The Bradner Smith Paper Co., of Chicago, and who have a large wholesale house in Minneapolis, were losers in a fire at the former city on Tuesday to the extent of $200,000.

It Comes at Last!

Judge Carey received official notice last evening to hand over his papers to Gil Hartley on his arrival here with his commission. This leaves Messrs. Little and Marble decidedly out in their respective efforts to take the place. Mr. Hartley will undoubtedly take charge of the office on Monday.—Duluth Herald.

PECULIARLY VALUABLE.

From March number of The Northwest.

"The Weekly Pioneer Press contains a carefully prepared summary of all the news of the week, and its literary, agricultural, domestic and general departments is arranged with the benefit of its many thousand patrons throughout the country. Especial attention is devoted to news and events more immediately connected with the development of Minnesota and the Northwest, a feature that makes it peculiarly valuable for circulation outside of the Northwest. The subscription price of the Weekly is only one dollar a year, postpaid. A trifling sum for so large and excellent a paper."

The Bond Question.

To the Voters of Brainerd and Crow Wing County:

How any citizen owning property in Crow Wing county, be he merchant, farmer, laborer, or any one who has one here to stay, whether property holder or not, can vote against issuing bonds to aid the dam project, we cannot fully realize.

Suppose we have now $1,000,000 valuation for taxable purposes, and that we must raise a revenue of $25,000 for all purposes, to carry on the county government. Each year, this necessitating a levy of 25 mills on the dollar. The building of the dam will raise the valuation within three years more than $1,000,000, while the county expenses would be increased only $5,000, to pay interest on the $50,000 bonds to be issued; then the actual levy would be a little less than 12 mills on the dollar only, thus largely decreasing taxes. Can not every property holder understand that the greater the valuation the less the rate of taxes?

What would have Fergus Falls been without her water-power?—The plants there for manufacturing off flour alone are worth over $3,000,000, to say nothing of the enhanced value of real estate.

If Brainerd had expended an hundred thousand dollars ten years ago for a water-power, the population of the city would now be 50,000 instead of 9,000, and the property valuation $30,000,000 instead of less than $5,000,000.

Whoever opposes these bonds is no friend to Brainerd's progress.—It has been the conviction of all men that Brainerd must encourage manufacturing and build up interests independent of the shops, or we would never be a healthy growing city, and prosperous. Why should we hesitate now, when private citizens are willing to add $75,000, or $100,000, if necessary, to the $50,000 bonds to erect this dam? Shall we be public spirited and aid this enterprise and directly ourselves, or shall we lay supinely on our back until poverty shall have bound us hand and foot?—Shall we remain passive until other more enterprising towns, such as St. Cloud, Sauk Rapids, Little Falls, Aitkin and other places shall have utilized the Father of Waters to that extent that no more manufacturing industries are needed in this section, and public spirited men stand helplessly blanched with the shame at our supineness? Why will croakers croak, while energetic men are trying to advance the interests of the city, but willing to accept the benefits they did not aid to confer on themselves? Because there are men in every community who see a night-mare in every public improvement, and if they do any good to themselves or their neighbors have to be dragged into it. If a citizen has a house or lot, or is in trade, or toils for his bread in any way, is he not worth more, better off, less concerned about opportunity to support his family, in a town where there are valuable improvements going on, and the business men are active, enterprising and public spirited, than in one, for instance, like this city now and as it has been for two years? If $150,000 is paid out here this summer and 300 men are employed for five months, will it not be better than no expenditure and no employment of labor?

There is no money in this project for the dam company. If they raise $75,000, among themselves, the interest will be about $7,000 per annum. The water rental is not likely to pay this interest for several years, hence the company must go into their pocket and keep up the interest. There is no money in it for the stockholders, directors, or officers of the company, only as the dam enhances the value of real estate. It will increase the value of every lot in town 25 per cent.

Suppose A has a house worth $1,000, 25 per cent is $250. With the dam he is worth $1,250—that same $250 would pay his taxes for 150 years, if the taxes were increased one mill on the dollar, which is not likely—and yet men are discovered on our streets opposing these bonds, whose passiveness with regard to our prosperity has been so great for years that the moss is as thick upon their backs as it is upon a century old sand turtle, and who will not progress themselves nor allow others if they could prevent it. Such men are barnacles, opposing every enterprise fastened to the hull that floats them, living off its sustenance till it rots and destroys them. Who will be the moss-back and barnacle on this question? If any there be, let him be known by the word and sign, that his fellows can appreciate him accordingly.

And now, if these bonds are voted, the county commissioners disburse the money. There is no chance for a steal. When the dam is built the proceeds of the bonds will be paid over, or as the work progresses. The company will contract with the commissioners to build the dam, and the proceeds of these bonds will be just as safely disbursed for this improvement as any other portion of the county money.

The dam will be built within the city limits where the best river bottom can be found after careful survey, and as soon as the ice goes out. What about the bridge? If the Brainerd & Northwestern railroad company desire to utilize the dam for a bridge let them pay the dam company for it, and help pay the interest on money advanced; in no other way can they use it. But the railroad company do not propose to use the Northern Pacific bridge and will not require one of their own. We want the dam first, and then if a bridge is needed let some other person or persons build it. In any event a solid wall of granite ten feet wide and twenty feet high is an excellent sub-structure on which to construct a feet or any other kind of a bridge.

We must have the dam at all hazards, bridge or no bridge, and when we have the dam the perpetual progress and prosperity of Brainerd is certainly assured. Every farmer has a store market for his crops, farm land will be greatly enhanced in value, because of the market, and the general weal is secured.

As one of the directors of the dam, and a subscriber to its stock, I will pay half of my subscription, ($1,000,) to any other man who will pay the other half and assign the stock to him. He will thus have $1,000 full paid up stock,—this because I am willing to pay that bonus for the dam, as a private citizen, and because I know the stock will pay no dividend for years.

If the man who is not likely to pay a dollar for the dam opposes bonding the county, why does he do so? Because he is a chronic growler, grambler and grunter. Because the spirit of enterprise is not in him, and because he invites the eternal anathemas of his fellows who are straining every nerve to infuse a life into the waning interests of our beautiful city. Now is the grand opportunity, and with face to the foe let us charge the cranky zereba of the Mahdi faction and carry Brainerd to a certain plan of prosperity.

Look well to your votes, and all for the bonds. C. B. SLEEPER.

Poison at The Front Door.

