillery.

COLLIERY EXPLOSION.

A frightful colliery explosion is just reported at Abercorn, near Port Monmouthshire New South Wales. There were 371 in the pit. The number of dead is estimated at 280. Two of the rescued died from their burns and others are in a precarious condition. There is not the slightest hope of rescuing any more alive as the workings are very intricate and extend over three miles. So for only seven corpses have been recovered. The explosion occurred soon after noon. Those on the bank knew it by a rumbling noise and the ascent of a dense volume of smoke. All the people in the district rushed to the pit's mouth in consternation. Scenes of distress are indescribable. According to latest advices the pit is still burning and the managers are discussing the propriety of flooding it, as it seems certain that all the men are either burned to death or suffocated. Flooding will probably be delayed till all hope is abondoned.

BUTLER IN MASSACHUSETTS.

The State Democratic convention of Massachusetts was called to meet at Worcester, Sept. 17th. At the hour of meeting the advocates of Gen. Butler were found to be in the ascendent. The convention was organized among much disorder and confusion. The result was the adoption of a thoroughly orthodox and strong Democratic platform, and the nomination of the following ticket: For Governor, Benjamin F. Butler; for Lieutenent Governor, John F. Arnold, of North Adams; Secretary of State, Chas. M. Strauss, of Hingham; Attorney General, Caleb Cushing, of Newburg; Auditor, J. Boyle O'Rielly, of Boston; Treasurer, D. N. Skeelings, of Winchester. The regulatrs as they were called in contradistinction to the Butler men, bolted, and the State Central Committee called another convention to assemble in Boston Sept. 25th.

BODY SNATCHING.

Edwin French, an old and wellknown citizen of Ohio, died at the residence of his son in Willoughby, thirteen miles east of Cleveland. The funeral services were held next day and the remains interred in Willoughby cemetery. On the 27th inst., it was discovered that the grave had been robbed. Detectives were once set at work, and the body was found in a trunk underneath the floor in the Homeopathic Medical college Cleveland. The grave had been robbed between 1 and 2 o'clock at night, and the body taken to the city in a carriage and thrown into the trunk. The floor was put back and nailed down. Mr. J. E. French, son of the deceased, immediately swore out warrants, and nearly a dozen people, including the dean and members of the faculty, janitor and several students were arrested. The faculty disclaim all knowledge of the body-snatching, and say they are entirely ignorant of the whole affair.

CHICAGO JEWELRY THIEVES.

For three years the large jewelry house of N. Matson & Co. has lost now and then articles of value which could not be accounted for. Within a year they have noticed that goods have disappeared systematically and more frequently, and after shadowing their clerks without success, recently turned their attention to an old and trusted chief clerk, Frank W. Marchise. It was found that he maintained improper relations with a Mrs. Mitchell. That they frequently met at the office of Dr. V. C. Second and that there was another woman in the ring. Unbroken packages of spoons, etc., were found at various places which Matson identified, and as a result of the discovery Marchise, Mrs. Mitchell, Dr. V. C. Second and Mrs. J. F. Irwin were arrested and locked up. The amount of the stealing is about $10,000, and a considerable portion has been already recovered. All the arrested parties deny their guilt.

ATTEMPT TO BURN WAUKESHA.

A desperate attempt was made on a recent night to fire the entire village of Waukesha, Wisconsin! Four fires were started by incendiaries in as many different parts of the village, which, had they not been discovered in the nick of time, would certainly have devastated two-thirds of the entire village. The Exchange was set on fire in an adjoining vault, and when discovered was blazing away right merrily, and a kerosene lamp was discovered broken and the wood work saturated with oil. The same job was undertaken at the Mansion House, but was discovered in time to be extinguished. The Methodist church sheds near the public square, and a barn belonging to President Blair on the north side were fired, the watchman at the woolen factory discovering the latter, while the former died out itself. It is believed by many that the object of these scamps was wholesale plunder, and came very near being successful.

CONDITION OF THE CROPS.

The September returns to the Department of Agriculture at Washington give the average condition of the corn crop at 92, against 96 in August. It is slightly above the condition reported in September, 1877, which was 91. The crop held its own in the northern portion of the Atlantic slope and on the Pacific coast. It slightly improved in the States north of the Ohio, but fell off 10 per cent. in States west of the Mississippi. The Southern States as a whole fell off about 3 per cent. Of 921 counties reporting. 251 were a full average, 278 above, and 391 below. September returns indicate an average of 87 in the wheat crop against 92 in September, 1877 The reduction is mostly due to disasters to the spring wheat crop in the West. A preliminary examination of the returns of the acreage indicate that the breadth shown in 1878 was about one-sixteenth greater than in 1877. This will more than compensate for the loss from decline in condition, and may probably bring up the yield to the estimate of 400,000,000 bushels.

FUNERAL OF THE GIPSEY QUEEN.

Matilda Stanley, known as the Gipsy queen and recognized as such by all the tribes throughout the United States, was buried at Wooaland cemetry in Dayton, Ohio on the 14th inst. The queen was a woman of great influence among her race. She died in Vicksburg last winter and her body was embalmed and preserved until the present time for the funeral. The cemetery was filled with people, visitors from the surrounding country It is estimated that over 25,000 people were in attendance. Representatives of prominent gipsies from all parts of the United States and Canada have been assembling in the city for the occasion. The funeral procession was a mile in length. The ceremony was conducted by a minister of the United Brethron church, and did not differ from that of a Christian funeral. At the close an affecting scene occurred, the children of the queen throwing themselves on the grave, and filling the air with lamentations. Dayton has been for some time the headquarters of the gipsies in this country, and the king, husband of the queen, lives near the city, and owns a large tract of ground.

HIGHWAYMEN.

