AUDITOR'S OFFICE, CROW WING COUNTY, MINN., BRAINERD, April 15, 1873. }

NOTICE is hereby given that the whole of the several tracts or lots of land contained in the foregoing list, or advertisement, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the taxes and expenses charged thereon, will be sold at public auction at the County Auditor's office on the first Monday of June next, or on any subsequent day to which such sale may be lawfully adjourned by the County Treasurer, unless such taxes and expenses be paid before such sale.

C. B. SLEEPER,
County Auditor Crow Wing Co., Minn.

THE Brainerd Lumber and Manufacturing Company shipped one of their fine ready-made houses, in the shape of a store building, out west to Hawley, this week, for the Yeoville Colony. This is their first shipment this season, but they already have a number of important orders for their ready made houses, of various kinds, and we expect to see, for the rest of the season, ready-made houses leaving Brainerd on almost every flat-car train that goes out.

BEAUTIFUL PLANTS.—Frank Keating has on exhibition and sale a beautiful and extensive lot of plants in pots, and his fine vegetable and fruit depot on Front street presents a gay scene of ladies selecting beautiful plants as well as the substantials and delicacies of life. Go and select some plants before they are gone.

A GRAND Odd Fellow's Ball is to be given at Bly's Hall on the 25th inst. by the young and prosperous Wildey Lodge of this city. It is to be one of the grandest affairs that has yet occurred in the history of Brainerd.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. Wm. Sawyer, Surgeon Dentist, would respectfully inform the citizens of Brainerd that he has opened a Dental Room in the Seeley Building, west Front street, where he is prepered to extract and fill teeth in the best manner. He invites all in need of dental services to give him a call. He guarantees satisfaction in all cases, and his charges are in keeping with the times.

PERSONAL.—We had a pleasant call on Thursday from Mr. Montgomery, of the firm of Montgomery & Todd, of this place. Mr. M., having dissolved partnership with Mr. West, at Saint Cloud, will be here and at his store in Detroit hereafter. These gentlemen have one of the finest dry goods stores in Brainerd that can be found on the line of the road, are liberal dealers, and are doing a splendid business.

We also enjoyed a pleasant call from Byron M. Peck, one of the solid men and leading commission merchants of Duluth, on Wednesday last.

THE delinquent tax-list, and scarcity of help, has reduced our usual amount of reading-matter this week; we have more "help" coming, which will "fix it."

CREDIT MOBELIER was a bad thing; Congressional "Back Pay," was uncomfortable for the pockets of plebeans; and there are many other matters, public and private, now-a-days, that are severely detrimental to one's peace of mind and perfect serenity; but the most gallingly aggravated evil that now exists, and which has for lo these many years existed, is the "policy" of the Government toward the Indians. If we were now in the Government's shoes, we should feel as though all the people could point to us as a very great botcher, and our work in the Indian particular, as the greatest botch of all botches—even if it did not cost the country a red cent, much less after having cost millions and millions of dollars. After twenty years of this Quaker humbug policy of giving rewards to the Indians for massacreing white people, in the shape of "Please-don't-Mr.-good-Indian" money, these same good Indians laugh at and make sport of the sickley "policy," and go on with their natural amusement of cutting, and slashing, and scalping, and burning, and murdering, and ravishing with increased and increasing energy. We think it high time when the whole Indian outfit should be treated with at the point of the bayonet instead of at the end of a fresh green-back. The present "policy" is sinking beneath the contempt of an idiot, in view of the fact, well known in the west, that there never existed but just one good Indian, and he DIED VERY YOUNG.

P. S.—Since writing the above we are pleased to see that the Government has given the troops now investing the Modoc murderers, on the Pacific slope, leave to go forward and avenge the assassination of General Canby by Captain Jack, chief of the Modocs, even to their extermination. This smacks a little of "business," and if the Government would only follow out the tone of the music to which they have in this instance struck the key-note, in relation to the whole Indian "kettle of fish," we would rejoice in the name of humanity.

AIKEN REPORTS.

DIED.—At home of James Tibbetts, Aiken, on the 10th inst., of cerbro spinal meningitis, Thomas Jefferson Tibbetts, in his thirteenth year. The funeral took place on Saturday, April 12th, Rev. J. A. Gilfillan officiating, and nearly all the inhabitants of Aiken were present to testify their sympathy with the bereaved parents.

Our town is active and alive with new buildings and contemplated ones.

Jack Gurrell, your indefatigable Sheriff was with us looking up jurors—Jack, you see, is a terror to evil doers.

We never thought any Brainerdite so dull that he couldn't distinguish Nat. Tibbetts' wood-pile from telegraph poles.

Wakefield, Stevens & Lowell lost a splendid pair of horses in trying to cross the Mississippi at White Oak Point.

The river at this point is unsafe to cross, and Capt. Russell says the steamer will positively leave in the course of two weeks for the upper Mississippi—due notice will be given.

Harry Williams indignantly denies having purchased a new shirt in Brainerd, as he claims to have slept in a clean bed during his stay, and Aiken has got rid of contagious insects.

AQUATIC.

CLOTHES CLEANING.—Mr. C. Laichner is building a neat little house on north side of Front street, where he intends opening a clothes-cleaning, repairing and tailoring establishment. We hope he may get a good custom as we doubt not he will, as he is an excellent workman.

MR. N. WHIPPLE, who has for a long time been one of the pillars of strength of Crow Wing, has gone out and located six miles west of here, on the line. He will continue to bring the vegetables of life out of mother earth in vast quantities, as of yore. Friend Whipple's vegetable products are famous hereabouts, and we wish him success and profit in his new home out at Whippleville.

AN INVENTION.—Mr. West, of this place, has invented a unique and valuable little contrivance, called a "Thread Cutter," which can be attached to any sewing machine, and saves the vexation of always "hunting the scissors" to cut the thread. We cannot see why Mr. West's really valuable little patent should not come into general use.

"I Sometimes Think it Were Best."

Well, how shall I help to right the things that are going wrong?
And what can I do to hurry the promised time of peace?
The day of work is short and the night of sleep is long?
And whether to pray or preach, or whether to sing a song,
To sow my neighbor's field, or to seek the golden fleece,
Or to sit with my hands in my lap, and wish that job would cease.

I think, sometimes, it were best to let the Lord alone;
I think some people forget He was here before they came;
It's a little for His glory, and a g ol deal more for their own,
That they exhaust their petty schemes and blate and babble and groan.

I sometimes think it were best, and I were less to blame,
Should I sit with my hands in my lap—in my face a crimson shame.

A LOST ART REVIVED.

The Empress Josephine's Old Point de Venise Laces—The Empress Eugenie's Lace—A New Industry—Interesting Story.

From the N. Y. Sun.

