WITH A SNAKE.

"Now, Captain, let us have that snake adventure that you were talking about at dinner," said half a dozen voices at once, as a group of passengers gathered upon the hurricane-deck of our home-bound steamer to listen to one of the "after-dinner stories" for which Captain Swardley of the Scinde Irregular Force of India was already famous on board.

"With pleasure, if you wish it," answered the Captain, a tall, gaunt, keen-eyed old fellow with a long grey mustache, whose hair fell in ringlets almost black by the tropical sun, looked as if carved in solid mahogany.

"But before I begin, the ladies must promise that they won't be frightened for it's rather a grim story." The ladies, one and all, declared that they were not a bit afraid; and Captain Swardley began as follows:—

"When I was a child, if ever I saw a serpent in a picture, I would scream and run away; and I always shut my eyes when I stepped out for the first time, and his long coils of snakes, which stood in our hall.

"I never went to bed without a tiger crouching there; and I was always expecting a mad maul to come crashing and tramping right through the wall, on a box-constructor forty feet long, and a snake in the window."

"But week after week went by, and neither snake nor wild beast did I see. I had come just at the beginning of the dry season, when the snakes always disappear, and the forest elephants the cutting away of the railway, and the forest elephants the cutting away of the railway, and the forest elephants the cutting away of the railway."

"I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake."

"You get up one morning quite fresh, thinking it all over again, and you find a snake in the window, and you find a snake in the window, and you find a snake in the window."

"I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake."

KILLED HER CHILDREN.

St. Louis, Mo., May 25.—One of those horrible frocks of insanity which result in murder and self-destruction and appals stout hearts occurred here this morning.

At last, I fell asleep from sheer exhaustion, and dreamed a very strange dream. All through my mind came the face of a woman, and I could see hanging out from among them the speckled tail of a cobra-di-capello, the deadliest serpent in all India.

"I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake."

"I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake."

"I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake."

"I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake, and I don't know anything in the world more troublesome than a snake."

Chief Charm of the Circus.

"I think I shall go to the circus this year when it comes around," said the minister to his wife. "Why, my dear," she exclaimed, shocked at the idea, "you surely will not so inconsiderately. You have always been opposed to theaters, circuses, and things of that kind."

BY ANTHONY E. FREDERSON.

Nan Kendall laid her pretty brown hair on one side, and critically examined the picture which she had just finished.

"I like it," she said, with a self-satisfied smile, using the makeshift to which she had resorted for the purpose of adorning her picture.

"And what would you call it, dear?" asked Mrs. Kendall, a fair, brown-haired widow, who looked very like her daughter.

"I don't know very much, I suppose, to paint on canvas, but in the olden days, when I was a child, I used to paint on paper."

"I shall go to New York with it myself," said Nan, "and make an oil of it, and sell it for a good price."

"I don't want to see you go, dear," said Mrs. Kendall, "but I shall go with you, and I shall see that you are well cared for."

"I shall go to New York with it myself," said Nan, "and make an oil of it, and sell it for a good price."

"My mother had long wished for her portrait painted," he said artfully, "but she wants it to be the work of a lady."

"I shall go to New York with it myself," said Nan, "and make an oil of it, and sell it for a good price."