Advices from Cheyenne, W. T., state that the north bound coach was stopped, on the 14th inst., by six armed men. Two passengers were aboard—one a lady, who was unmolested, and Mr. Goldsworthy, from whom they took $10 in money, but returned it on being informed that he was a laboring man. After robbing the mail sacks the coach was allowed to proceed north. Meeting the down coach, it was warned. When the down coach reached the place of the robbery it was halted, and while the robbers were engaged in going through the pockets of the two passengers and the mail sacks, the two messengers, who were riding about 200 yards in the rear of the coach came up, dismounted and crept within fifteen yards of the robbers, when they were commanded to halt and fired upon. The fire was returned and one of the robbers fell dead. The others retreated to the gulch, keeping up a steady fire on the messengers, who returned it, but dare not leave their positions. The coach meantime had driven on, and after waiting sometime and seeing that they were not strong enough to dislodge the robbers, the messengers mounted their horses and rejoined the coach, leaving the mail lying in the road near the body of the dead robber. The messengers are confident that two of the robbers who got away are badly wounded.

Fashions for Feminine Feet.

Paris Correspondence San Francisco Bulletin.

The low and sandal slipper is much worn by ladies here, and the display of ankles is one of the most attractive features of the Exposition. Heels are still high and often glittering with brass tips. There is a great variety of design in foot wear. It varies from a mere sole with barely two inches of toe-covering to the delicate boot buttoning far up in the clouds—of lace. Colors are also variegated as form. There are black, bronze, lavender, white and pale yellow. Canvass slippers banded with leather are much worn. Stockings no longer hide their light under bushels. But we see also the striped stocking amla barber-pole; the perpendicular striped stocking, black and white; the stocking with a brilliant boquet interwoven above the ankle; the diamond-figured stocking. As fashion prevails at present, the female foot has become the rival of her head, and male dilema is whether to look down or up. With this development of style, all former sensitiveness as to the display of the walking anatomy seems to have deserted the female heart, and now as they recline on chairs and benches about the grounds young women who wear costly stockings and slippers do not waste their sweetness under dimity. The sand and gravel of the walks on the grounds is of a most aggravating and troublesome character for low shoes, and it is not uncommon to see ladies retiring into corners, where a hasty removal of a delicate triumph of the shoe maker's art shows that some little "grabbel stones" have intruded themselves in tender quarters, as the Dutchman remarked when he poured the snuffers out of his boot, after working in the field all day.

SOLD HIS WIFE'S CORPSE.

He Married Her for Her Money, Kept Her in Want Until She Died in Despair, and Then Sold Her Body for Whisky and Cigar Money.

[Chicago Times.]

A narrative illustrating the depth of depravity to which man may descend was recently related to a Times reporter. The story opens in an interior county of Illinois, where resides a farmer whose broad acres of fertile prairie and sleek herds place him and his family above the knowledge of want. Five years ago this family circle was adorned by a daughter, fair beyond comparison with her young associates, and rarely accomplished for one whose life had been spent upon a farm. To this family appeared, about the time indicated, a young man of pleasing manners and fashionable attire, claiming to be in good circumstances in Chicago. His account of himself was not entirely satisfactory to the farmer, who noticed with alarm a growing fondness in the glances his daughter cast upon the smooth-spoken stranger. Parental opposition in this case, as in so many similar instances, only added fuel to the flame of kindled love, and the young couple found means of carrying on clandestine meetings, until one day the rash girl agreed to

AN ELOPEMENT.

When the arrangements were all complete the daughter wrote a letter to her parents telling them she could not live apart from the man she loved, and had, much as she was pained to give them sorrow, determined to cast her lot with his. This note she left in her chamber, and departed with the young man at night. The father was a man of stubborn mold, and the "bless you, my children," on which the young folks had calculated, came not when a paper containing a notice of their marriage was sent to him. The old man's suspicions had been too well founded. His daughter's husband was of dissolute habits and without means, and his motive for marrying was the expectation that the old man would "give down" liberally to keep his daughter from want. This hope proved futile, as the father refused to hold any communication with his wayward child and her worthless husband. The latter was soon driven to extremities for the money necessary to keep him in liquor and cigars, and it was not long before he more than hinted to his wife that it would be necessary for her to do sewing or what other work could be got to help out with the family expenses. The poor woman did what she could, meekly enduring the ill-usage of her brutal spouse, sewing often the greater part of the night, while he pocketed her earnings and left her to suffer hunger and cold.

TWO CHILDREN WERE BORN

to them in the poor apartments they occupied in the northwestern part of this city. Each of these but added to the woes instead of increasing the joys of the mother, and when a few weeks ago she became aware that a third little one was in prospect, her courage completely failed her, and she determined upon a most hazardous course. She took a powerful emenagogue, which failed of its purpose. A few days later she repeated the dose, and brought on a miscarriage, accompanied by extremely dangerous symptoms. In the intervals of her pain she dictated to a kind neighbor a letter to her mother, stating her wrongs and the act which she had committed, and imploring her to take care of the two children soon to be left mother and already worse than fatherless. Through some oversight this letter was not mailed until after the death of the victim of a too confiding nature. A physician had been called in, who, for charity, did what he could to relieve her suffering, but

COULD NOT SAVE HER LIFE.

The husband showed some indications of grief, but consoled himself with drink as best he could. The corpse lay in the house for a day and a night, kindly guarded by the neighboring women. Toward the second night they inquired of the widower what disposition he intended to make of the remains, and were told that evening that an expressman would come for the corpse for burial, as he was unable to pay for a hearse. After nightfall the expressman came and carted away the remains. The next day the farther of the dead woman arrived, having learned of her sad fate, and asked where his daughter was buried, that he might have the body removed to the country cemetery, near her old home. His inquiries were answered evasively for a time by the wretched creature whose bad treatment had driven his wife to an act which brought about her death, but being pressed and threatened with arrest if he refused to tell, he acknowledged that he had to the physician who attended her in her last illness in consideration of the petty sum of $5. The farmer's grief and rage knew no bounds, and it was with difficulty he could be prevented from wreaking vengeance upon the scoundrel before him. Finally he set about recovering the corpse, in which he succeeded and had it conveyed home and decently interred.

