On the president's return from the Adirondacks he found awaiting him a touching letter from Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson, the well known authoress of "Ramona" and advocate of Indian rights, which was written by her from Colorado before she died. She said: Sir: From my death-bed I send you a message which I believe you will think you have already done for the Indians. I want you to read my "Century of Dishonor." I am dying happy for the belief that it is to your heart that is destined to strike the first steady blow for justice to the Red Children of infinity from our country and rightting the wrongs of the Indian race. With respect and gratitude, HELEN JACKSON.

Violence was denounced, but the formation of an anti-Chinese league was recommended to discourage in any shape whatever the employment of Chinese. A boycott was ordered against all who employ Chinese. The quarters in Chinatown were barricaded and darkened, and 300 deputy marshals prevented any approach in that direction. The city is swarming with excited and enthusiastic men, but no breaches of the peace had occurred up to midnight.

The Brethren Not Happy.

The Farmers Advocate of last week contains the following:

The Crow Wing fair held at Brainerd the 17th any 18th was in no sence a success. This is to be regretted as the county possesses the resources, and her citizens the enterprise, to make as good a fair as any county in the State. This was demonstrated by the showing made at the State fair, where the county received the second premium on grains and vegetables—But there seemed to be a disagreement between the Driving Park association and the Fair management. At any rate when we were there on Friday, the brethren were not happy and although the boys seemed to parade their personal troubles before the public it was easy to see that there were several hearts that were aching. We tried to cheer them up by telling them what good fairs St. Cloud and Fergus Falls had had, but we fear our efforts were not appreciated. It was only when we told them about out the great advantages Fergus Falls possessed that were likely to make her the future metropolis of the Northwest, that brethren Kendred and Howes rallied to anything like their old time enthusiasm.—We then each to their turn pointed out reasons as plentiful as blackberries why Brainerd should be that metropolis. Why, and Mr. Kindred, the water power will be nothing to ours when we get our dam built, and that would have been done if Knute Nelson had got a bill through congress giving the permission. Then, Fergus has no opportunities as a lumbering point or for wood manufacturing, while our advantages are as good as any in the world. In addition to that we have equal advantages in the way of manufacturing flour. We confirmed all this and added other reasons equally convincing, and we soon saw that while the boys might disagree regarding questions of domestic economy yet when it came to the future of Brainerd they were a unit.

Dr. Howes further told us he had sold a half interest in his magnificent flouring mill and that it would start up next week. It is of about 300 barrels capacity.

There is no doubt but when Brainerd gets her water power developed with the great business facilities that it will give, she will make a great stride in advance and other rival cities will have to look to their laurels for the Brainerd boys are noted for their enterprise and push throughout the state.

They Wanted a Change.

They wanted a change and they have it. They exchanged republican rule and good times for democratic rule and hard times.

They wanted a change and here it is. They put the democrats in power, and ex-rebels now control the government they once sought to destroy.

They wanted a change and they got it. Honest taxpayers in Ohio have been asked to pay over $2,000,000 per year, in order that the saloon-keepers may pay no taxes.

They wanted a change and they got it. They saw honest, efficient men turned out of public institutions, and incompetent democratic ward leaders put in their places.

They wanted a change and what did they get? When the democracy took charge of the government capital grew alarmed and there was a stagnation in the iron business.

They wanted a change and they have enough of it. Local bonded indebtedness in Ohio has increased $11,000,000 in two years by the democratic legislature.

They wanted a change and they got it. They are now asking those who fought for their country reduced to want, because a rebel sympathizing commissioner of pensions with his head their name.

They wanted a change and they got it. They gave the democrats a chance to turn the "rascals" out. Not one rascal was found in office so, so they turned a score or more of jail birds, ex-convicts, horse thieves and dead-beats in.

They wanted a change, and the republican party and the Scott law were exchanged for the democracy and free whisky, and in consequence every workingman in Ohio has been compelled to pay nearly 15 per cent more of state and county taxes.

They wanted a change and they got it. With the democracy in power and lower wages for mechanics, miners, and artisans, the railroads had less profit to pump to supply the demands of the honest toilers. Hence the wages of railroaders were cut down to decrease expenses.—[Cleveland Leader.

South Dakota is making a desperate effort for statehood. It has adopted a constitution, and will nominate a state ticket Oct. 21.

Highway Robbery.