It is well known among ladies who are connoisseurs in lace, that the manufacture of old point de Venise has been among the lost arts for upwards of a century. Wealthy women of our American princesses on her round of morning shopping asks for point de Venise, the salesman who is well informed in laces knows at once that his customer is not. If he is shrewd, he will, unscrupulous, he practices a deception by showing the lady some other lace; if he is honest he tells her the truth. A representative of the Sun, while looking for items for a trade report a few days ago, gathered the following facts from a lace importer and head of the lace department in a wholesale dry goods house, whose name we withhold from sales amount to over sixty millions annually.

About five years before the fall of Paris and banishment of Napoleon III. the Empress Eugenie discovered one day among a pile of old laces, which had been transferred to her as souvenirs of the Empress Josephine, and which her daughter Queen Hortense had religiously preserved as relics of her illustrious mother, about a quarter of a yard of a lace flounce of a most peculiar and beautiful mesh and peculiar design. The ex-Empress is a dilettante and connoisseur in laces as well as in many other fine arts. She saw at a glance that she possessed a rare treasure, the more valuable as it was yellow with age, broken and mutilated. She sent at once for M. De Lisle, the President of the Compagnie des Indes, lace manufacturers of Paris, and spreading her treasure before his admiring eyes, said:

"Monsieur, I wish this lace reproduced, mesh and design, in a full lace dress for myself. Can your lace makers do it?"

Bowing low before the beautiful woman, the manufacturer replied:

"Your Royal Highness gives me a difficult commission, one, I fear, impossible to perform. Your remnant is real old point de Venise, of which there are but few samples in existence, and the art of making it is lost."

"Can we not revive it?" asked the Empress. "I give you carte blanche in making the experiment, and another carte blanche for my dress when finished."

"Madame, I will see what can be done. If possible, it shall be accomplished," and bowing again, he retired from the royal presence, taking with him the old piece of point de Venice.

When an Empress commands everybody bows to her wishes. So the President of the Compagnie des Indes lost no time. He first submitted the samples of Queen Hortense's relic to his own adult experienced lace makers. Now knew the art of mesh. He placed it under powerful lenses—no better success. Its intricacy baffled them all. No instruments, however fine, nor fingers the most skilled, under eyes the most practiced, could tell how it could be reproduced. The manufacturers were perplexed, but not in despair. His next step was to ransack the whole empire for the oldest lace makers living. About forty old women, sexagenarians and octogenarians, were taken to Paris. They were provided with the best of glasses and the most powerful hand lenses. One after the other examined the old flounces. Alas! not one knew the mesh. M. De Lisle was almost desperate. He had tried adult ingenuity and the experience of age; now he must resort to youth. He selected from his young girls twenty of the most intelligent workers—those with the strongest eyes and nimble fingers. To each he gave a section of the old sample. He provided them with lenses and every appliance for work. In the meantime they were secluded and given every necessary comfort, so that their eyes, their fingers, and their minds might be in perfect working order. He watched the work from day to day for one week, but still no progress seemed to be made. At length he left the house one evening, almost persuaded to give up the experiment. This was about one year after the original relic had been given. The next day he was late in reaching his office, but as soon as he arrived the superintendent of the lace workers met him with the wise wished for welcome, but almost incredible intelligence that one of the young girls had discovered the old point de Venise mesh. The President hurried to the room where the successful young worker was bending over her lace cushion. He seized a lens, examined the work in her hands, compared it with the original, and a quiet smile stole over his features.

"Ah, bien!" he exclaimed softly, "It est achevé!"

Turning to the successful discoverer to rewarded her with the place of eacher to the others and general superintendent of the work, and communicated with the Empress who among all her engagements had kept diligent watch of the progress of affairs.

Now the work was begun in earnest. It was four years before it approached completion, but from time to time the Empress visited the manufactory, showing the greatest joy and pride that a lost art had been restored by the lace weavers of France in her reign. Before the dress was finished Paris was in ashes and Eugenie was an exile. But the lace weavers escaped the general destruction and Eugenie's dress was spared. The generous and noble woman did not forget M. de Lisle nor her order. She sent him from Hastings, saying "though no longer an Empress, nor enjoying the income of royalty, she would take the dress when finished if he should be a loser by keeping it."

The manufacturer, not to be outdone in nobility or generosity, laid the case as stated in the Empress's letter before the directors of the company. They were touched with the misfortunes and genuine nobility of the beautiful woman, and unanimously decided to release her from her engagement. This now historic dress is to be exhibited at the Vienna Exposition as the first specimen of point de Venise manufactured in more than a hundred years.

The Artificial Slides in Russia.

The Winter Fair is held on the Neva. There you see races with sledgas and skates, and with horses, dogs, cats and stags, harnessed to different kinds of sledge vehicles. They also have their horizontal roundabouts, and their perpendicular highflyers, like sedan chairs, hanging in the air and down again. But the grand amusement of all is that of the "ice hills." They are thus constructed: A strong scaffolding is raised to the height of thirty feet, with a landing at the top ascended by a ladder. From the top of the landing a sloping plane of boards is laid, about twelve feet in length, and ninety feet long, descending in a gradual slope, the angle to the surface of the frozen river. This inclined plane is supported by wooden piles, decreasing in height, and the sides are protected by a parapet of planks. Upon the inclined plane are laid square slabs of ice close together, and then water is poured all down the slope. This water freezes—half a minute or so of a Russian winter is quite enough for that—and the incline then presents a smooth sheet of pure ice. From the bottom of this incline the snow is cleared away upon the level surface of the frozen river for a distance of 300 feet, and 12 feet wide (the same width as the inclined plane.) The sides of this level space are ornamented with dark green firs and pines. Each fair-goer who wishes to indulge in this national amusement provides himself with a peculiar sort of sledge—more like a butcher's tray than anything else—ascends the ladder to the landing on the top, seats himself in the tray on the edge of the glittering incline, off he goes, and away he skeels down the slope of ice. Such velocity does he attain before arriving at the bottom, that he is not only carried along the 600 feet of the icy level below, but clean up to the top of a second ice hill, like the first, with another slope on the other side, down which he skeels with the same rapidity as before, and away again to an equal distance on the level below. The sight of a succession of these fair-goers, seated in their sliding trays, balancing themselves as they cut along, one close upon the other, yet there is no chance of overtaking each other, unless by some unlucky and very unusual upset, presents a most peculiar and extraordinary scene. Whether the balance does happen to be lost by a man, down he goes all the same, to the continual peril of his limbs or his neck, and it is impossible to predict whereabouts his headlong career will be stopped. Boys sometimes—boys will do anything—by way of a delightful increase of the danger, skate, like a flash, down the bright inclined plane, balancing themselves on one leg.

Father Hyacinthe's Aspirations.

The Paris Debats publishes the following letter, addressed by Pere Hyacinthe to one of his friends:

PARIS, March 3, 1873.