DISPOSED OF THE CORPSE

AN ALASKAN TRAGEDY.

An Indian Brave Kills Another Indian and His Wife, and is Immediately Executed by His People.

[Correspondence San Francisco Chronicle.]

KLAWOCK CANNERY, Prince of Wales Island, Alaska, Aug. 12.—A terrible tragedy was enacted at the Indian village at this place a few days ago. An Indian was sitting alone in his wigwam, meditating perhaps upon the departed glories of his race, or, more likely, upon the increasing obstacles in the way of obtaining a supply of the inspiriting "hochenoo," when a young married woman entered from a neighboring lodge, and, thinking the brave was asleep at an unreasonable hour, she gave him a smart push, which threw him over against somebody or other which cut his face, causing a flow of blood. The brave muttered a curse, and the woman quickly retreated, thinking but little of the accident, for an accident it was, so far as the trifling injury went. Nothing further transpired that evening; the damaged warrior remaining indoors nursing his anger. The following morning, when the woman and her husband were quietly eating their breakfast of dried salmon, and anticipating no harm, the wounded man walked into their hut, raised his rifle and sent a bullet crashing through the skull of the man. He then rushed upon the woman, whipped a huge knife from his belt, ripped her open, and leaving husband and wife dead upon the floor, quietly walked back to his own cabin and closed and barred the door. The murder created a violent commotion in the Indian village as well as in the campery. An Indian council was held and a death sentence passed upon the murderer. Luckily for the cause of justice in such cases, there are no courts of appeal in this region to retard the prompt and merited execution of a red-handed murderer, but in this case there was the barrier of a strongly-barred door, with a desperate and well-armed man on its inner side.

Urgent appeals were made to the criminal to open the door and come out and be shot; all of which he respectfully declined. Fearing that he would escape in the night, a close watch and guard were kept upon the hut, the whole settlement being on the qui vive all night, expecting the shooting to come off every moment. At 10 the next morning the captain announced that he was ready. He unbarred his door and stalked out, gorgeously robed in a flaming red blanket, his head resplendent with pitch and feathers, and his rifle upon his shoulder. Giving a few directions to his executioners, he stepped forward a few paces, whirled through a war-dance, fired his rifle into the air, and fell dead, pierced by twenty bullets. As the Indian code exacts a life for a life, the friends of the murdered woman demanded the sacrifice of a woman belonging to the family of the murderer—a brutal proposition which the cannery men determined should not be permitted, so they bought the woman off with blankets and hochenoo. The remains of the murderer and his victims were cremated, and Indian life resumed its usual monotonous routine.

IT LOOKS SUSPICIOUS.

The Arraignment of Rev. Herbert H. Hayden for the Murder of Mary E. Stannard at Madison, Conn.

[New Haven Special (Sept. 18) to Chicago Times.]

There were not so many people at the trial of Rev. Herbert H. Hayden to-day, in Madison, for the murder of Mary E. Stannard, but those who were there experienced a sensation. When Judge Harrison reached Guilford station in the morning, on the way to the trial, he was handed a telegram from Prof. W. C. White, of Yale, saying that he had found human blood on one blade of Hayden's knife. Prof. White, who has had practice in the use of the microscope for thirty years, and is professor of pathology and use of the microscope in Yale medical school, was on the way and he was the first witness. Counsel had hot words about the knife, the State demanding that Prof. White should keep it until further orders, and the defense asking the justice to order it into the court's hands, so that they could handle it, and commit Prof. White for contempt if he did not give it up. As Prof. White showed that he wished to examine other parts of the knife, the justice ruled that it should remain in his custody. "What have you found upon the smaller blade?" asked Judge Harrison.

"Blood," said the expert.

"Human or animal blood?" said the judge.

"I think it is human blood," said the expert; and there was a stir in the audience. Hayden's face turned pale, and then a cold hard look took the place of his former confidence. The knife was taken from Hayden the day he was arrested. Prof. White said he could testify that human blood was on the blade with as much certainty as ever he had been able to in any similar case. "I have not taken the handle apart," said he, "or examined the whole of the small blade or any of the large blade, but I have found human blood." He then gave a detailed report of his experiments and the results. He then found a fibre of wood on the blade, and a fibre not of wood. Working with a solution of sulphate of soda with caustic potash added, and a microscope of three hundred diameters, he took from the notch used to open the blade, first nineteen and then nine corpuscles of blood. He made a similar examination of stains on the stone which is supposed to have been the weapon, and the girl's bloody sunbonnet. In the three cases the corpuscles were the same in appearance and average diameter. He has no doubt but that the blood on the stone is human. He explained at length the reasons for his opinion. The blood on the knife is nearer to human blood than any other blood except that of the monkey or ape. He will spend two days more on the knife, and will examine the blood found under Mary's body. He had examined the throat wound, and he said Hayden's knife was such a one as the wound was probably made by. A skillful chemist has examined parts of the body, and proved that no rape or other coition took place. During a long cross examination concerning the difference between the blood of animals and men, he said he could not tell whether the corpuscles came from a man or child, or how long they had been on the knife; but with enough corpuscles to get a good average of diameters he could be morally certain whether it was the blood of a man or an animal. A good deal of time was spent in establishing the history of the knife after the sheriff took it from Hayden, who had given it to him when asked for it without objection or agitation. An effort was made to get from Dr. E. L. Bailey, of Middletown, a statement that Hayden asked his advice concerning women's troubles just before the murder, but he said what Hayden said to him referred only to Hayden's family. He availed himself of a physician's privilege, and refused to tell what was said; also to answer a question whether anything was said about pregnancy or suppression of menses. Owing to the ruling concerning Mary's declaration nothing could be got out of Mrs. Jane Studley, at whose house Mary was employed just before the murder, except that the girl believed she was pregnant, and was much depressed for that reason. Mrs. Studley gave her own reasons for believing she was in such condition, but was not allowed to say in court what Mary told her, which was that Hayden was the cause of her trouble, and that she wanted to home so that he could take care of her. The rest of the testimony was mainly from those who went into the woods and brought the body to her father's house, and concerning Hayden's actions at that time, and how he spent the time the afternoon of the murder. He had hold of the head in carrying the body, and was one of those who favored the suicide theory then. It was shown that he left his house at 2 P. M., going toward his swamp, and returned at 4 P. M. When a boy came and told him and a neighbor of the murder he went at once to the spot. No witness could testify to any peculiar language or action on his part except Andrew Hazlett, who met him the next morning. Hayden asked him if anyone was suspected, and he said some one was. Hayden at once went away without asking who was suspected. Several testified as to the possibility of Hayden going the afternoon of the murder from his swamp to the place where Mary was murdered without being seen, and it was not made very plain whether he could have done so or not. To-night Hayden's guards will be increased in number, and he will be watched much closer hereafter. A little testimony will be taken to-morrow, and then adjournment until Tuesday.