We were recently informed of a robbery which took place on the Northern Pacific railway one day this week. A brakeman on that road told a young Swede that he would pass him from N. P. Junction to Brainerd in a box car for one dollar, which he readily paid, and started on his journey in the car. They had got but a few miles when the brakeman went into the car and took what money the young fellow had, amounting in all to about $35.00, and then kicked him off the train. Being without money the poor fellow was obliged to walk back to the Junction in the middle of the night. Arriving there he immediately swore out a warrant for his arrest, and gave a description of the man. The authorities telegraphed to Brainerd and we understand that he was caught, and that Sheriff Ferguson had gone after him. He will undoubtedly keep Thomas company until the next term of court when the case will undoubtedly be heard, and if found guilty, he will doubtless have railroading and spend a year or two visiting compatible friends in Stillwater, for the good of his health and the improvement of his morals.

The above item from the Cloquet Pine Knot has reference to Myers, who was arrested here last week.

The Rev. Talmage has lifted his mighty cudgel in behalf of the roller skating rink. Hear him:

"To me rightly precautioned roller skating is the most beautiful exercise I ever witnessed. It eclipses the race-course and healthy movement all the croquet and coasting and lawn tennis and football and moonlight gliding over frozen ponds and all the other hilarities of house and playground. It is good for the lungs, good for the limbs, good for the circulation, good for the muscles. I see in it possibilities for the best exercise ever invented. It has all the advantages of the gymnasium with more exhilaration and grace. It has all the exuberance of the skating pond on which our fathers and mothers used to break, dip, pottied and furred with none of the danger of breaking through the ice. It has all the vivacity of the outdoor games without being dependant on condition of the weather. It would be a grand thing if all our young men could for one hour almost every evening take a round at this merriment. The women of America who desire the most brisk walk, called the constitutional, which keeps English woman roseate and strong, would do well if almost every day in the week instead of darning and mending and bread-making and parlor dusting and table setting and housekeeping for one hour and join the whirl of the skating rink. Some of these hollow cheeks would fill up and some of these lack-luster eyes would get back their light, and stooped shoulders would become erect, and incipient consumption and merciless neuralgia and nervous prostrations would take everlasting departure. It would be well if the stranger in our hotels, after spending the day in purchasing goods for his western trade, would in the evening go to some respectable rink and hire a pair of skates, and, independent of everybody and interfering with no one, take an hour's flight in the charmed circle and under the inspiration of the orchestra then go back to his hotel and say his prayers and go to dream of home."

The right precaution urged by Mr. Talmage is the avoidance of flirting for which the rink gives so many opportunities. He says let us have no more of the vulgarity of young women and the unattended skating in rinks and forming indiscriminate acquaintances. Such persons should be properly apprehended and the "world-famous devils" who haunt such places for sinister purposes should be promptly kicked down the steps the moment they make any unwarranted advances. Mr. Talmage also cautions all persons against undue prolongation of the exercise and winds up with this graphic advice to the girls that "flirtation is damnation."

CONCERNING OLD AGE.

Everybody Ought to Live a Century and Some Do.

The skeptical views of such critics as the late Sir G. C. Lewis and Mr. W. J. Thoms, as to the possibility and probability of centenarians, have been pretty thoroughly discredited by vital statistics. Leaving out of consideration the old famous specimens of longevity and all doubtful modern instances of men and women living to be 100 years old or more, there remains enough of centenarians the date of whose birth is recorded, and the fact of whose living a century or more is beyond dispute. Indeed, such cases seem to be growing more and more common, and attract no great attention. Yet there are few more readily interesting or more profoundly instructive than that of a life protracted beyond the ordinary limit of old age. To have survived all, or almost all, of one's generation, is in itself a proof of some sort of superiority of tissue or habit or environment. It is to have held out longest in the hopeless fight of all living things against decay, and perhaps to have shown that most men die before their time.

Let men affect what pretense of pessimism and disgust with life they will, they cannot help loving life and clinging to it. Religious enthusiasm may regard it as but a passage the sooner accomplished the better to a higher state of existence; and inability to perform its duties or incapacity for its enjoyments may lead to the unfortunate motives to throw it blindly away; but to men thoroughly sane, organization and energies evenly developed, life is something to be loved for itself. For all means and instances of its prolongation are worthy to be studied. Even whom life disgusts or bores are deprived of the faculty of judging it properly. Life is not for them, but for those who know how to use it; and to those who know, and are so fortunate in mind and circumstance as to expand and not contract their sympathies, it must be as desirable, as interesting, as well worth living at 80 or 90 as at 20. Nor need the strength even of five-score be less labor and sorrow if the faculties be, as some times they are, unimpaired.