MY DEAR FRIEND: You were correctly informed. I have been called to Geneva by the wish of 300 Catholics, not to enter into pastoral functions there, but to propagate the principles of Catholicism. I know that this step will be misrepresented by a certain press, which will endeavor to connect it with the struggle that has just taken place in Geneva. The reply to such interpretations is not difficult. I have taken no part, and I have not had to give any advice in that conflict. The purely religious mission I am about to fulfill is of a character to reassure, and I dare add, superior to the struggle, since it responds to a situation of the Church which is becoming more and more evident throughout the whole of Europe. Geneva promises no better success. Its intricacy baffled them all. No instruments, however fine, nor fingers the most skilled, under eyes the most practiced, could tell how it could be reproduced. The manufacturers were perplexed, but not in despair. His next step was to ransack the whole empire for the oldest lace makers living. THE LOSS OF THE [illegible]

Statement of [illegible]

We sailed from [illegible] on the 20th. During the first part of the voyage we had favorable weather and [illegible] winds. On the 24th, 25th and 26th we experienced very severe weather, especially gales, which blew the ship down to 118 miles a day. On the 31st of March the engineer reported about about 127 tons of coal on board. We were then about 460 miles off Sandy Hook, with the wind southwest and a high westerly swell and falling barometer, the ship steaming along eight knots per hour. I considered the risk too great to venture on, as we might find ourselves, in the event of a gale, shut out from any port of supply, and so decided to bear up for Halifax. At one o'clock on the afternoon of the 31st Sandy Island was distant 170 miles, the ship's speed varying from 8 to 12 knots per hour; wind south, with rain, which veered to westward at 8 P. M., with clear weather. At midnight I judged the ship to have made 122 miles, which would place her 48 miles south of Sambro, and then I left the deck and went into the chart-room leaving orders about the lookout and to let me know if land was sighted and call me at 3 A. M., intending, then to put the ship's head to the southward and await daylight. My first intimation of the catastrophe was the striking of the ship on Mag's Harbor and remaining there fast to. The sea immediately swept away all the port boats. The officers went to their stations and commenced clearing away the weather boats. Rockets were fired by the second officer. Before the boats could be cleared, only ten minutes having elapsed, the ship keeled heavily to port, rendering the starboard boats useless. Seeing that no help could be got from the boats, I got the passengers into the rigging and outside the rails, and encouraged them to go forward, where the ship was highest and less exposed to the sea. The third officer, Mr. Brady, Quartermasters Owens and Speakman, by this time had established communication with an outgoing rock, about forty yards distant, and succeeded in getting four other lines to the rock, and passed along with about two hundred people. Between the rock and the shore there was a passage one hundred yards wide. A rope was successfully passed across this, by which means about fifty got to land, though many were drowned in the attempt. At 5 in the morning the first boat appeared from the shore, but she was too small to be of any assistance. Through the exertions of Brady, the third officer, the islanders were aroused, and by them three larger boats came to our assistance. By their efforts all that remained, and the side of the ship and on the rock were landed in safety and cared for by a fisherman named Claney, and his daughter. During the day survivors to the number of 429 were drafted off to various houses scattered about, the resident magistrate, Edmund Ryan, rendering great help. The chief officer being got up the rigging, the second of his retreat. He stood for six hours by a woman who had been placed in the rigging. The sea was too high to attempt his rescue. At 3 P. M. a clergyman, Rev. Mr. Ancient, succeeded in getting him down and getting him off. Many passengers, saloon and steerage died in the rigging from cold. Among the number was the purser of the ship. Before the boats went out I placed two bodies in the chart-room, but finding the boat useless, carried them to the main rigging, where I left them and went to encourage others to go forward to the bottom of the ship. At this juncture the boilers exploded and the boat rolled over, the ship at this time being on her beam ends. Finding myself useless, I went to take the ladies forward, but found them gone; nor did I see them afterwards. Many passengers at this time could not be stimulated to any effort to save themselves, but lay in the rigging and died from fright and exposure. I remained on the side encouraging, helping and directing, until about fifteen were landed, when finding that my hands and legs were becoming useless, I left the ship, two other boats being close to her, and embarked with the remainder. On reaching the shore I despatched the third officer to Halifax across the country to telegraph news of the disaster, and to obtain assistance. Mr. Harrow, Chief Engineer, also promptly responded, and sent two steamers with provisions, to convey the survivors to Halifax, where they will be cared for and forwarded to New York at the first opportunity, in charge of the first and fourth officers, the third officer and four men being left at the island to care for the dead as they come ashore.

The Traffic in Slaves in Egypt.

The correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph, who accompanies Sir Bartle Frere's expedition to take steps for the abolition or the slave trade in Egypt, writes:

Every class of society, from Pashas and Beys down to a pretty shop-keeper, indulges in the luxury and vice which it affords. No one can pretend to respectability who has not a female chise—without this property qualification. No unmarried man can obtain lodgings in a respectable quarter of town unless he has a wife or a female slave. Thus, not only the large centres of business, and who are compelled to live there among the people for some time, buy female slaves, whom they reset or otherwise dispose of when they return to their homes. All this, taken together with the extent of the country and the population, warrants the conclusion that the absorption of slaves in Egypt is enormous. Young girls fetch fabulous prices, such as the mart at Zanzibar, for the sale of slaves; but I am informed by natives that private establishments for the purpose abound in the native town, where an Europeans can buy slaves without any difficulty whatever. Slaves also the case in every town in the interior, where the traffic is more open. There are two races of slaves sold in Egypt, the white and black. The former are imported from Turkey, are highly prized, and are bought only by the rich. They are generally made concubines. Of course young and good-looking girls fetch high prices, amounting in some cases to thousands of pounds. Before being sold, they are usually taught certain accomplishments valued by Turkish and Egyptian voluptuaries, such as singing, in some cases music, and invariably the gait and behavior of a high-class lady. As is the case with women in these countries, the charm of these girls fade at an age which in colder climes is considered young, and they have to make room in the harem for the fresh victims.

PANIC IN A CHURCH.

A False Alarm at a Fisher's Funeral—Several Persons Fatally Injured.

From the N. Y. Times, April 1st.

About 2½ o'clock yesterday afternoon a rumor spread through the streets of Trenton that the gallery of the Roman Catholic Church had fallen and that a large number of persons had been killed. Soon the news spread toward the scene, and messages were sent in all directions for physicians. It was currently reported that nearly 100 persons had been killed; that the building was on fire, and many persons were burned to death. The Fire Department turned out, and the excitement was greater than was ever before known in Trenton. The reports now grew still more grossly exaggerated.