No article entering so generally into the food of the family has been found more villanously adulterated than baking powders. For the purpose of underselling those powders of absolute purity and wholsomeness which alone are safe for use in food, hundreds of dealers are putting up baking powders with cheap and adulterated cream of tarter, which contains lime, earth, etc., adding strength by the free use of alum.

These adulterated powders are "shoved" upon the public with the greatest persistency. They are first given away—left in samples at private residences, with circulars containing bogus analyses and certificates, and false representations as to their value, etc. The fact of itself is sufficient to condemn them. A first-class article will sell on its merits. No manufacturer whose goods are of value can afford to give them away, and none but the cheapest and the most inferior unmarketable goods require to be distributed free in order to get the public to use them, and this method is adopted only by parties who have failed to dispose of their wares through the ordinary and legitimate channels of trade.

Free samples of articles of food left at the house should be regarded with suspicion. There is no guarantee of their wholesomeness, while there is real danger that they contain a fatally poisonous compound. Many cases of poisoning from the use of such samples are recorded.

The only safe way is to consign all such samples immediately to the ash barrel, and to turn a deaf ear to the statements made by their venders. It is not worth while to trifle with life and health to the extent of testing every doubtful baking powder that comes along. Better rely upon an old and reliable brand like the royal, which has by a quarter of a century's constant use proved its perfect wholesomeness and efficiency or some other brand that is not so worthless and cheap that its proprietors can afford to give it away by the cart load. It is in its favor that the Royal Baking Powder is never given away, sold by means of lotteries, nor accompanied by chromos, spoons, crockery, or other gifts, except the gifts of absolute purity, wholesomeness, full weight and superlative excellence. Its own merits have been its chief advertisement, and they have secured for it the constant patronage of the American people to an extent beyond the combined sale of all other baking powders. The Royal Baking Powder is certified by all the government chemists as absolutely pure and perfect.

Blasting Rinks, and Mollycoddles.

The following article appeared in last Sunday's Minneapolis Tribune, and is the best of its kind we have ever seen in print. A careful perusal by parties who are loud in there denunciation of the roller rink and also, by these who are in favor of it, may do both parties good:

"The unfortunate feud between the skating rinks and the churches grows more deadly. Father McGolrick's denunciations of the rinks as immoral in their tendencies, and his pastoral instruction forbidding the young people to frequent them, has been followed by an editoral in the official organ of the diocese, the Northwestern Chronicle, sustaining the position of the Minneapolis pastor and proclaiming the unequivocal hostility of the church against the public rinks. Presumably, Bishop Ireland has inspired or sanctioned the article in question. Meanwhile, the skating mania shows no sign of abatement. A thousand young people are reported as participating in a single fancy dress and masquerade frolic at a prominent Minneapolis rink. Each floor vies with all the rest in the frequency, novelty, absurdity, and informality and general abandon of its special "features," "attractions," and "entertainment." The more solemn the warning of the church, the wilder grows the merriment of the rink. The feud deepens, and neither party is wholly right or wholly wrong.

When the clerical antagonists of the rink go as far as to say that skating is an unhealthy and unnatural form of physical exercise, that skating in time with good music is subtly destructive of the soul, that it is per se a sinful abomination for women and women to skate together, and that rinks are deadly traps of Satan into which none can safely enter, they are mistaken. They simply offend and antogonize self-respecting young people They see all their vaunted qualities as moral guides and teachers by their unwisdom. Skating is fine exercise. Skating to music is exhilarating and delightful. The ladies commit no mere impropriety in skating with their friends of the opposite sex than in talking with them at a church reception. The rink is not only a permissible, but a benefical institution in its proper place. Young folks ought to have amusements, and it will not be easy to find any form of pleasure-taking which has so much its favor and so little against it, as skating. Furthermore, it is foolish to ignore facts. Almost all young people do skate more or less, believe it to be proper and right, and are sustained by the conscience and good sense of the community.

But, while the attack on skating itself may easily be replied, it will not be so easy to deny that the rinks furnish occasion for much that is wrong and deplorable. Farther McGolrick declares that he knows or more than one instance of irreparable harm which has come from bad association formed in Minneapolis rinks. Such cases are painfully frequent. They are reported from cities and villages all over the country. They show that skating-rink manners need much improvement. If the moral guides and teachers would go, themselves, freely and frequently to the rinks, as Rev. John L. Scudder recently suggested that they should do, and bore all if parents would go with their younger children, they would soon discover wherein the real danger lies and see how to obviate it. Thetheoy that all people on the floor of a rink at a given time constitute a careful observer will soon see how much harm proceeds from it. Rinks are not proper places to make aquaintances. Young woman attending a party at the home of a friend may safely assume that the fact of attendance sufficiently guarantees respectability, and permit herself to be introduced freely to everybody. But at a rink, no young lady who has self-respect, good taste, and a knowledge of the usages of good society will allow introductions unless accompanied by unmistakable credentials. A young lady who skates with rink habitues about whom she knows nothing and whom who she would not think of receiving at home, may be set down as vulgar. The foolish girls who skate with any stranger who asks it, without introduction or formality, have not sense enough to be trusted beyond the parental eye. All the moral ablquity with which the rink stands accused, grows out of the bad manners which prevail in those places. It is not possible to keep all the insinuating scoundrels and dispicable "mashers" out of the rinks, but more than it is possible to keep them off the street. But young woman need no more be required to skate in the one place than the other, if somebody will teach them their manners. A decent girl who ever allows one of those odious "what-is-its" in male attire who frequents the rinks to take her hand and skate with her, ought to despise herself. Somebody ought to make a hit to publish a book on skating-rink etiquette. The rinks are bound to stay, and to be patronized; and it is high time that their frequenters should learn the proprieties. The cardinal principal of the book should be that the manners of the sidewalk and the fair-ground and the hotel parlor, and not those of the social assemblage, furnish the proper analogy for the rink. Rink-goers should take their company with them, and not leave it on the floor. If this general rule, simple as it is, were obeyed, it would do a hundred times more for good morals than all the sermons that have been preached against the amusement of roller skating.

Several thousand young people are to be found in the Minneapolis rinks every night. The manners and morals of this amusement are therefore, well worthy the discussion of the pulpit and the press. The sooner it is taught that skating in itself is not objectionable, but excessive and intemperate skating, familiarity with strangers, participation in certain catch-penny "entertainments" at the rinks are vulgar and objectionable, the better it will be for the morals of the rising generation. After all it is the code of etiquette and good society and not the moral code which needs expounding and enforcing in this matter."

More Railroad News.