It is sometimes said that those men who really live wear out early, and that people live to be old by creeping sluggishly along, barring life's citadel to the sicket by niggardly husbandry of its light. But aside from the fact that the names of some of the greatest thinkers and scholars of the past are to be found in lists of the octogenarians and nonagenarians, is it not true that it is this intellectual sluggishness, this want of flexibility to meet the changing conditions which the change of years brings, this want of interest in contemporary life, that prevents many men from attaining to fortunate old age? So long as a man keeps his faculties employed and interested, so long as he is alert to all the movements of the world about him, so long he remains young, and so much the greater are his chances of coming to what is called old age. The strong and dark old age wherein the physical forces have nearly survived the decay of the intellectual is but death in spite of its peace and dignity; but what time the outdoor games without being dependant on condition of the weather. It would be a grand thing if all our young men could for one hour almost every evening take a round at this merriment. The women of America who desire the most brisk walk, called the constitutional, which keeps English woman roseate and strong, would do well if almost every day in the week instead of darning and mending and bread-making and parlor dusting and table setting and housekeeping for one hour and join the whirl of the skating rink. ### Stuck on the Brainerd Band.

The Royalton Record contains the following items in regard to the firemen's tournament at Little Falls, and the editor of that paper deserves credit for his excellent handling of the subject:

At 2:21 p. m. the visiting firemen from Brainerd arrived in a special coach and they numbered ninety-seven members of Liberty Hose No. 3, and Hook and Ladder No. 1, accompanied by the Brainerd City band, (13 pieces) W. M. Drosdell, leader. There were about thirty Brainerd ladies in the party, and all were met at the depot by the North Star fire company and the Little Falls band. The visiting ladies were escorted in carriages to the various hotels and the parade was commenced. And it was a hang-up good one, or we are not competent to judge. When the Brainerd band plays it makes music and the residents of the "City of the Pines" are justly proud of it and its accomplished head, Prof. Drosdell. The procession made the usual line of march, and after the formal speech making and welcoming addresses the parade was dismissed.

The Brainerd band are fed regularly on "hemi-demi-semi-quavers" and "fortissimo staff" for breakfast; they have a light lunch of "semi-quavers" which is washed down by a "drab" or two of pure "tone," while for dinner their bill of fare includes "quavers," "semi-breves" and "minims," served with organ accompaniment. For supper they have "sharps" and "flats" with a little "chromatic" sauce, served by blue-eyed blondes in the "chorus" style, and when they go out to play, the first man who steps in front of any description is knocked silly by the chief musician, Prof. Drosdell, and then "Jim." Dewar sits down on the offender for three-quarters of an hour, and the next day he is buried in the "odor" style. The result is that the Brainerd band is a first-class group of finishes musicians.

Cliff Law Dodge returned public thanks of the Brainerd visitors to the people of Little Falls, especially the firemen, for the very kind reception and hearty treatment given.

A. J. Leland of Brainerd is a rustler and the orator of the day at pine land.

The Brightest Headlight.

Engineer Frank Farrell of Northern Pacific locomotive No. 167, jerks a thought behind him the brightest headlight in the northwest. His engine is equipped with the "American electric headlight," and it knocks the spots off from any other light with the same facility that it knocks the darkness away from the track. We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Harrison, the electrician in charge during the trial trips, and we are indebted to him and Engineer Farrell for a courteous explanation of the workings of the new light. The electricity is furnished by a small 16 horse power dynamo located in front of the cab, the driving power being a rotary steam connection with the toiler, and the intensity of the light is regulated to suit. The railroad company will place this new light and illuminator on a number of their locomotives. It is quite fashionable nowadays to sit up and watch for the "electric light."—[Royalton Record.

BAKING POWDER TRAMPS.

The danger to the public health from the indiscriminate use of the many lime and alum baking powders of commerce is too keen to fully expand the theme we desire to avoid them. As "forewarned is forearmed," however, we will say that as for apprising them of the special efforts at present being made to dispose of such powders in this locality.

The proprietors of some of the worst of these powders are going from house to house, trying by some cheap trick, or so-called test, with heat and water to induce the belief their article is as good as the Royal Baking Powder, making the comparison with this brand because everybody recognizes it to be absolutely pure and wholesome, the object, the less of life unlovable, squalid, and pitiable, as the Greeks were always bewailing it to be. Men want to live long but hate old age. The grand secular life which ended at Ramsgate the other day should serve to teach the thoughtless and the foolish how noble and desirable is an old age of activity and wisdom. Men at the longest do not get so much of life that they can afford to neglect even the smallest part of it. In view of such lives as that of the Hebrew philanthropist a well-conditioned old age seems only a continuing and ripe youth.

The best is yet to be.
The last of life, for which the first was made.

Air-Driven Street-Cars.