No one has been killed, though a large number are badly and some fatally injured. The church, which holds about 1,000 persons, was densely crowded by persons of all denominations attending the funeral obsequies of Rev. Father Maclin, the senior priest. While the services were in progress a woman in the gallery fainted from the heat. As she was being borne out, she created considerable commotion by the effort to push through the crowded aisles, a wooden bench, on which a number of the worshipers were kneeling, gave way with a loud cracking sound, which was heard throughout the church. A cry was raised—"The gallery is falling," and a fearful panic instantly ensued. The whole audience seemed to catch the infection at once, with the suddenness and completeness of an electric shock. The priests and others at the inner extremity of the building shouted to the surging crowd that there was no danger, but to no effect. Impelled by the desperation of unreasoning and selfish fear, the crowd rushed with terror to the windows, and struggled madly for exit at the front doors, and then ensued a terrible scene.

The foremost of the panic-stricken throng were hurried off their feet and fell upon the sidewalk, while those behind trampled upon them, and crushed them by others who came behind, and who, in their struggles to escape, more resembled madmen than human beings. Old women and children, mothers with infants in their arms were mixed in one almost inextricable mass. For a time it was utteraly impossible for those gathered on the outside of the building, and who had been attracted by the report of the disaster, to render any assistance to its unfortunate victims. In the meantime the fear-crazed crowd in the church, finding their egress blocked by the mass of people wedged in the gateway, fell to praying and calling upon the saints to protect them. The thirty priests who officiated at the funeral escaped from the rear of the building by means of ladders, and, running to the front of the edifice implored the crowd struggling in the doorway to go back, at least a portion of them, and permit the others to make their exit, by which means it might be saved. But their exhortations were unheeded, and it was found necessary to form the people outside in a body, and drive them back, which was done, and those who were lying upon the floor were rescued from death. Those who were thus saved were found to be insensible; but, fortunately, none were dead.

Some were wedged in so tightly that it required the united exertions of several persons to release them from their perilous position. Some of these, it is feared, will die. Several of the children are known to be fatally injured, though none of them had died up to the hour last night. All the physicians of the city, with scarcely an exception, hastened to the scene, and used their utmost exertions to relieve the sufferers, while citizens of all classes seconded their efforts by every means in their power. After the tumult had subsided, the funeral services were concluded with a solemnity greatly increased by the disaster, and which had interrupted and shadowed them.

History of the Black Crook Play.

The circumstances of the "Black Crook" are very curious. Mr. Barras in the Spring of 1866 called upon Mr. Wheatley, then manager of Niblo's Garden Theatre, and offered him the play of the "Black Crook." It was intended simply as a spectacular play and nothing more. Mr. Wheatley looked it over and decided not to produce it. In the meantime, however, the Academy of Music burned and Mr. Harry Palmer was left with a large ballet troupe on his hands which he had engaged in Europe, and which he had intended bringing out at the Academy. Mr. Palmer went from one theatre to another offering his ballet troupe, which had not yet arrived, but the managers thought either could not make any use of it or did not trust the success of the venture. At length Mr. Palmer and Mr. Jarrett (who had formed a partnership) offered the troupe to Mr. Wheatley. This gentleman was at first indisposed to engage in the speculation; but remembering the pigeon holed play of the "Black Crook," he finally thought it would do very well with the adjunct of ballet, and determined to bring it out. Mr. Barras made very profitable terms, insuring himself a benefit every two weeks of the run of the piece. It was remembered that an enormous success the piece had. Mr. Barras received a handsome sum each night on condition he would forego the fortnightly benefit. In this manner, he made a fortune right in his little piece elsewhere, he accumulated a large fortune, variously estimated at from two hundred thousand to two hundred thousand dollars. The name alone of the play was a magnet, but after some time hardly a trace of the original drama remained. Until this production Mr. Barras was very poor, and eked out but a scanty livelihood by writing.

Extraordinary Attempt at Murder.

The Manchester Guardian reports a mysterious attempt at murder at Oldham, England. A pawnbroker in that town received a few days ago a key, and shortly afterwards a parcel was which was locked but had no key. The pawnbroker found that the key fitted the lock of the box, and he opened it. The result was startling. A pistol had been placed in the box and was so arranged as to discharge its contents into any person who might open the lid from the front. Fortunately for the pawnbroker, he had turned the box round in order to examine the gun, and the bullet from the concealed weapon passed through the window of the room.

THE invention of the circular saw is generally attributed to Capt. Kendall, of Maine, who died a few weeks ago at the age of 89. This is a mistake. The circular saw was invented by Joseph Murray, of Mansfield, England, son of an old servant of the Byron family, when Lord Byron, the poet, often spoke of it in his letters as "Old Joe Murray." The first saw of the kind made in this country was by his descendants.

AN ENGLISH LADY IN PRISON.

A Remarkable Story by the Daughter of an English Colonel of Infantry—From Affluence to a Longer Sojourn in Prison.

The Newark (N. J.) Advertiser of Friday says:

Not long since there appeared in the Newark Daily Advertiser a notice of the death of a lady in this city, aged sixty-seven years of age, whose genteel and becoming dress, lady-like manners, and evident culture, stamp her a person who has moved in better days. A descent from affluence to poverty since upon the saloon under Oraton Hall, a place of questionable reputation, and presiding at the piano at this time was the subject of this paragraph. She was was taken in custody with the other parties found in the saloon, but when brought before Judge Lambert she protested her innocence of any criminal intent, and declared that penury had driven her to her employment as a pianist in the only place which, as a stranger, and without any means at hand to prove her respectability, she could expect to obtain it.

Her cultured manner and conversation, her evident sincerity and unaffected dignity of demeanor, satisfied the Judge that her misfortune was a truthful, and he took pains to separate her as much as possible from disagreeable prison associations, and subsequently drew from her a brief story of her life. She said she was the daughter of Colonel John Hutchinson Garner, of Garnerville, near Belfast, county Down, Ireland, who formerly commanded the Fortieth regiment British infantry, but is now a retired officer, living in wealthy ease at the place which bears his name. Several years ago she was married to William Francis Hull, then cashier of the Ulster Bank, at Belfast, and the proprietor of a number of 1100 acres at Killyleigh, near Belfast. Soon after their marriage, which was not one wholly approved by her father, her husband attached himself to a club, and soon became so addicted to gambling and drinking that accumulating debts and the threatened dismissal from his position caused him to abscond to this country, where she followed him soon after. He had saved from the wreck of his fortune some $10,000, but he continued his dissipation and gambling in New York, and squalid poverty soon drove them to apartments in a garret.