The Brainerd & Northwestern railroad company have seen fit to ask Duluth and St. Louis county to bond herself in the sum of $200,000 to aid them in building the road and of course Duluth is mad, as she generally is and we do not know but that the people of that city might as well be in a flurry over this matter as any other. The Brainerd road agrees to run a daily train to Duluth over the N. P. track and give them dollar for dollar in railroad stock for their bonds and which, in our estimation, is fully 50 per cent too much, as Duluth bonds are not worth their weight in gold. The Duluth people are mad because the Brainerd road got their proposition before the people and filed with the auditor ahead of the Duluth & Winnipeg officials. Brainerd people do not sleep when their have any interest at stake, and as they caught the Duluth people napping the howl arises.

NOTICE OF MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas, William Murphy, mortgager, did duly execute and deliver to Sarah Jane Hill, mortgagee, a certain indenture of mortgage, bearing date, the 5th day of March, 1885, conveying said mortgagor did grant, bargain, sell and convey to said mortgagee, her heirs and assigns, the following described piece or parcel of land, lying and being in the county of Crow Wing and state of Minnesota, to wit: Lot twenty-one (21), in block forty-five (45), (new) now city of Brainerd, according to the recorded plat thereof, on file in the office of the register of deeds and Crow Wing county, to secure the payment of the sum of $1000 and interest thereon, at the rate of ten per cent per annum, according to the conditions of a certain promissory note, therein described, which said indenture of mortgage was on the 5th day of March, 1885, at 9 o'clock, p. m., duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for said county of Crow Wing, in book "B," of books, pages 294 and 295. And whereas said mortgagor did covenant and agree in said mortgage, in case of a foreclosure thereof, to pay said mortgagee, her heirs or assigns, the sum of twenty five dollars, attorney's fee, and whereas default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by which the power therein to sell has become operative; and there is now due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, the sum of $1099 41 and 25/ attorney's fee, as aforesaid, and no action or proceeding at law, or otherwise, has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

And whereas Sarah Jane Hill, the mortgagee above named, afterwards, to-wit — on the 13th day of April, died intestate, at Cornwall, Orange county, New York, and on the 13th day of June, 1885, letters of administration on the goods, chattels, credits and estate, which were of the said Sarah Jane Hill, were duly issued to Daniel T. Hill, jr.; who is now the administrator thereof, and who was appointed copy of his appointment as such administrator was duly filed for record in the office of the register of deeds in and for said county of Crow Wing.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that pursuant to the power of sale in said mortgage contained and the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises aforesaid, together with the appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, which sale will be made at public vendue to the highest bidder, for cash, by the sheriff of said Crow Wing county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Brainerd, in said county of Crow Wing, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, on the

to satisfy the amount then due upon said mortgage and all legal expenses.

Dated, February 14, 1885.

They acted as though they had as soon get their board at the city's expense as any other way.

A new and elegant stock of boys suits has just been received at Day & Meagher. They are wonderfully cheap.

There is talk of organizing in this city a protection association or vigilance committee whose business it shall be to look after cases of a fire where goods have to be removed, no one only responsible men touch the articles. It is estimated that nearly all the fires in this city are started by some scoundrel for plunder and an organization of this kind would have a tendency to do away with it to a large extent. Ten cent Laurel street fire thieves stole all of Mr. Moberg's cigars and much other stuff. It is high time something was done.

An act was passed by the last legislature which allows one per cent. of the premiums collected from each town or city by the state from insurance companies to be payed to the fire department of each town or city that have been duly organized for a year. The money comes from the two per cent tax paid the state by insurance companies on their premium receipts and is paid on the warrant of the state auditor from the state treasury. Our fire company are entitled to benefits under this law and it will be to their interest to look into the matter to comply with the requirements of the law.

On Monday night a "free for all" fight occurred on the side walk in front of Johnny Bean's saloon, the principals in which were Jas. McNaughton, China. Baker, Ivor Olson, Ole Lewis and a man by the name of Henderson. The two former pounded up the Swedes in a frightful shape and were arrested and brought up before the municipal court Tuesday. McNaughton and Baker were fined $10 each and costs, and Baker paid his fine, while McNaughton in default of ready cash was consigned to the cooler for twenty days, but while being taken to the jail he jumped into an alley and managed to escape from the officer. They have both left town.

Easter Services

Easter service in St. Paul's church will be as follows: Services, sermon, communion and lenten offering at 10:30 a.m. Easter services for the Knight Templar's Ascalon Commandery, with prelude, address and sermon at 3 p. m.—The children's festival of the Sunday school will be at 7 p. m.

On Easter Monday the usual parish meeting and election of Wardens and Vestrymen will take place together with the financial arrangements for the ensuing year.

The Quarterly Plan.

A petition has been circulated, and signed by a large number of the leading business men of this city, this week asking the city council to allow the saloon keepers to pay their license quarterly in advance, that is $50 every three months. This petition will be presented to that honorable body on Monday evening next, at which time some action will be taken on it. It is generally understood that the saloon men will acquiesce to the $200 license without further debate if the council will allow them this privilege, and as the city will get the benefit of the $200 just the same, although not all coming in a lump, we have no doubt the city fathers will look upon it favorably, especially after glancing over the array of names of representative men of the city which are subscribed to it.

A Midnight Blaze.

On Monday night at 11 o'clock a fire broke out in an unoccupied building on Laurel street between Sixth and Seventh. The fire department was soon out and had the fire under control before it had gained much headway although that building and the one next to it occupied by C. Moburg as a saloon were badly burned and damaged by water. Moburg's stock was removed to the street and was damaged considerable, as was also that of A. O. Narrow and N. Westenberg, but Moburg was the heaviest loser as the most of his cigars and considerable liquor was stolen. The fire was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary as there was no one occupying the building where the fire originated. The buildings damaged belonged to B. Peterson and J. L. Starcher and we understand were partially insured. But for the timely arrival of the fire department of the whole row of buildings on Laurel as well as on Sixth street must necessarily have been destroyed. The boys deserve great credit for their work on this occasion.

Will the Bonds be Voted!