SILVER MOUNTAIN GAMBLERS.

Just An Idea of How the Game Goes On At Virginia City.

[Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.]

Since the recent healthy rise in stocks the spirit of gambling seems to have taken an unusually strong hold on the community. For months past the metaphorical tiger his been lying in his lair in a sort of half-dormant state, as if troubled with a torpid liver. During the past two weeks, however, the gamblesome gentry who hunt for big game have invaded his retreat, and he is now on all fours, gnashing his teeth and thrashing the jungle brush savagely with his tail. On Thursday afternoon there was a stiff game over the International saloon. The first man who attracted any attention was an old San Francisco sport, who, after a few preliminary moves, began to prod the "tiger" up with bets stacked to the limit all over the table.

"That's Old Moses from 'Frisco," said a looker on, "and when he gets started you'll see the fur fly."

The man was right, for in a few minutes Old Moses closed with his antagonist in dead earnest by inquiring of the dealer if he could be allowed to raise the limit to $100. The dealer graciously allowed the privilege, and Moses lost several hundred dollars in a few turns, at which he asked if he could raise the limit again, and, obtaining the kind permission of the dealer, was soon playing up to $200 a bet, being sometimes $1,000 or so ahead and sometimes so much behind. Several other parties soon slid into the game, betting up to the limit and creating considerable excitement, until there was such a crowd about the table that those on the outer edge of the spectators could only now and then get a sight of the dealer's bald head. One player drew out $1,000 when he left. [illegible] a stranger came in, made a few four-bit bets and then surprised the dealer by stacking a pile of $20 pieces in front of him and playing up to the $100 limit. He won heavily all the afternoon and, coming back flushed with victory in the evening, lost his luck and was badly mangled by the tiger. To-day the game is doing a heavy business, and men who play there are expected to do so on a gold basis. Red and blue chips are the rule, all of which is considered good, indicating that business is picking up and money is getting considerably easier than it has been for many months.

Earth's Lone Children.

[Detroit Free Press.]

A boy, not over eleven years old, whose pinched face betrayed hunger, and whose clothing could scarcely be called by the name, dropped into a carpenter-shop on Grand River avenue the other day, and, after much hesitation, explained to the foreman;

"We want to get a grave-board for ma. She died last winter, and the graves are so thick that we can't hardly find hers no more. We went up last Sunday, and we come awful near not finding it. We thought we'd git a grave-board, so we wouldn't lose the grave. When we thought we'd lost it Jack he cried, and Bud she cried, and my chin trembled so I could hardly talk!"

"Where is your father?" asked the carpenter.

"Oh, he's home, but he never goes up there with us, and we shan't tell him about the board. I guess he hated ma, for he wasn't home when she died, and he wouldn't buy no coffin nor nothing. Sometimes when we are sittin' on the door-step talking about her, and Jack and Bud are cryin', and I'm rememberin' how she kissed us all afore she died, he says we'd better quit that or we'll get what's bad for us. But we sleep upstairs, and we talk and cry in the dark all we want to. How much will the board be?"

The carpenter selected something fit for the purpose, and asked:

"Who will put it up at the grave?"

"We'll take it up on our cart," replied the boy, "and I guess the grave-yard man will help us put it up."

"You want the name painted on, don't you?"

"Yes, sir; we want the board white, and then we want you to paint on that that she was our ma, and that she was forty-one years old, and she died the second of November, and that she's gone to Heaven, and that she was one of the best mothers ever was, and that we are going to be good all our lives and go up where she is when we die. How much will it all cost, sir?"

"How much have you got?"

"Well," said the boy, as he brought out a little calico bag and emptied its contents on the bench, "Bud drawed the baby for the woman next door and earned twenty cents; Jack he weeded in the garden and earned forty cents, and he found five more in the road; I run of errands and made kites and fixed a boy's cart and helped carry some apples into a store, and I earned sixty-five cents. All that makes 130 cents, sir, and pa don't know we've got it, 'cause we kept it hid in the ground under a stone."

The carpenter meant to be liberal, but he said:

"A grave-board will cost at least three dollars."

The lad looked from his little store of metals to the carpenter and back, realized how many weary weeks had passed since the first penny was earned and saved, and suddenly walked out:

"Then we can't never, never buy one, and ma's grave will get lost."