Then came a struggle for which neither was prepared, and after some weeks of deprivation and goading want, the husband caused the three children to be placed on Ward's Island, and then deserted his wife and fled to Canada, where she last she heard of him. Mrs. Hull, being an accomplished musician and quite proficient enough to teach it, sought for employment as a tutor. But she was friendless and without recommendation, and hence she accepted the distasteful occupation of a saloon pianist, and while in that vocation she was arrested. She claims, however, that she had been but a week in the place, and knew nothing of the bad reputation. Judge Lambert, believing her representations, has written to her father a detailed account of his daughter's troubles, also to Robert Barron, of Ardingeo House, Killyleigh, who is her brother-in-law, and one of the wealthiest men of the county Down. In the meantime, however, he would like to have the assistance of benevolent people in securing for her a proper place to stay until her friends are heard from.

A Deluded Shark.

"It is probable," says the Fall Mall Gazette, "when the valuable records of naval disasters and other incidents of sea voyages are carefully stowed away in sharks' stomachs. Within the last three weeks no fewer than three of these voracious fishes have been captured off the Scotch coast by fishermen. The first caught was eleven feet in length, and after being exhibited with no small profit by its captors, has been presented to the Edinburgh Museum. In the presence of a numerous body of spectators, it was made the subject of a post mortem examination, when among other articles found in it were a money bottle, which was found to be corked and sealed with red wax, and containing a note. The bottle was immediately broken, the note taken out and read aloud to a deeply attentive audience. It was as follows: 'On board the Beautiful Star, Sunday, September 1, 1872. We have crossed the line, and all's well. Last night the captain's lady had a pretty little baby—Annette Gordon.' A postscript to the note consisted of some verses composed by the writer, and 'doing honor to her head and heart.' Some persons are skeptical enough to imagine that the bottle and the note were swallowed by the shark after death, but what can be more likely than that a large fish, taking violent exercise in salt water, should be delight at finding what he conceived to be a bottle of soda water gobble it up at once without taking the trouble to uncork it. The disappointment of the fish when he discovered that he had swallowed nothing but paper, exhilerating than a letter and a poem, must have been as painful as though he had snapped off an artificial leg in mistake for a real one."

The Soldiers' Homestead Law.

There seems to be some misunderstanding regarding the amendments which passed Congress last session in regard to the Soldiers' Homestead law. The amendments are several, and various and important, but they all failed to pass, except the following, which embodies all the change that has been made in the Homestead law: "That any person entitled to the provisions of the foregoing sections, to enter a homestead, who may have heretofore entered under the Homestead laws a quantity of land less than 160 acres, shall hereafter be permitted to enter so much land as, when added to, the quantity previously entered, shall not exceed 160 acres." That is, that whereas the law of 1872 permits soldiers to enter homesteads on what are called "double minimum lands," or lands within the limits of railroad grants, and whereas many soldiers had entered 80 acres each, they are now permitted to enter a whole quarter section, or 160 acres of such lands. The amendment simply doubles the quantity of land that may be entered under the law.

A RATHER curious incident occurred at a church in Hartford one evening last week. One of the prominent citizens of the city was there to preach. His sermon was written out, with the text preceding it in the usual way. When he arose to preach he read the text, but when he attempted to locate it he could not find it, he had forgotten to note down the chapter and verse. He finally had to ask the congregation to locate it. One of his hearers accommodated him, and the sermon proceeded without further interruption.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Additional Cities Entitled to the Free Delivery System.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Under the new law passed at the last session of Congress, and which goes into effect at the beginning of the next fiscal year, July 1, 1873, nineteen new postoffices will be added to the list of those entitled to the free delivery system. All cities having 50,000 inhabitants were, under the old law, entitled to carriers, but discretionary authority was given to the Postmaster General to give the carrier system to other cities not having the requisite number. This power was made use of by Messrs. Dennison and Randall, the predecessors of Mr. Creswell, to a considerable extent, but the present law absolutely requires a population of 20,000 people. It is known, however, that some of the cities now served by carriers have less than the number last mentioned, but it is not proposed to take the privilege away from them. The following named offices not now served will be entitled to carriers under the new law:

	Population.
Charleston, S. C.	48,956
Scranton, Pa.	35,092
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.	21,274
Paterson, N. J.	33,579
Kansas City, Mo.	32,260
Mobile, Ala.	32,034
Fall River, Mass.	26,766
Springfield, Mass.	26,703
Peoria, Ill.	22,987
Covington, Ky.	24,565
Quincy, Ill.	34,063
Evansville, Ind.	32,630
Oswego, N. Y.	20,910
Elizabeth, N. J.	20,838
Savannah, Ga.	28,233
Fourkeepsie, N. Y.	20,080
Camden, N. J.	20,045
Davenport, Iowa.	20,042
St. Paul, Minn.	20,031

The following named cities are making very effort to be included in the carrier system but under the census of 1870 they have not a sufficient population. It is probable, however, that some construction will be made after a short time so that they will be benefited:

Wheeling, W. Va., population, 19,282; Norfolk, Va., 19,256; Taunton, Mass., 18,629; Chelsea, Mass., 18,547; Dubuque, Iowa, 18,434; Leavenworth, Kan., 17,049; Fort Wayne, Ind., 17,718; Springfield, Ill., 17,356; Auburn, N. Y., 17,225; Newburg, N. Y., 17,014.

Death of the Inventor of Spool Thread.

The English papers by the late steamer announce the death at a ripe old age of Mr. Andrew Clark, the celebrated manufacturer, whose name has been associated both in the New World and the Old with the famous thread which he first introduced. He was virtually born to the business of thread manufacture, his father having been engaged in that line in Paisley, Scotland. But the young inventor soon made improvements which revolutionized the trade. He brought the process of manufacture to its present perfection, and was the inventor of the process of winding it on spools instead of skeins. The inventors Mr. Clark was a self-made man. He commenced business in a small room, but his improvements were so valuable that his business seemed only limited by his capacity to supply the demands of customers, and for years before his death he was at the head of the largest and most celebrated factory in the world. He was the means of converting his native village of Paisley into a populous and prosperous manufacturing center. Mr. Clark a few years ago associated his son in the business, which is now continued under the name of Andrew Clark and Son. Branches are established all over the world—in Russia, Germany, France and other parts of Europe, and in South America and the United States.

Editors as Speculators.

The New York correspondent of the St. Louis Globe writes: "Among the men who have gone to Wall street within a few years from the editorial desk, I might enumerate at least twenty. One of the successful brokers is John Bonner, once the financial editor of the Herald, and also the editor of Harper's Weekly. He is reputed to have made $400,000 in Erie. Another is William Henry Hurlbert, the merry manager of that journal, who realized a fortune in a short time by carefully watching the market. Thomas Kinsella, once on the staff of the World, is still a bear on Erie. He was a great stroker, and probably looks back at the time when he earned $30 or $40 a week by very hard work, with a feeling of surprise that he could ever have been so unconscious of his own capacities."

New Warp Snow Is.

From the Grand Haven Herald.