In our last issue we printed a letter from Mr. Kindred in regard to the building of the proposed dam at this place and which had a tendency to allay the feelings of doubt in the minds of many as to the feasibility of voting the bonds asked for, and at the present time there is no doubt but that the election will carry without any serious opposition, although there are a few persons who are doing what they can to defeat the bonding of the county. There must be some object that these men who are opposing the scheme have which has not been explained. The building of the dam across the river at this point will be the biggest boon to Brainerd that could be imagined.—For direct and lasting benefit it will be a thousand times to the railroads. There are a few people who are raising the cry that these bonds will increase our taxes.—There is not a property holder in the whole county who will not be benefited at least ten times the amount of the increase in taxes. On the other hand it will be a saving to the taxable property in Crow Wing county and in Brainerd so that we will be the gainers in the respect. Over a half million of dollars will be added to our resources for manufacturing and other business purposes. The lands and lumber will advance in price, real estate will increase in value, farmers will locate in the now sparcely settled portions of the county and the direct benefits of the consummating of this project will be visible on every hand, and every dollar of new capital that is invested here will be taxable, which will, in our estimation, reduce taxes instead of increasing them. Go in and vote for it we say and posted what the immediate benefit would be! active work is commenced this spring. For instance, ask any business man to-day if he is paying $100 or over a month for rent, ask the laboring man who has been idle during the long winter months, ask the hotel keepers what effect it would have on them, ask the real estate men if it would not brace up their business and if they would not get better prices, and ask the farmers if they would not find a more ready market for their products at advanced prices. This matter is of the most vital importance to the future prospects of our city and county, and it is to be hoped that at least two thirds of the bonds on Tuesday next will be carried unanimously and without opposition.

The Ten Hour Race.

As a purveyor of amusement the skating rink seems to have established itself on a substantial basis. It not only draws that greater part of the public that delights to skate, but attracts the many who enjoy seeing others skate, and when there is added another attraction in the shape of the many classes of exhibitions to which the rink may be accommodated, it appeals successfully to the larger share of those people who find it necessary to go somewhere in order to enjoy themselves of an evening. This was illustrated yesterday afternoon and evening at the Brainerd rink at the occasion of the ten hour race between W. Stager, Arthur Farrar, Otto Olson, Jo. Veon, Fred Abear and Lon McDonald. The race was well-built, prosperous city of to-day was but the outpost of an advancing army of pioneers, who were soon to make their way to fame and fortune.—Like all the rest of communities having struggled with adverse fate, but inspired with courage and an unfaltering hope they persisted in their endeavors, knowing full well that success in the stern battles of life could only be secured by indomitable perseverance.

Their faith in the ultimate position of Brainerd as a city of the first commercial and agricultural centre has in the lapse of years been more than realized, and to-day the hardy, courageous men who with shrewd discernment selected this city as their base of operations are inspired in the confident hope that this city of 10,000 souls will in the next decade have trebled its population, quadrupled its financial resources, and become the seat of a mighty manufacturing and commercial section.

This is no mere fancy picture, but will be realized in its fullest sense. The faith that dominates the citizens of the city of the Pine has been within the past few months still further that have taken shape in that period.—These are respectively the land grant of 250,000 acres to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Northwestern Railroad that will be built this summer, the western division extending 200 miles from here to Red Lake Falls and Grand Forks, D. T., tapping a fine agricultural section and opening into competition with the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad for the western trade of the lake, and the Red River Valley.

The proposed construction of a dam on the Mississippi River, which flows here in a south-easterly direction through the city, and which it is intended to be equivalent to 50,000 horse-power, is another incentive that conspires to give this point a conspicuous importance as a future industrial center. This dam will have a fall of twenty feet, will extend 330 feet across the river, and run into the bank to protect it from washing out. It will flood from 4,000 to 5,000 acres of land now comparatively worthless, most of it close to the city, the water being from six to ten feet in depth in the low places, and enabling saw-mills to put their pilings in the overflowed lands.

It is estimated that 300,000,000 feet of logs pass Brainerd annually for the mills below. A great portion of this number have been sawed here before had there been proper facilities. It is expected that Brainerd will

ITS PROPORTION OF THE BUSINESS.

All the pineries of Minnesota are tributary to this point, and the product of the lumbermen all pass Brainerd.

The completion of the dam will be the harbinger of a new era for this section, giving Brainerd the second largest waterpower in the state. Saw mills will spring up, as it were, over night, the boomage facilities being under the new order of things unsurpassed in the State. Flour mills will have an undoubted advantage over those in other distant sections, as the wheat regions are nearer and Lake Superior only 115 miles from this point, thus reducing materially the cost of the manufactured article in a saving of freights.

It is a well settled fact that shipments of wheat and flour via Duluth to the East and to the sea board ports can be reduced to a minimum figure, and consequently the profits of the farm and the mills will accrue the largest returns at the smallest expense.

This water-power will be especially adapted for flouring-mill purposes, as the regularity of the water-power so necessary for milling requirements will be obtained here. In Minneapolis the Minneapolis has exhausted her water-power for manufacturing purposes, and Brainerd will consequently have the same advantages that will give those who locate at this point preeminence in the matter of a minimum cost of production.

Brainerd's Adam.

The following story, the hero of which is none other than Adam Brown of this city, we clip from the columns of the St. Paul Globe, but do not vouch for the truth of it.

The following is the yarn:

"Locomotive engineers are very superstitious," remarked an engineer the other day. "Quite a number are more superstitious of this tendency I know of," he continued, "was that of old Adam Brown, who was an engineer on the Northern Pacific for many years. Adam, who was a German, was quite an eccentric person anyway, and had a habit of approaching the climaxes of his jokes of which, he was an industrious spinner, by the judiciary announcement that the was just as long around the coors about forty miles an hour, under such circumstances a cow's tail would be discovered waving in the breeze, or some other emergency would present itself calling forth a display of the ingenious Adam's presence of mind and dexterity.

Well, on the night in question Adam was pulling a mixed train—that is one composed of both passenger and freight—on the Fargo & Southern Branch for the Northern Pacific, whose train ran over a joint stretch of road from Duluth to Fargo. Junction, and went out for our immediate contact until after passing Moorhead.

"Adam's train left Duluth on time, but arrived at the junction very late. We could obtain no satisfactory answers to our inquiries regarding the time lost.—The conductor reported everything all right as far as he was concerned. The train continued to lose time, however, and reached Brainerd, the end of the division where I was stationed, five hours late. I noticed that Adam had left the locomotive when he came in, and what do you suppose he told me? Why, that Adam had discovered the day previous that a huge tie had been strapped across the track by train wreckers. The whole surroundings were vividly impressed upon his mind and he had awakened just as the engine topped the tie. He felt that he believe in the premonition that he would not be allowed to run along at an ordinary rate of speed, but crept along all night."

BRAINERD, Minn., March 29.—The history of Brainerd's growth and development reads like some marvelous story which delights our fanciful imagination and which partakes in a measure of the wonderful. Seven years ago the well-built, prosperous city of to-day was but the outpost of an advancing army of pioneers, who were soon to make their way to fame and fortune.—Like all the rest of communities having struggled with adverse fate, but inspired with courage and an unfaltering hope they persisted in their endeavors, knowing full well that success in the stern battles of life could only be secured by indomitable perseverance.