But he left the shop with tears of gladness in his eyes, and when he returned yesterday little Bud and Jack were with him, and they had a cart. There was not only a head-board, but one for the foot of the grave as well, and painter and carpenter had done their work with full hearts, and done it well.

"Ain't it awful nice—nicer than rich folks have!" whispered the children, as the boards were being placed on the cart: "won't the grave look nice, though, and won't ma be awful glad."

Ere this the mother's grave has been marked, and when night comes the three motherless ones will cuddle close together and whisper their gratitude that it can not be lost to them, even in the storms and drifts of winter.

How the Tyrolese Love and Fight.

There is a pretty Alpine hut inhabited in the summer by the object of his affections. That solitary life is one that could only be made endurable by habit, iron nerves, and absolute indifference to danger. The girl lives alone among her cattle. She seldom sees a living soul, except her fellow-servant who brings her the fortnightly supplies, or some surly keeper who is sure to suspect her of being in league with his enemies the poachers. "She has to tackle the vicious bull single-handed; she has to tame the cow—no longer the docile creature that would come when she called her name, since her calf has been taken away from her." She has to protect herself and her frail habitation and her charges against snow-storms, thunder-storms, hurricanes and swollen torrents. One can fancy how she looks forward to a pleasant visit of any kind, above all to the visit of a lover. Yet it is significant of Tyrolese self-restraint under any circumstances that the pair to all appearances are absolutely undemonstrative, unless for what may be read in their eyes. She does not even offer her admirer her hand, nor does he seem to expect it. Yet should there be rival suitors, and if the young woman is a flirt, it will be seen that his feelings are the fiercer for being suppressed, and affairs are unlikely to be settled without bloodshed.

The very indoor amusements of the Tyrolese are rough and, even savage, though they seldom bear malice for anything that may happen. A writer and traveler tells of a friendly struggle in an inn-parlor, where a couple of companions at a drinking bout interlocked the middle finger of their right hands, resting the elbows on the table, and struggled to drag each other over. A muscle gave way under the strain and one of them was hopelessly maimed for life; yet, when the first sharp burst of pain was deadened and the finger was dressed, the sufferer gave his hand to the winner; and they ended the evening amicably as they had began it. So at the rifle matches, they show the same inflexible firmness of nerve and body. We took a friend to one of them who was inclined to depreciate these performances. The cynically disposed spectator changed his opinion altogether when he saw the marksmen at work. He remarked afterwards that, "had he not seen it with his own eyes he never would have believed that human muscle and nerves could remain so rigid and apparently motionless." And the shooting is the more admired that the weapons are clumsy and antiquated. The usual range is 150 yards, and he has counted five consecutive shots in which "five marksmen, taken at haphazard, firing one after the other, hit each a mark the size of a sixpence." Such feats are the more astonishing if we consider that the marksman has no rest either for his body or the unwieldy rifle.

Jesse Pomeroy has made another attempt to escape from the Massachusetts State prison, his second within a few weeks.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

Nameless.

The summer sun is on the trees
And n t a path is shady;
You sit within the porch to read,
A very dainty lady.
And is't a poem makes you grave,
Or just an old love-story
Of maiden bright, and valiant knight
Who rides away to glory?

I know the kind of story well:
The maiden's hair is golden,
The knight wears armor as they did
In days we now call olden.
They make their vows by moonlight, dear
In language rather stilted,
And then she pines alone for months,
And wonders if she's jilted.

But he comes gaily back, to find
She is of maids the truest,
And lovlier far than maidens are
With evening eyes the bluest—
Not lovlier, sweet, than you to-day,
With sunshine on your bower,
A leafy nook, in which you look
The very fairest flower.

Would I might read the story, too,
And chat with you about it;
Perhaps it's just as well I can't—
Indeed, I do not doubt it.
A pretty picture, dear, you make,
And in my heart I'll frame it;
I do not know what your call'ed,
And so I cannot name it.

THE FIRST STEAMBOAT VOYAGE.

Fulton's Trip up the Hudson from New York to Albany in 1807.

Three score and three years have rolled by since Fulton died, at the age of forty-nine, eight years after the trial trip of the Clermont on the Hudson river, from New York to Albany—the first practical demonstration that steam could be applied to the propulsion of vessels with entire success. Of those who enjoyed the privilege of being on the Clermont's deck before the start, during the trip or just after the arrival at Albany, there is but one alive, and he was carried in his mother's arms at the time, being only two years old. His personal remembrance of the event, of course, does not amount to much, but he has nevertheless a store of information concerning the trip, not in the possession of nobody else, for as soon as he became old enough to realize the importance of the matter he naturally sought with more assiduity than a person less directly interested would exhibit for facts pertaining to the occasion. The gentleman is Rev. Frederick Reynolds Freeman, a Baptist clergyman, of Illinois, now, with his wife and children, on a visit to this city. Mr Freeman is in his seventy-third year, white haired, but fresh-looking and vigorous.

"The event is like a dream to me," says Mr. Freeman. "Probably my memory would now be unable to reach it but for the constant rehearsals of the scenes and incidents made to me in my youth. These vividly impressed the whole upon my mind, and together with my faint recollections of the occasion left a more faithful picture than unassisted tradition or history could paint upon a memory less allied to the circumstances.

"The first steam packet (of 140 feet keel and 19 1-2 feet beam) was trim and handsome enough, excepting the boilers, machinery and smokestack, which were crude, cumbrous and of extremely formidable appearance. The side wheel, too, was a clumsy affair, uncovered and with twelve huge paddles, held in their place by a ring half way between their extremities and the hub, that sent water splashing upon the deck with every revolution. The top of the smokestack was about thirty feet above the deck—nearly as high as the two masts, from the rear one of which floated the stars and stripes.