Last fall Mr. Spencer, who has a farm near Elk Rapids, filled a pit in his field with potatoes covering them only with boards and potato tops. During the night snow fell, and the potatoes lie over them with earth, and they remained in this condition until last week, when the covering of snow, potato tops and boards was removed, and the potatoes found to be entirely untouched by the frost. Perhaps the most remarkable fact connected with this is that a coffee pot half full of water, which was left standing on the ground beside the potatoes, was covered with snow to the depth of about one foot, was found to be as free from ice as when placed there last fall. This fact that snow effectually prevents the growth of potatoes, is one of the principal reasons why the soil is so soon ready for planting after the snow is gone, and also accounts for its sudden disappearance when it begins to go.

A Toad Story.

Some time ago a New Hampshire farmer discovered a large toad near his bee hive, actively at work catching and devouring bees. With that wonderful forbearance and kindness of heart characteristic of all New Hampshire farmers, he tenderly picked up that frog and carried him a half mile away from the hive. Thomas Jefferson, the identical frog was back again at the old stand, actively at work as before. He again took him up, carried him a long mile away, and dropped him. But in twenty-four hours he was back again reducing the number of bees as successfully as ever.

The Jury System.

Judge McArthur, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has ruled that a man was not disqualified from serving because he had read newspaper reports of the case, and remarked that it could not be expected that a man could be chosen from among men who did not read the papers. The counsel for the prisoner raised all the old-time objections in such cases, but the Judge refused to recognize them. He said he had several were sworn as jurymen, he stated that they had read all the accounts of the murder which had been printed.

What the Oak Thinks.

BY CAROLINE E. DEWINS.

Oak-tree, are you sleeping?
Walnut-tree hears the sound beneath;
Bird leaves strew the ground beneath
Maples, skyward creeping.
Oak-tree, what! still sleeping?

Oak-tree you are wearing
Last year's rags, while this are green
Who is king wouldst find them open?
Come, the spring winds daring.
Crown and mantle wearing."

"Hush! say I'm wearing
Wait a little, till leaves are bare,
Till the keen October air
Walnut-leaves is turning:
Then, gladly I'll be wearing."

When the flower-stalks fade
Bowed and snapped and withered lie,
Then my scarlet cardcoy
With my royal splendor
Gives them covering tender.

"What! I seem sleeping?
Is it not worth while to wait
For such glory, though 'tis late?
Though I've slept keeping,
Without it I'm sleeping."

FARM, GARDEN AND HOUSEHOLD.

Catarrh in Horses.

The Agriculturist has this: T. Gordon, of Kuffrell, N. C., writes that he has a horse troubled with a running nose, accompanied by a thin, which grows over the eyes and causes temporary blindness. It is doubtless a catarrhal affection, and the trouble with the eyes is sympathetic. Feed warm mashes and scald oats, give powdered gentian, fennel and sulphur in the food and wash the nostrils and bathe the eyes with a weak solution of sulphate of zinc. Keep the horse in a warm, well ventilated stable, free from drafts.

Grafting Wax.

A correspondent gives the following for grafting wax

Take the resin, one lb beeswax, one-half lb tallow, or in these proportions for larger or smaller quantities; if to be used in the open air, in cool weather, add a little more tallow; melt all together, and manipulate well with the hands as it comes cool; make up into small rolls and enclose in greased or oiled paper any surplus not wanted for immediate use, and put it away in the cellar or cool room.

Salve.

A friend hands us the following recipe, which has been used with success in abrasions, lacerations and sores:

Lard, one pound,
Oil of origanum,
Oil of juniper,
Oil of tincture hartshorn,
Oil of tincture Spanish fly.

To be applied with a soft woolen cloth, and well shaken before using.

Drying of Fruits.

The rapidity with which fruits decay after they have been ripened is owing to the development of certain fungi. Of one of these, well-known mildew Mucor stolonifer, Wyville Thomson says: This species is often found on juicy fruits, covering them with white woolly patches scattered over with small black heads, and producing a very rapid putrefaction beneath the surface of the fruit. A number of delicate branching filaments form a rich network in the substance of the fruit. Sporules, which are easily distinguished from those of some nearly allied forms by their long simple tubes without partitions. These delicate filamentous tubes, which are the parts first to appear and form the basis, as it were, of the fungus, are called the Mycelium, and are found in almost all fungi.

Early Onions.

The Small Fruit Recorder describes the mode adopted for hotbed propagation of onions: When three inches high in the bed, the ground having been previously well prepared by manuring with rotted compost, a wheel is made of two-inch plank, with handles to push like a wheelbarrow, and half-inch pegs inserted in the outside of the wheel every two inches. This, run along the ground, makes holes at regular distances, and into these holes bays set the onions, and into these holes they are thrown accurately, without trouble, and with rapidity. When the plants are taken from the hot bed, saturate the soil well with water before lifting. In this way they have been set out in the sunshine successfully, although a cloudy day is best. A bed six feet square will supply an acre, and the crop will be uniform and good.

Rose Cuttings.

Max Klose, an experienced gardener, says: "Instead of throwing my prunings away last spring, I used them as cuttings—put a whole lot of them, about a dozen or more, in a normal-like jar filled with coarse sand and water, with sufficient of the latter to be about a quarter of an inch or so above the sand. I then plunged the jars into a slight hot-bed, and let the cuttings have all the light and sun possible—never shading once." After eight weeks he examined the jars and found the roots to fill them, and the shoots in the healthiest condition. Nothing could be more so. He adds: "Out of about 120 cuttings of three dozen kinds of roses, I only missed striking fifteen, which I think is a very encouraging result; anyhow, I shall consider it the Sand royal, and experiment again in a similar manner in summer, when I shall bestow more attention to the preparing of the cuttings and the way they will strike the readiest."

Leaving Cows in the Stall During the Night.

A correspondent who is running but one vat of 200 gallons' capacity and making up the milk twice a day, said he would like to leave the night's cows in the stalling, in the sink until five or six o'clock the next morning. By adopting this course, more time will be gained for sleep, and he inquires if it will answer to do so. We have not experienced in treating large masses of curds in this way and then putting to press. We should think that some trouble might occur in having the cheese "fuse" nicely, and possibly the whey might not all drain off as it should. Perhaps by grinding the curds in the morning, and by using hot cloths on top and bottom of the cheese when put to press after bandaging—as is sometimes practiced to remedy defects in fusing—the proposed plan might work. At any rate, we should not hesitate to make the experiment. In old times, when large cheeses were fashionable, some made what was called "double curded cheese." On this plan, the curds of one day, after being run up and slightly salted, were placed in a cool place till next morning's curds were scalded; the two curds were then mingled together and put to press. Excellent cheese was the result when the curds were properly handled and no trouble in pressing. We should advise our correspondent, however, in this case, to obtain a large vat and cool the night's milk properly after it is received and make cheese but once a day. Making cheese twice a day is a slave's life for the cheese maker, and may affirm that new milk, right from the cow, should be turned into so fine flavored product as firm milk properly cooled and cared for that has been left standing in the vat over night. In the first case the rank animal odor does not have time to pass off and is refined, more or less, in the cheese. Perhaps, however, by exposing the curds to the atmosphere over night in the sink, as suggested by our correspondent, this rank odor would pass off, and, if there was no trouble in pressing, there can be little doubt but the flavor of the cheese would be improved. If any of our readers have any experience in leaving curds during the night in the sink and putting to press next morning, we would be glad to hear from them on this practice.—Moore's Rural.