300 FEMALE MUSTACHES.

I have watched and waited with patience
For the growth of each baby hair,
I have scanned with a longing eagerness
The strength of the silken down
Shadier palmist years of waiting
For the day to be nearly ended.
Have made up my mind it's useless to try.
There is really something wrong.

I have let it grow for four months—yes, more;
And e'en then it can hardly be seen.
I have watered it, vaselined it, trimmed it with care.
Yet still it remains naked and lean;
And at last worn out with impatience,
Had sent it to the care of that lip.
I have stricken it off and am waiting
For some one to give me the sign.

I have followed after with a jealous gaze
The boy with more than his share,
I have looked in anger at kids with their
Few growths,
As though I didn't care.
But though I try I only seem protected,
And I'll nothing to that end,
Don't be deceived by my satisfied look,
At these I'm looking like a sheep.

I have read the brilliant advertisements,
Some offering a large reward,
While other claim they have the stuff
That will make it grow on board.
I have tried them all with an eager hope,
But each hope has proved fruitless, even;
And here at twenty-six my face is as bare
As it was when I was born.

A SNOW-FLAKE.

A wandering snow-flake fell on a high-born lady's hand,
And a moment lay near a diamond ray, that sparkled from a golden band.
Before the united white of her tapering fingers seemed,
Unearthly fair, with the jewels rare, and the circling gold that gleamed.
But all their beauty fled, when that snow-waif
Its heavenly form,
And lay so nearly that her finger white seemed turned to a yellow tone.
Ah, thus the pearls of earth, though in grand attire arrayed,
Lose all their worth when they stand beside the beauty which God hath made.

A SILVER FORK.

Who can imagine a more delightful bustle of preparation than that for an approaching wedding? That the kind where everything is given into the hands of the sister and the friend, to be arranged as these worthies see fit, elder most proper, but another sort, where loving hands accomplish all, nothing needed for the gala occasion. Where mysterious concoctions of cake are made, and beforehand, that no way to absorb a weekly drink of good old brandy; where the whitest of bride's cake, and the cleanest of jellies, and all sorts of toothsome delicacies seem the essence in the mysterious precincts of the home kitchen; where dear friends are looked for, and invalided mothers the delight of the day by time, where the house is newly swept and garnished, and running over with flowers.

All this charming confusion was taking place in the home of the Leslands. Adelaide, the eldest daughter, was to be married the following evening to Hamlyn Fitzgerald, who might have passed for one of the old Saxon Kings, with his fair hair and eyes of blue. Adelaide sometimes called him "My King," and Milly, Adelaide's younger sister, dubbed him "Harold, the Saxon." And so it came to pass about that the younger members of the family spoke of their new brother, as "King."

Millicent was in high feather, for she was to be one of the bridesmaids.

The cousins, Marion and Amy, had arrived, and the three girls had been kept busy all day in unpacking numbers of parcels and boxes addressed to the bride. At last everything was arranged to their satisfaction, for there was a home wedding, where all the friends were to enjoy seeing the evidences of esteem and favor shown the young people.

"How many strange and rare things!" It seems that Adelaide's friends, knowing her love for the beautiful, have sought especially for the curious and elegant," said Amy.

"Tell us about this queer, heavy fork in the white case; you said it had a history, didn't you Milly ?" questioned Marion.

"Indeed! King values that as one of his choicest treasures," answered Milly.

"Let us sit down and rest; there is time now to listen to the story," said Amy.

"Well," began Millicent, "I don't know where to begin, at the other end or this end—in fact, I think I'll begin the beginning or ending at all—just a plaster a hundred years or so, in the middle."

"Why, how mysterious you are!" said the three, with one voice.

"No, not mysterious; but it sometimes wonder if there really is a beginning and no anything."

"Worse and worse!" cried Marion. "Go on with the story. Don't stray off into such an shrubbingly large field."

"I suppose," said Milly, thoughtfully, "that is better than you should ask King's mother, for she is it, whomakes him the man he is. You have seen her, haven't you, girls? She is, indeed, what a lovely, high-bred old lady she is. The silver fork, brought in case here, she told me its history, and said she had always kept it for her eldest son, and hoped he would pass it down to posterity in like manner. Mrs. Fitzgerald said that her early years were spent in a southern country, and that as she grew older she became ambitious for a good education than she would get at home. As the country was decided, after many consultations as to ways and means, that she should go to an Eastern boarding school. The school catalogue called for the usual provisions in the table articles, for spoon, ring, and so on. As old uncle of Mrs. Fitzgerald changed to call one evening, when the whole were discussed. The next morning Uncle John, as she called him, came in, and brought with him this fork. He said he had packed away with other silver of the same kind in an old chest for years. Uncle John said, 'Now Mary, I want you to keep this fork, for it is very ancient and has passed through many strange experiences and troublous times. Years ago, when a young man, I was in business in the South; engaged in a good deal of time in New Orleans. I had no family, but took lodging in a good house, owned by one of the old Creole families, who were obliged to let furnished rooms to add to their income.'"

"I wonder if they were the kind Dr. Sevier lived among?" interrupted Amy.

"They must have been the poor and proud, direct descendants of the early Spanish settlers; but where was I in my story?"

"Uncle John, lodging in a Creole family," suggested Amy.

"Oh, yes. It was not the only lodger, however. His neighbors on the same floor were new-comers from Santa Domingo, the southern part of the Island of Hayti. He described them as a very married people, with several little children. The head of the family wore a great look of sadness and dejection, and for months did not talk with them at all, for they spoke only in the Spanish language; but he became greatly interested in them, especially in the pretty black-eyed children. He kept his pockets filled with sugar-plums, for his especial delectation. By and by he discovered, during one evening, that days something of the household belongings had appeared. Then he knew that the family were in very straitened circumstances, and he asked the landlady for information. She said that they were refugees from Santa Domingo; their father had owned an extensive coffee plantation, but had lost his life in one of the many negro insurrections that distracted ana an uppy island. These young people escaped to the United States bringing with them such portable property as they could gather up. The landlady said that they were anxious to dispose of some of their silver, saying that if he were willing to buy it of them at its real value, he would be a favor. By these means Uncle John came into possession of those old Spanish spoons and forks. Afterward the landlady told him that the young Spaniard said he supposed America would keep the silver in his family. 'Be sure,' said she, 'it is of great antiquity and has been in the own family for many years. One of his ancestors belonged to the Spanish nobility and lived at Seville, in Spain. The times were hard, with constant wars and insurrections on every hand. The nobility were much richer in aristocracy than dueats, and many of them were tempted by the lure of the wonderful gold mine, in the Spanish possessions in Hayti, which yielded a half million dollars annually to the Spanish crown, to try their fortunes in the New World.