"Hours before she started a great multitude had assembled along the wharfs to witness the expected inglorious ending of what was generally known as 'Fulton's folly.' Cries of 'God help you, Bobby!' 'Bring us back a chip of the North Pole!' 'A fool and his money are soon parted!' etc., were frequent, loud and annoying. Fulton, however, knew that the crowd were sincere in their ridicule, and with a confident smile, went on superintending preparations for the start, as if he knew that triumph would presently more than overbalance the sneers, jibes and cat-calls of the vulgar, and the pitying manners of the more refined. Smoke issues from the stack; the hawser is drawn in; the side-wheel quivers; it slowly revolves; Fulton's own hand at the helm turns out the bow; he is pale, but still confident and self possessed; the Clermont moves out into the stream, the ponderous machinery thumping and groaning, the wheel frantically splashing and the stack belching like a volcano; but the Clermont steadily moves; all aboard swing their hats in the air, and give a cheer that is immediately taken up by the entire multitude on land; the Pennsylvanian has triumphed, and the hitherto incredulous and mocking populace of New York are the first to do him honor; the crowd remain cheering him on the piers until the Clermont is out of sight up the Hudson."

Mr Freeman says that the boat arrived at Albany on September 17, thirty-six hours after starting from New York. It had not been continually in motion, the party having stopped at the residence of Chancellor Livingston on the way up. The speed was at the rate of five miles an hour. The appearance of the strange vessel as she steamed up the river had a remarkable effect, even in day time, upon the crews of craft passing by, for comparatively few of the skippers coming down could, in those days of slow mail and no telegraph, have been prepared to encounter such an oddity; but at night the Clermont spread consternation and terror on all sides. It was very dark, and the fires were fed with dry, white pine wood, which, when stirred, would send up columns of flame and sparks from the mouth of the tall stack. This apparent volcano, moving steadily through the darkness up the middle of the river and accompanied by the rumbling and groaning of the hard-laboring machinery, was well calculated to strike terror into the hearts of sailors on the sloops and other craft coming down with grain and general farm produce, who had never heard of any motive power for vessels except wind, and who withal, were extremely superstitious.

"My father and others told me," says Mr. Freeman, "that whole crews prostrated themselves upon their knees and besought Divine Providence to protect them from the horrible monster that was marching on the tides and lighting up its pathway by its fires."

When the members of the Freeman family went aboard the Clermont, upon its arrival at Albany, Mrs. Freeman observed a workman emerging from the engine room—a place very suggestive to her of the infernal regions—carrying in his hands a ladle filled with molten lead. With this he proceeded to ston up holes whose presence here and there in the rude machinery was indicated by escaping steam. Captain Freeman then learned that the workmen had been busily employed doing the same thing ever since the Clermont had left New York. The people of Albany had been apprised of the arrival in advance, and the whole town turned out to receive Fulton and his steamboat, giving them an enthusiastic reception. After a short stay the Clermont returned to New York, making the trip in thirty-four hours.—Philadelphia Times.

The Long and the Short of It.

"'Tis the curious-est thing!"

Along in the early spring, when the plow had turned the moist brown earth open to the sun, Mother Crinkle's heart was stirred within her. The oddest little woman she. It was as if she had exhaled; and all left was a trim, scant dress, with a crook in the back, a tidy neckerchief and a funny stick-up cap. Only under the cap was a live, sweet face, and under the kerchief was a live, sweet heart; else how could it have stirred within her when the earth was new?

For scores of years, every single year, when this strange old planet had whirled around into its spring-time, Mother Crinkle had dug and hoed and raked over her beloved garden-patch, and drawn her seed bags from the topmost self, and had sown and planted the seeds in the hills and straight rows waiting. And then had watched and cared for, and weeded and watered, and guarded from bug and beetle, until at last, when the strange old planet had slipped into its autumn, everything was grown and ripened, and she gathered and garnered the roots and the fruits of it all.

Then she folded her hands and was glad. And the garden-earth was glad, because it wanted to rest.

"'Tis the curious-est thing," she said.

It was an autumn day. Fair upon the hills in the sunlight stood the sheaves of corn, finished and waiting. Piles of red-cheeked apples lay under the trees; a hundred yellow pumpkins were tumbled in the fence corner; pears dropped now and then from the bent boughs; purple grapes hung heavily from the vine; lovely, idle clamistis was one wreath of plumes; creeper clung tenderly to the old wall, its five-fingered leaves full of scarlet and amber and crimson and gold; an army of golden-rod hedged the lane, nodding its crests in the wind; the great elm above hung out a banner or two; while at its feet the astors stood ready to grieve out their stary blue eyes. Everything, like the corn, was finished and waiting.

Even Mother Crinkle's busy hands were stayed, or she would never have paused to say, "Tis the curious-est thing."

Mother Crinkle sat in the door. As she spoke, Joey, the mottled cat, rubbed fondly against her; and Shep, the dog, lazily winked off a fly and looked up into her face; and the chickens stopped to listen, and the boy Ned turned from his Jack-o'-lantern to hear; while the maiden, leaning against the fence, turned her graceful young head. For all wanted to know what was curious to Mother Crinkle, as she sat looking down across her garden-beds. And she told them.

"Last spring, dears, I planted that bed with seeds—the costliest seed in all the seed-book, with the greatest, longest name and the beautifulest picture to look at. Well, I looked and looked an' never a seed of 'em all came up. An' I says to myself: All my care has been for naught! But by and by—what do you think, dears? Some how, by hook or by crook (how the clouds only know—I don't), one single squash seed had got into my nice ground, and it came up, and it grew, and it grew, and grew, till it spread all over everything and went over the fence-top besides. Then it blossomed, and the squashes set an' set; and then they grew, until I thought they would burst themselves. And there I have now a family of twelve squashes, as big as ever you saw and as yellow as butter, all a settin' in their green leaves. An' nobody ever asked 'em to come! So you see, my children, how the first is last and the last first; an' there ain't no knowin' how things will turn out. An' it is the curious-est thing in all creation how the Lord gives an' takes, and helps an' hinders; and that is the long is the long and the short of the whole matter."