Ox-Teams vs. Horses.

In this go-ahead age it is a dismal sight to see an aide bodied man toiling along the road at the slow pace of a pair of oxen, and we have probably had as much to say as any one in favor of the faster horse or mule team.

We are bound to confess, however, that the picture has another side which is worthy of careful consideration. Ox-teams are slow, it is true, but they are effective cheap and convenient. Horses are a necessity for regular road work and for many operations on the farm, but it is almost indispensible to have for occasions considerably more team-force than is needed regularly. If the extra work of plowing, harvesting and hauling manure is to be done by horses, we may make up our minds to have them more than half the year eating off their heads in idleness, and to be in constant danger of loss from disease. Hundreds of ill that horse-flesh is heir to. To state the case in a nut-shell, an idle horse is idle capital, invested in an extra hazardous risk, without insurance, and consuming itself month after month.

Oxen, on the other hand, if properly treated, are a tolerably safe storehouse of working power. When not at work, they are laying on flesh which is worth so much per pound in a ready market if we choose to sell, or which may be taken out again in the form of hard work whenever we may call upon it. In case of accident we may realize the full amount of our investment at the hands of the nearest butcher. An idle ox is active capital; the investment is safe and well insured, and his fodder is pretty certain to get paid for, either in flesh or in work.

The difference in returns in the two cases is very considerable, which may offset the cost of teamsters in the use of the slower animals is probably well compensated for by the saving in saddlery bills. And after all, the question of speed is of less consequence than we often imagine it to be. We have lately had an opportunity to watch two teams in use in our neighborhood, one of horses and one of oxen, both engaged in similar work (mainly on a road), and we have come to the conclusion, against our preconceived notions, that "slow and steady wins the race." The oxen seemed to do more work in a week than the horses. They are three pairs of young oxen, growing thriftily, and so paying a profit on their keeping when not overworked—costing less to buy and less to feed than the single pair of horses. When they are needed for work, they are taken up and fed enough grain to keep them fleshy. When their work is finished, they are turned out to "eat, sleep, and grow fat." When each pair have got their growth, they are sold to the butcher, and a part of their price replaced from the young stock.

Starting our farming life with a prejudice against the use of ox teams, we have been induced gradually to substitute them for horses, until now we have only enough of the latter for our regular road work, and depend on oxen for all inner genuces. In work and in flesh we get a full equivalent for all the food they consume, and we save the heavy cost of keeping idle horses and the risk of a total loss of value by accident or death, and the certainty of depreciation by reason of old age.—American Agriculturist.

Domestic Recipes.

CORN BREAD.—To all that do not already use this recipe we will give, as we think it the way to make corn bread. Take two pints sweet milk, two-thirds pint of molasses, two cups flour and flour of meal; add nearly a tablespoonful of soda. Bake slowly two hours, so the crust will be tender when taken out.

GOOD COOKIES.—One cup sugar, one teaspoon full of soda, caraway.

TO TELL WHEN VINEGAR HAS SULPHURIC ACID IN IT.—Mince the pickles with a glass or ivory knife, and then pour over them a little weak ammonia. If a blue color is produced, it is certain they contain sulphuric acid. The above is simple and surtain test.

CLEANING STOVES.—Stove lustre, when mixed with turpentine and applied in the usual manner, is blacker, more glossy and more durable than when mixed with any other liquid. The turpentine prevents rust, and when put on an old rusty stove will make it look as well as new.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS.—The white of eggs with lime makes a good cement for broken china. Honey and caster oil mixed are excellent for asthma. A teaspoonful may be taken night and morning with great benefit. Rancid lard may be purified by trying it over with a little water, adding a sliced raw potatoes. The potatoes seem to remove the bad taste from the lard.

LEMON PUFFS.—One pound of pulverized loaf sugar beat in the yolks of four eggs; add one teaspoonful extra for every spoonful of flavoring; beat the eggs and sugar as stiff as possible; then add the whites beat to a stiff froth; beat well, flavor with lemon juice, and extract of the peel or citric acid, and extract of lemon; drop the flavored papers in small cakes and bake quickly without browning; leave the puffs on the paper until entirely cold.

A New Theory.

A new theory of earthquakes and volcanoes, which has found favor with scientific men generally, has been given by Maller. It is based upon the conceded fact that the earth is gradually cooling; and as it cools it contracts, but not uniformly. The interior contracts more rapidly than the crust, and Maller believes that the shrinkage of the crust can explain all volcanic phenomena. As the result of the contraction there would be irregularities of level were first produced in the far remote ages; then corrugation of mountain ranges and table lands; and lastly local crushings down and dislocations, a process still going on. Heat being, as is now generally allowed, a form of motion, the work expended in bearing down the crust is transformed into heat. The surface of the earth may well be compared to the shrivelled skin of an apple. Earthquakes and volcanic eruptions are the result of the subsidence and shrinkage of the earth's surface. The old theory that mountains were upheaved is not correct. The valleys were sunk down. This volcanic force has gained its maximum, and is now growing less, as the earth parts with its internal heat.

ROBERT KEYTES, a temperance missionary in Glasgow, left a few tracts with a young lady one morning. Calling at the same house a few days afterward, he was rather disconcerted at receiving the tracts doing duty as curl-papers on the head of the damsel to whom he had given them. "Weel, my lassie," he remarked, "I see you have used the tracts I left wi' ye; but," he added, in time to turn confusion into merriment, "ye have put the tracts on the wrang side o' your head, ma wee man."

A GANG OF FORGERS.

All Sorts of Paragraphs.

History of Some of the Bank of England Forgeries.

Something of the past history of Macdonnell, the Bank of England forger, now under arrest in New York, is contained by the Boston Daily Advertiser. Macdonnell, under the assumed name of George W. Bradford, operated in a cattle swindle in Portland, Me., several years ago, and while under arrest there was delivered up to late Detective Dodge, of New York, who had the papers for him on a swindling operation at Tiffany & Co.'s, the Broadway jewelers, and he was sentenced to Sing Sing for two years.