"'Do you know their names?' asked Marion.

"'No, I do not; and that makes it hard for me to tell the story. I only call the New Orleans Spaniard Don Carlos, and that well known little, Don Carlos' great grandfather, a Spanish nobleman, was among the earliest settlers of Santa Domingo."

"'Give the g. g. a name!' Call him Don Juan!' said Marion.

"'All right! Don Juan it is.'"

"'How romantic the story is getting,' said Millicent. 'I like it better.'

"'Just imagine far away Spain, and the Spanish noble Don Juan and his dear read about, and the 'grave majestic men' serzanding their lady loves in the balconied moonlight.'

"'And the bull fights! Probably old Don Juan used to hip! hip! hurrah! in Spanish when a bull greed some poor Christian to death,' said Amy.

"'At any rate, this is true,' continued Milly. "Don Carlos told Uncle John, that it was a part of history in their family that their silver was all made of silver taken from the famous mine on Guadal Canal, the one that Pliny, the historian, tells about, Hannibal opened it, and it yielded him 300 pounds of silver ore daily. What do you think of that for a mining enterprise? It would make our California and Colorado millionaires green with envy, wouldn't it?'

"'I don't wonder that King thinks much of that fork,' said Amy.

"'Now, see here; I'll count on my fingers. The thumb can be Hannibal's silver mine, the first finger Don Juan, the nobleman, taking his wife and spoons and going to Santa Domingo. The middle finger his grandson's life in Cadiz, the ring finger his son's big jump in the story.'

"'All right, that's all right,' said Milly. "We don't need the whole family history. The next link in the chain is the grandson, the coffee planter."

"'Call him 'Ferdinand.' That's a Spanish name, isn't it?' suggested Marion.

"'The second finger, then, is Ferdinand, who, together with his wife, Isabella, lost his life in a negro insurrection, and their son, the first link in Don Carlos and family, fled to New Orleans and carrying the precious silver spoons with them. Don Carlos' uncle John, buying spoons, packing in chest, and finally giving fork to niece going to marry Millicent's brother in Mary, the niece; calmly eating Nineteenth Century dinners with an history. Now, Miss Mary, you are the Kings, with his fair hair and eyes of blue. Adelaide sometimes called him 'My King,'" and Milly, Adelaide's younger sister, dubbed him 'Harold, the Saxon.' And so it came to pass about that the younger members of the family spoke of their new brother, as "King."

Millicent was in high feather, for she was to be one of the bridesmaids.

The cousins, Marion and Amy, had arrived, and the three girls had been kept busy all day in unpacking numbers of parcels and boxes addressed to the bride. At last everything was arranged to their satisfaction, for there was a home wedding, where all the friends were to enjoy seeing the evidences of esteem and favor shown the young people.

"How many strange and rare things! It seems that Adelaide's friends, knowing her love for the beautiful, have sought especially for the curious and elegant," said Amy.

"Tell us about this queer, heavy fork in the white case; you said it had a history, didn't you Milly ?" questioned Marion.

"Indeed! King values that as one of his choicest treasures," answered Milly.

"Let us sit down and rest; there is time now to listen to the story," said Amy.

"Well," began Millicent, "I don't know where to begin, at the other end or this end—in fact, I think I'll begin the beginning or ending at all—just a plaster a hundred years or so, in the middle."

"Why, how mysterious you are!" said the three, with one voice.

"No, not mysterious; but sometimes wonder if there really is a beginning and no anything."

"Worse and worse!" cried Marion. "Go on with the story. Don't stray off into such an shrubbingly large field."

"I suppose," said Milly, thoughtfully, "that is better than you should ask King's mother, for she is it, whomakes him the man he is. You have seen her, haven't you, girls? She is, indeed, what a lovely, high-bred old lady she is. The silver fork, brought in case here, she told me its history, and said she had always kept it for her eldest son, and hoped he would pass it down to posterity in like manner. Mrs. Fitzgerald said that her early years were spent in a southern country, and that as she grew older she became ambitious for a good education than she would get at home. As the country was decided, after many consultations as to ways and means, that she should go to an Eastern boarding school. The school catalogue called for the usual provisions in the table articles, for spoon, ring, and so on. As old uncle of Mrs. Fitzgerald changed to call one evening, when the whole were discussed. The next morning Uncle John, as she called him, came in, and brought with him this fork. He said he had packed away with other silver of the same kind in an old chest for years. Uncle John said, 'Now Mary, I want you to keep this fork, for it is very ancient and has passed through many strange experiences and troublous times. Years ago, when a young man, I was in business in the South,' engaged a good deal of time in New Orleans. I had no family, but took lodging in a good house, owned by one of the old Creole families, who were obliged to let furnished rooms to add to their income.'"

"'I wonder if they were the kind Dr. Sevier lived among?' interrupted Amy.

"'They must have been the 'poor and proud, direct descendants of the early Spanish settlers; but where was I in my story?'

"'Uncle John, lodging in a Creole family,' suggested Amy.

"'Oh, yes. It was not the only lodger, however. His neighbors on the same floor were new-comers from Santa Domingo, the southern part of the Island of Hayti. He described them as a very married people, with several little children. The head of the family wore a great look of sadness and dejection, and for months did not talk with them at all, for they spoke only in the Spanish language; but he became greatly interested in them, especially in the pretty black-eyed children. He kept his pockets filled with sugar-plums, for his especial delectation. By and by he discovered, during one evening, that days something of the household belongings had appeared. Then he knew that the family were in very straitened circumstances, and he asked the landlady for information. She said that they were refugees from Santa Domingo; their father had owned an extensive coffee plantation, but had lost his life in one of the many negro insurrections that distracted ana an uppy island. These young people escaped to the United States bringing with them such portable property as they could gather up. The landlady said that they were anxious to dispose of some of their silver, saying that if he were willing to buy it of them at its real value, he would be a favor. By these means Uncle John came into possession of those old Spanish spoons and forks. Afterward the landlady told him that the young Spaniard said he supposed America would keep the silver in his family. 'Be sure,' said she, 'it is of great antiquity and has been in the own family for many years. One of his ancestors belonged to the Spanish no-

GREAT MEN'S SONS.