And Mother Crinkle laughed a little mellow laugh, that almost had a tear in it.—The Independent.

A Sea-sick Frenchwoman.

I was not the only passenger on board the Sahara, but I was the only male, and the only valid one. The other was the wife of the third officer of a Messageries steamer on the Algiers, Bona, and Tunis Line, who had come out to Africa to see her husband, and was now returning to her mother at Soulon. She was a poor delicate little woman, shrinking as a sensitive plant; and she should never have gone to sea at all. I had met her at the hotel at Oran the day before we left, and she was then sick with the fear of being sick. So soon as ever she got on board she made up her mind for the worst; went straight to bed; refused all nourishment save some hideously nauseous tisane which Socrate brewed for her hot and in a tin can, (which by its odor seemed once to have held the oil used in lubricating marine engines) and began to squall most dismally. She squalled almost without intermission for nine days and nights. Stay—while we were in harbor at Malaga, Cartagena, and Valentinia, she only uttered piteous yelps of "O! ma mere, ma mere!" I don't think she was very sea-sick physically. There was no stewardess on board; so the poor little woman had the whole ladies' cabin to herself, and used to roll about it in the most alarmingly gymnastic manner. I scarcely think that the Doctor paid her so much attention as he should have done; in fact, our medico more than once expressed his opinion that the best treatment for her would be un bon bouillon, un bon verre de vin de Bordeaux, et une bonne paire de gifles. The administration of the soup and the wine seemed feasible enough; but it was less easy to discern how sea sickness could be cured by boxing the patient's ears.—Sala, in Belgravia.

Faithful to His End.

Prof. Brewer, of Yale College, told this droll story in a recent lecture:

A Connecticut dog had suffered an injury to his tail which would not repair itself. His owner believed that an amputation of the extremity would produce a fresh wound, which would easily and quickly heal. He gave orders to have the operation performed as humanely as possible, and it was done by a servant with an axe on a block. Judge of the astonishment of the owner when the dog presently appeared before him, carrying the excided member in his mouth, and laying it down at his feet, as if to say, "See what has been done to my tail!" Having thus presented his case, he carried the fragment out and buried it. Shortly after, he repeated the operation, as if to emphasize the treatment he had suffered. Finding that he made but little impression upon his master, he repeated it again, and then abandoned his claim for indemnification. "You see," said Prof. Brewer, "he was faithful to the end."

A Mystified Colonel.

This humorous story is from a French paper: The colonel, a rigid martinet, is sitting at the window of his room, when, looking out, he sees a captain crossing the barrack yard towards the gate. Looking at him closely, he is shocked to observe that, the rules and regulations to the contrary notwithstanding, the captain does not cary a sword.

"Captain!" he calls from the window; "Hi, captain; step up to my room for a moment, will you?"

The captain obeys promptly, borrows a sword of the officer of the guard, the guard-room being at the end of the stairs, and presents himself to the colonel in irreproachable tenue.

The colonel is somewhat surprised to see the sword in its place, and, having to invent some pretext for calling his subordinate back, says, with some confusion, "I beg your pardon, captain, but really I've forgotten what it was I wanted to speak to you about. However, it can't have been anything very important; it'll keep. "Good morning."

The captain salutes, departs, returns the sword to the owner and is making off across the barrack-yard, when he again comes within the range of the colonel's vision.

The colonel rubs his eyes, stares, says softly to himself, "How in the deuce is this? Blame it, he hasn't a sword to his waist!" then calls aloud, "Captain! Ho, captain! one moment, please."

The captain returns, borrows the sword again, mounts the stairs and enters the colonel's presence. His commanding officer stares at him intently; he has a sword, he sees it, he hears it clank.

"Captain," he stammers, growing very hot, "it's deuced ridiculous, you know, but—ha! ha! I'd just remembered what I wanted to say to you—and now—ha! ha!—it's gone out of my head again. Funny, isn't it? Ha! ha! ha! Losing my memory. Never mind. I'll think of it and write you. Good morning."

The captain salutes, departs, returns the sword to the owner and makes for the gate. As he crosses the barrack-yard, the colonel calls his wife to his side and says, "See that officer out there?"

"Yes."

"Has he got a sword on?"

The colonel's wife adjusts her eye-glass upon him, scans him keenly and says, "He hasn't a taste of a sword

The colonel—"That's just where you fool yourself! He has!"

A Tin-Clad Dog.