In the summer of 1868 he and his brother Michael, professing to be commission merchants, attempted to get $5,000 out of the Hide and Leather Bank, of Boston, on a bogus check drawn by a Chicago house, but the Bank officers were too smart for them, and they made off to escape arrest. Michael, in October of the same year, formed his company, using one Hill, named Hills, appeared in Worcester, Mass., and by forging a certified check got $2,200 out of a bank there, and then stole a horse and wagon to and from Boston in escaping. Macdonnell, in that scrape, gave the name of Hiram Tucker, and Hills the name of H. B. Conklin. Hills was subsequently convicted in New Jersey for a forgery perpetrated in connection with Michael Macdonnell on the Sturtevant Bank, and got seven years in the State Prison, but was pardoned out early fall. Since his release he has settled with the Worcester Bank officers. George Macdonnell was one of the gang at the time of these forgeries, but did not appear as a principal. Michael, taking the name of Andrew Stanley, went to Hartford after Hill's arrest, and committed a successful forgery upon the Trust Company, getting $4,500. His confederate escaped to California, but he was arrested in Canada, and is now serving time in the State Prison at Wethersfield, in that State. Before he went to prison, and after his sentence, he said that the gang with which he was connected, with George, the Bank of England forger, being the inventive head of the organization—had planned a gigantic system of forgeries in the United States. Deposits in small amounts were to be made in different banks and certified checks obtained thereon, which were to be altered, and by simultaneous action the forgers expected to make a haul amounting in the aggregate to hundreds of thousands of dollars. In all the forgeries committed, the certified check plan was adopted. The Sturtevant Bank frauds were made on two checks for $67 and $41, which amounts were increased by the addition of two ciphers, making the sums drawn $6,700 and $4,100. After Michael had been in prison a year, he was brought here and tried to get him released when the Legislature was in session, but met with no encouragement. Michael then tried to bribe the son of the late warden, Colonel Wood, to aid him in securing outside assistance, and gave him a letter to W. W. Bidwell, in New York, which was never delivered. This Bidwell, it now appears, was one of the conclusive witnesses against Macdonnell in the English robbery. These facts go to show that the gang is an old one, and the New York detectives in concluding that fact evidently have some clue to the parties.

The father and mother of George and Michael Macdonnell live in Lachine, Canada, and are in good circumstances. Mrs. Macdonnell was in Hartford for some time before Michael's trial, endeavoring to make a settlement and get him off. The father's name is Michael, and he is reported to be a large holder of real estate in Montreal, where himself and family reside every winter.

Michael's term in the State prison expires next fall, and he will go free if the Worcester matter has been settled.

Miraculous Escape.

At Marseilles, Ill., on Friday last, when the westward-bound mail train on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway was running into Marseilles at the rate of twenty miles an hour, it left a wagon-load of cross-ties the track and cut it completely in two. The horses made good their escape, but two men made a still more miraculous escape than the horses. When the train struck the wagon the shock deposited Babcock so close to the track that the wheels just missed him and that was all. Hemming was thrown upon the pilot, where he remained until the train could be stopped. When the two men were picked up they were supposed that their ghastly faces indicated a fatal condition, but upon an examination by a physician it was soon discovered that they were more frightened than hurt. Not a bone was fractured and no very severe bruises received.

A Murderer and His Victim Die at the Same Hour.

From the Anderson (Ind.) Herald.

On Thursday evening, the 6th of March, a school exhibition was being held in the Grove School House, locally known as "Knotty Corner." There were several young men from Liberty township, all more or less under the influence of liquor. Three of the young men, named Scott, Griffey and Bannister, got into a quarrel with a man named Brads, and in the melee which followed Griffey shot Brads in the side, inflicting a serious wound. Griffey was arrested and placed under bonds for his appearance at court. In a few days he took sick with the cerebro-spinal meningitis, and on Sunday last he died, and at the same hour, on the same day, his victim, Brads, died also, of the wounds he received at the exhibition. This is a singular tragedy. Scott and Bannister are yet under bonds as accomplices.

The Military Cemetery near New Orleans.

About five miles from the New Orleans Custom House is the great cemetery containing the graves of 12,275 Union soldiers, killed in battle on the Mississippi River, or who died in the New Orleans hospitals. Here, in long and solemn rows, regiments of the dead repose side by side, while just below the lower fence of the cemetery is the historical breastwork thrown up by the Americans in 1815, and behind which the battle of New Orleans was fought by the heroes under Jackson, and in front of which Gen. Packenham and the British army were defeated and driven back. About an eighth of a mile above the works, where the headquarters of Gen. Jackson were located, a monument has been commenced, with about eighty feet of it completed.

It is stated that the old hand presses, which are now in use in some of the Michigan newspapers, requiring much care, have to be replaced by "jerkers" which are much better than those worked by machinery.

Died Suddenly of Heart Disease.

How common is the announcement. Thousands are sudden ly cut off in this way by this fatal malady. This disease generally has its origin in impure blood filled with irritating, poisonous matter, which, circulating through the heart, irritate its delicate tissues. Though the irritation may at first be slight, producing a little palpitation or irregular action, yet by and by the disease becomes firmly seated, and inflammation, or hypertrophy, or ossification of the heart, takes place, or the valves, or pericardium. How wise to give early attention to a case of this kind. Unnatural throbbing or pain in the region of the heart should admonish one that all is not right, and if the proper means be used, even if the disease, you must help it to beat rightly by the use of such a remedy as shall remove the cause of the trouble. The Dr. Wendell Golden Medical Discovery before the disease has become too seated, and it will, by its great blood purifying and wonderful, recruiting properties, effect a perfect cure. It contains medicinal properties which act specifically upon the tissues of the heart, bringing about a healthy action. Sold by all first-class Druggists. 634

Collapse of the Nerves.

There is nothing more disheartening than nervous debility. In extreme cases of this class the sufferers do not care whether they live or die. A feeling of hopelessness comes over them, and in some instances where the threatening symptoms are not met by prompt and proper treatment, lunacy or idiocy ensue. Yet nervous debility is not a dangerous complaint if wisely dealt with. A medicated stimulant is the remedy needed, and in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters the specific for the complaint is presented in its purest and most agreeable form. Nervous disease is usually complicated with other ailments. It frequently involves biliousness, constipation, irregularities of the bowels, indigestion, and great mental depression. In the spring of the year, owing to the effect of chilling fogs, searching winds and other unhealthy atmospheric phenomena, the enfeebled nervous system of persons who are subject to nervous affections, often suffers most distress, both of body and mind, from this cause. It is, therefore, advisable for all who are liable to these troubles, at the first sign of bodily ills above mentioned, which so frequently accompany them, to commence the regular use of Hostetter's Bitters early in the season. The severe nervous and bilious attacks which they so frequently otherwise invited, can by this means be certainly avoided. As a nervine, gentle aperient and anti-bilious medicine, the Bitters have no equal.