The Worthless Character of the Male Offspring of Statesmen.—Some of the Noted Families in American History That Have Died Out.

Last week, writes a Washington correspondent to The Cleveland Leader, Congressman Holman's son, by his drunken brutality, furnished food for the gossips of the capital. This week Senator Mahone's son is filling his place. Holman's son was drunk at one of the feast of Weasands in invited receptions. He rudely seized the bare arm of a pure girl, and blow ing his brandied voice into her face tried to force her to dance with him. Mahone's son was notorious only for his hotel because it was evident that he was already drunk. He came to the hotel register, and makes rags of the parlor curtains. At the close of his spree he tries to shoot one of the colored servants and scents a bullet through the hair of another. On the night of his coming into notoriety Virginia Mahone had been so drunk for a period running over three months that the servant whom he shot had had to put him to bed every night.

Senator Holman, Indiana, knowing the inefficiency of their sons, have given them appointments and have been imagining them here doing nobly but evil at the expense of the government. Economy, like charity, should begin at home. Holman's son has no worth his millions, and Holman, who pinches his employees and economizes should support their offspring on their congressional salaries. Most of the statesmen's sons work for a name, but suppose there are half a dozen men among them who are not worth at least $100,000 apiece. Seldom do you have their children on the pay-rolls of the government. Mahone's son was employed to shut the seams, by the page, I think, $2,400 a year. The son of Senator Conkling was first placed employed in the senate clerk's office, and gets $2,200, and another one of Harlan's sons is in the land office. Senator Logan's son was a member of the committee as clerk at $6 a day. Senator McMillan's son draws $2,200 a year from the pensions office on account of his father's committee, and Senator Lapham's son draws $6 a day from a similar position on the committee on woman suffrage. Senator George has a son who is receiving $1,800 as stationery division of the senate at an annual salary of $1,000. Old Ell Saulsbury, who pays $6 a day for a position on a committee, and a brother of Senator Jones is a clerk in the sergeant-at-arms' office at $6 a day for the house. Many congressmen have their children and their relatives employed at handsome salaries from the states to would name a number of clerks who have positions solely on account of their fathers' or uncles' influence.

The effect of such appointment is that the children of these high places are secure through their fathers; and if they have the ability to do the work assigned to them they shirk it and rely upon others.

What men's sons rarely inherits the ability of their fathers. You can count on the fingers of one hand the sons of the presidents of their fathers have been noted in the history of the country, and the greatest men our country has had have no issue to which their country can point with pride. Washington, Jackson, Madison, Polk, Buchanan all died childless; and I believe that no lineal descendant of Thomas Jefferson survives. John Van Buren was the bright son of a bright father, but he is dead, and the family has passed out of notice. None of the Jeffersons, since the president, has shown much ability, and there be any noted Monroes the world has not heard of them. Some of Andrew Johnson's children are living, but none of them inherited their father's ability, and Gen. Grant's sons at middle age are not what was hoped from them. Not one of our great statesmen outside of the presidents. Henry Clay had a bright son, but he was killed in the Mexican war, and one of the Clay family was recently elected up in a district in Kentucky. John Randolph and Patrick Henry both died bachelors, and if there be any descendants of Calhouns the world is ignorant of their merits. You may see a son of Beverly Johnson leading about in the street any night, as worthless to his country as his father was valuable. President Tyler was the greatest son of a great father, but John Tyler's children are not more of national note, and one of them is now holding a treasury appointment. Some of Jefferson's great-grandaughters are leading citizens in the departments here, and one of his great-grandsons lately applied for a place and failed to get it. Silas Wright, of New York, was married, but he never had any children. Aaron Burr and Thomas Corwin are the only vice presidents, died without issue. Alexander Stephens died a bachelor, and so also did ex-President Polk, our greatest and purest writer.

The great statesmen families which have transmitted their talents are easily numbered. The Bayards have had three successive senators, and one in the direct line, and Tom Bayard's uncle, Richard Bayard, was in the senate from Delaware. Senator Tom's father, Tom Bayard and his father were both senate at the same time, one from Delaware and the other as a daughter of Senator Richard Bassett, both of the members of the constitutional convention, a signer of the constitution, and one of the senators at the beginning of the government.

The Frelinghuysens' prominence dates back to Frederick Frelinghuysen, of the continental congress, who, at 30 years of age, was a senator, from 1793 to 1796. Next comes Theodore Frelinghuysen, senator, college president, and second on the ticket with Henry Clay, and now we have Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, secretary of state, who is the nephew and adopted son of old Theodore.

The Sherman family date their ancestry back to old Roger Sherman, whose name is signed to the Declaration of Independence. George Pendleton had a grandfather who acted as secretary of state for Washington and a grandson in the Burr-Hamilton duel, and Senator Pendleton's father, Edmund Greene Pendleton, was a member of congress from Ohio. Allen G. Thurman is a descendant of "Fog-Dance" Allen, and Simon Cameron gave his long-held position over to his son Don. Secretary of War Lincoln is a grandson and namesake of his greater father's name, and Senator Lamar has an ancestry which has been rooted in the south six or seven generations. John Wise, of the present congress, is son of Henry A. Wise, of Virginia, a very noted man years ago, and the great John C. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, has a son in congress, who is the picture of his father, and who made a very fair speech at the democratic convention at Chicago. Wade Hampton has an ancestor after whom he was named who was a conspicuous actor in the Revolutionary war. Burr and Jefferson, and who, when he died in 1835, was said to be the richest planter in the United States.

Senator M. C. Butler comes of an old family, though I cannot recall any of them all dealt out wine to some burgher in the days of long ago. He is the nephew of Gen. Pierce Butler, whom Sumner attacked in a speech on the floor of the senate when the latter was not present, and for which Preston Brooks, who was a relative of Butler's, afterward assaulted Sumner in his seat. This man's name was Andrew Pickens Butler. He was the son of William Butler, who went into the Revolutionary war a lieutenant and came out a major general, and who was also a member of congress for ten years in the days of Jefferson and Madison. Pierce M. Butler was also son of this William Butler, and he was named after his ancestor, Pierce Butler, who came from the family of the dukes of Ormand, in Ireland. Old Pierce Butler was one of our first senators, as well as a Revolutionary officer. Pierce M. Butler, our present senator's uncle, was governor of South Carolina, and was killed while acting as colonel in the Mexican war.

I suppose the connection between these Butlers of South Carolina and Ben Butler, of Massachusetts, could be traced; but it is not close. Benj. Butler's father was an officer in the Revolution, and his father served under Jackson at New Orleans. He was named, I suppose, after the Benjamin F. Butler who was Van Buren's law partner, and acted for a time as Jackson's attorney general, though I do not know what relation existed between them.