In these times of mad dogs, one which got his head into a tin jar a few nights ago at the residence of W. T. Chandler, Beaver Valley, Del., was the maddest of all, but happily he was not mad from an attack of hydrophobia. Spooking around Mr. Chandler's back yard, he found in an open summer kitchen a tall tin jar, with something in the bottom which made him thrust his head in a considerable distance to reach the palatable morsel at the bottom, which we believe, was potato yeast. Probably not from the effects of the yeast, but from some cause, the dog's head from the nose to behind the ears grew so large that the can persisted upon remaining on his head. When the dog found that he was fairly caught and not being able to howl himself, he commenced a series of gymnastics that made more noise than half a dozen dogs. He tugged at the can with his feet, he snorted and sneezed and would have growled if he could; he rolled over on his back, stood upon his hind feet, and shook himself, but that can was "thar" and he could not remove it. Taking a cruise around the yard he jabbed the big end of his tin elongation against the yard fence, jammed through a bunch of dahlias, swept down a swath through the potato patch, and emerging to the onion bed he took a roll in it, and comming back to the open-kitchen again he sent the breakfast table hors de combat, legs upwards. By this time Mr. Chandler had so far recovered from the tears ingendered by the terrible racket below, that he ventured from his bed to see what was the matter. Opening the kitchen door, the dog hearing a noise made a bounce in that direction, almost ramming the bottom of his tin can that stuck to him "closer than a brother" into Mr. C.'s face. Frightened for the instant at such a queer kind of an animal, Mr. Chandler shut the tin-headed beast out, but after a moment's consideration, he grasped the situation and boldly went out and grasped that tin can, and with a dexterous effort he threw the fuzzy end of it over the fence; but held on to the tin end. The dog pulled and Mr. Chandlor pulled, and at last the separation came, Mr. C. performing a somersault on one side of the fence and the dog at the other.

Ben Franklin's Influence.

"See here, old woman," Harry observed, with his eyes intently fixed on a "Poor Will's Almanac" of 1827.

"Now, what is it?" said Mrs. Archibald, without removing her hand from the pie dough.

"Why, that great and good man, Benjamen Franklin, who writ into this almanac afore you was born, says: "Never argue at home,'"

"Of course not. Any fool might know that."

"But it's a good idea of him, notwithstanding."

"No, 'taint. I knowed that much afore your old Benjamen Franklin was ever thought of."

"Then, why don't you try it on once in a while?"

"Try what on?"

"Not arguing at home,'

"Who's arguing, I'd like to know."

"Why, you are."

"I ain't."

"You are."

"I ain't; you are; ain't; 'yar; ain't; 'yar; hain't-'yar-hain't-'yar-hain't."

"You, Martha, she screamed, "where's that poker? What on the face of the airth's the reason everything in the house is out of the road when it can do the most good?"

Henry made a break for the door, but she saw the movement, and grabbing up a piece of dough as big as a watermelon she brought it down over his head and gave it a twist around his neck, as though she was putting the finishing touches on an apple dumpling, while Henry, blinded by the involuntary mask, fled across the front room only to fall out of the open window, breaking the eggs he had for breakfast across the sill, and dropping through the open cellar door into the coal pile, where the old woman held him at bay with a soft pumpkin pie, while Martha scrubbed the dough out of his ears and the smut off his nose with the stove brush she had been using up stairs.

When Henry got out he confidentially button-holed Oxtoby and remarked, with a cautious look over his shoulder:

"I always thought Ben Franklin was a fool, and now I'm convinced of it"—Easton (Pa.) Free Press.

Blowing the Bellows.

During the journey of the Emperor Joseph II. to Italy, one of the wheels of his coach broke down on the road, so that it was with difficulty he reached a small village at a short distance. On his arrival there his majesty got out at the door of the only blacksmith's shop the town afforded, and desired him to repair the wheel without delay.

"That I would do willing," replied the smith, "but it being holiday, all my men are at church; the very boy who blows the bellows is not at home."

"An excellent method then presents of warming oneself," replied the emperor, preserving his incognito; and he immediately set about blowing the bellows, while the blacksmith forged the iron. The wheel being repaired, six sols were demanded for the job; but the emperor gave six ducats. The blacksmith returned them to the traveler, saying:

"Sir, you have made a mistake, and instead of six sols, you have given me six pieces of gold which no one in the village can change."

"Change them when and where you can," said the emperor, stepping into his carriage; "an emperor should pay for such a pleasure as that of blowing the bellows."

The London Lancet says a blow on the ear has often ruptured the drum, and warns parents against boxing children's ears. You can get more music out of a child by applying the slipper a couple of feet below the "drum."—Norristown Herald.

Prompt Reform of Bodily Evils.

The prompt reform of those bodily evils, enfeebled digestion, incomplete assimilation, inactivity of the liver, kidneys and bladder, as well as of the nervous symptoms which these ailments are especially prone to beget, is always accomplished by the use of Hostetters's Stomach Bitters, a medicine accredited by physicians, pronounced pure by analysts, and eminently wholesome and agreeable. Surely such a restorative is preferable to unpalatable and indigestible mineral drugs and unsanctioned nostrums. The nation at large assuredly thinks so, judging by the unprecedented demand for the article from Maine to the Pacific, a demand now supplemented by immense orders for it received from tropical America, Mexico, the British and Spanish Colonial possessions, and elsewhere. Both at home and abroad it is recognized as a standard remedy and preventive, the decisiveness of its effects recommending it everywhere.

Old age does not prevent you from being cured of your Heart Disease. Mr. Thompson says:

"I have had Palpitation of the Heart for ten years. Two years ago I had a paralytic shock; since then I have been troubled very much worse. I found no relief until I had used Dr. Grave's HEART REGULATOR. I have used it for four months: the palpitation has entirely left me. I was so bad at times that I could not breathe freely, and used to have a faint, sinking feeling; was so bad that I could not sleep, and had to get up and walk around in order to get breath. I feel entirely well of all my heart troubles, and would advise all afflicted with Heart Disease to use it. I am seventy years of age, and live in Bakersville. JAMES THOMPSON, Manchester, N. H."

Send your name to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H., for a circular containing a list of testimonials of cures, &c.

IN MEMORIAM.

The following preamble and resolutions were passed at the last meeting of Hope Lodge, of Brainerd, Sept. 17th, 1878.

Whereas: through the providence of God our worthy sister, Mrs. M. D. Ford, has been removed from us by death, after a long and painful illness. And,

Whereas. we as brothers and sisters deeply deplore her loss and absence.

Resolved: That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to her bereaved family, in this hour of affliction, knowing that a crown of glory is better than an earthly heritage.
