Carried her own share and in the carriage, having first put away her hat and gloves, and her shoes, leaving her to the two hours, for her father.

"I declare," said Mrs. Brown, writing her own name on the envelope, "I hope for comfort and company, to be sure, but I don't know how I can be so sure of it."

"Well," she sighed, "it does seem as if I could not do it, but I will try. I will try to be patient, and I will try to be content with what I have."

"I will," she said, "I will try to be patient, and I will try to be content with what I have. I will try to be patient, and I will try to be content with what I have."

"I will," she said, "I will try to be patient, and I will try to be content with what I have. I will try to be patient, and I will try to be content with what I have."