Senator Ben Harrison is a grandson of President Harrison, and he was 7 years old when his grandfather died. His great-grandfather was the noted Benjamin Harrison, who signed the Declaration of Independence, and Carter Harrison, of Chicago, comes, I am told, from the same stock. Robinson Harrison stated for a time as Washington's private secretary, and Richard Harrison, born in 1750, was for many years auditor of the United States.

Eugene Hale comes from Maine, but the Hales of New England are legion. Artemus Hale was a school teacher near Boston in the days of Jefferson, and Charles Hale, of Boston, was assistant secretary of state in 1873; James T. Hale was in congress for six years, including the period of the late war, and John P. Hale, of New Hampshire, spent eighteen years in the United States senate, and in 1852 was the free-soil candidate for vice-president.

But where you can mention one great man in our history who has had a grandfather, I can show you ten who have not. The sons of great men are in general more apt to go the bad than to the good, and the blood of the decent, hard-working plebeian often produces better men than that of the pampered patrician.

I might add a conclusion that neither Holman nor Mahone is a man of an old family or of a noted one. Mahone was born in Virginia, and Gen. Mahone started life poor. There was a Holman in Indiana years ago who was a judge, and a strict judge. He may have been Holman's father, but, if so, the fact would not give him any credit outside of the state.

Soil-Water as a Cause of Cholera.

That too much as well as too little water in the soil is a predisposing to cholera is vouched for by a large mass of facts. As I watched the cholera in Memphis in 1854 I was surprised to find that the marshy districts, where, as a rule, the poorest dwellings are found, escaped epidemics. The great Donan bog, which lies between Edinburgh and Leith, was surrounded by the epidemic, but the disease did not enter the villages on the bog. On the Prolanger coast the epidemic occurred at Halbergmoos. On going thither the affected houses were found to stand on a ground of sand composed of quartz, which tongue reached inward on the moor. Reinhard in 1854 observed the same fact for Saxony. Theonthorn part of Saxony, which lies on the Spree is a highly malarious district. For the seventh time that cholera visited Saxony it manifested this region of fever. I will not say that cholera can not be epidemic on a fen, but I do believe that when such an occurrence takes place we ought to ask ourselves what relation it may have with the state of moisture of the soil. The theory on the soil and subsoil waters requires that a knowledge should be obtained of what takes place in and over the soil on the outbreak and on the cessation of cholera. It may, as has been said, a continuous record of facts. That cholera should very seldom be met with in the mountains and also on the mountains is in harmony with the disposition of cholera in respect of the soil. As the frequency of cholera in these regions diminishes, the height increases; the weather and cholera are usually decisive. Salzburg in the Tyrol, is an exception. Salzburg is, as a rule, drier cholera away.—Popular Science Monthly.

An Orchard Fertilizer.

The best fertilizer I have used for fruit trees is made of chip-dirt from the wood-pile, and old ashes. I mix one proportion of one bushel of ashes to three of chip-dirt, stirring well with the shovel. About two bushels of this mixture is to be scattered around each young tree, giving large, well-grown trees more. The manure is applied in the spring, and is spread around the trees any litter or rubbish that would harbor mice. In summer the ashes are to be scattered on the soil. Experience has taught me that this fertilizer is a very important purpose, not only in supplying the trees with suitable food, but in mellowing the soil and helping on such crops as I may choose to plant in my orchard. It is an excellent fertilizer for any kind of crop or perennial, and the ashes (from hard wood) supply the trees with the element they most need, and which, namely, potash.

It is a pleasure to see how a young orchard will grow after an application of this fertilizer. Soldiers often burn logs to get ashes for this purpose, and I have used them. I go to a dead oak or hickory and scrape together the fallen bits of bark, and the soil beneath each tree. This is a very good substitute for the chip-dirt. It is obvious that this material is rich in the elements that go to make up a live in keeping fruit trees well fed; but a large space around each tree should be plowed, and the top tree from which to draw its supplies. Mulching is also a process promising to form branch low, and to trim down rather than up.—W. B. Jones in American Agriculturist.

Vocal Quality.

A lady was singing at a concert, and her voice was, to say the least, very thin and piping.

"Ah," said her husband, who, after the manner of husbands who have married into fame, was always on the powers were great, "what a fine voice she has!"

"Very fine," replied a strange man at his side.

"What timbre!" continued the husband.

"Considerable timber," responded the stranger again, "but not many cracks in it for weather-boarding, and not quite enough for a paling fence."

The husband remained silent during the concluding portion of the entertainment.—Merchant Traveler.

Jack Bloods was the logo, and so faithfully did he portray the traditional fiend that the audience lost control of itself, and in the second act began shooting at the fell conspirator. One shot struck Othello's sword-hilt, and the sound had to be drowned on the stage and roll into the wings. The indignant pioners were finally quieted and the play proceeded, but the final denouement was so taken to heart by the spectators that Booth remained in the theater all night for fear of the vigilantes, who talked seriously of lynching the 'cold-blooded cuss' on hand.

WE, TOO, HAVE TESTED IT.

To Te Public:

In view of the harmful results which so frequently attend the use of so-called patent or proprietary cough syrups containing morphia, opium, and other equally dangerous drugs, the undersigned, physicians of Maryland, take pleasure in endorsing the official opinions expressed by the Commissioner of Health of Baltimore; Dr. Samuel K. Cox, analytical chemist of Washington, and other authorities to the effect that the RED STAR COUGH CURE is not only a perfectly harmless, but at the same time an original and most effective remedy, and that it commends itself alike for being entirely vegetable—free from opiates, poisons and narcotics—and for its prompt efficacy, as demonstrated by practical test.

For centuries it has been contended that a cough mixture to be effective must contain morphia, opium, or some other equally dangerous drug, and to-day nearly every cough syrup in the market has for its base some one of these deadly poisons. Not so with Piso's Cure, and at the same time efficacious cough cure has been compounded. The harmful and at times fatal results attending the use of cough syrups containing opiates are of common occurrence everywhere, and in every case of this kind Piso's Cure, according to the testimony of physicians and druggists, has proved itself a safe and prompt cure. It counteracts these dangerous preparations. It is for this reason that medical authorities, and the leading public men speak so enthusiastically of the importance of Piso's Cure in the home. Piso's Cure for Consumption, Sold by druggists everywhere, at 25 cts., 50 cts., and $1.00 per bottle. Free pamphlet on label and wrapper and blown in bottle. Thereto other.