About two years since, says the London Times, we described a system of air-driven tram-cars which have been about to be adopted on the Caledonian road line of the London Street Tramway company's system. This was the Mekarski system, and the car which was then experimented with was put on for regular traffic, and was worked for about two months, taking its turn with the pair of horse-cars. It was intended then to displace the whole of the horse-worked cars on this line by air-driven cars, but various delays occurred which prevented effect being given to the intention until the present time. Now, however, arrangements have been completed, and the first of the series of cars will very shortly be placed on the line for regular working, to be followed in due course by the other nine, which are being built. Since our previous notice, however, several improvements in the pressure cylinder is five and a quarter inches, while the low-pressure eight inches in diameter, with a fifteen inch stroke, and through these the compressed air from the reservoirs is successively used. Means are provided by which the high-pressure air can be used in the low-pressure cylinder if necessary. The engine-house containing the air-compressing machinery is placed at the Halfway road end of the tramway line, where there are boilers, engines, and pumps, by means of which compressed air is forced, stored, at a pressure of 450 pounds per square inch, into reservoirs placed in the engine-house. From these reservoirs the air is conveyed to the tramcar through strong pipes with proper couplings, which are connected up for charging and disconnected when the requisite pressure is obtained. The reservoirs on the car—which are placed underneath the platform—are charged to the necessary pressure. The principal feature of the system, however, is that the air in passing from the reservoirs to the motor-car, the cylinders of the engine is compounded through boiling water and steam at a temperature of 300 degrees square inch, which is contained in what is known as a hot-pot. This hot-pot is placed in the engine-house station while the car reservoirs are being filled with compressed air. By this means the heat which the air takes up during its passage through the hot water not only increases the power, but prevents the formation of ice in the cylinders and at the exhaust. The working pressure in the high-pressure cylinder ranges from 150 pounds down to 50 pounds per square inch, and can be regulated at will. There are also brake arrangements, and all the other appliances which the board of trade have been amply met. The fare of the series of cars for the Caledonian road will be one penny, precisely at the inventions exhibition by a number of gentlemen interested in tramway locomotion. They were received by Capt. Clipperton on behalf of the company, and the construction of the engine and its working explained in detail by Mr. Harris, for Sir Frederick Bramwell, who is the engineer for the Mekarski company, but who was unavoidably absent. The car was run to and fro on a short line in the south approaches of the exhibition, its working powers being satisfactorily demonstrated over such severe curves as could not occur in practice. We may add that the trammers upon the Mekarski system have been successfully working on the tramway lines at Nantes, in France, for the last six years.

County attorney Worthington and Superintendent McDonald of Morrison county were in the city Wednesday.

Mrs. L. N. Lowell will go to Minneapolis the first of the week, where she will visit with friends for a month.

M. B. Pullen has gone to Minneapolis with his family, having secured a position with the firm of S. Walker & Sons.

Holland & McClenahan have moved into new quarters over the post-office, room 10. Their new office is fitted up in fine style.

An elopement is reported from this city in which Miss Etodi Wood and a young man by the name of Harrison are the principals.

We understand that a Minneapolis firm will start a candy and fruit store in the room formerly occupied by A. Olson on Front street.

P. M. Lagerquist has gone to Grand Forks, D. T., to look after his farming interests in that section. He will be absent a week.

H. G. Johnson has sold his dray business and gone to St. Paul where he will visit a couple of weeks and then go to England, his former home.

Rev. E. J. Bronson, pastor of the Baptist church, will preach an anniversary sermon Sunday morning. Subject Sunday evening: "What is that to thee."

Wm. Kennedy arrived in the city on Friday last from Canada, and has accepted a position in Day & Meagher's clothing store. Mr. Kennedy is a brother of Mrs. Meagher's.

Mrs. Skelley, mother of James and Martin Skelley, left for Paris, Canada, on Wednesday with her family. She will reside there in the future. Two of her sons remain in Brainerd.

Rev. E. G. Evans, formerly pastor of the Congregational church in Brainerd but who is now located at St. Paul, is in the city renewing old acquaintances.—Mr. Evans' many friends are glad to learn that he is doing well in his new field of labor.

McFadden & Johnson have on exhibition at their drug emporium a fine specimen of pen art executed by T. R. Congdon, formerly of this city but who has been in the east for some time prosecuting his studies.

The drug store building which has stood in the street in front of Cable's during the building of the Towne-McFadden block has been removed, A. F. Farrar having bought it. It looks decidedly better without it.

A. E. Losey informs us that some one stole a coffin box from the rear of his store the first of the week. This box was brought to his place with a coffin inside it which contained a corpse. The party who got the box is requested to call and get the coffin.

Field, Thayer & Co.'s fine "Hand Sewed" boots and shoes at Westfall's cheap. Call and see them and save money.

We understand that John Bannon has been in St. Paul this week looking after a fat job under Uncle Samuel. Mr. B. has finally concluded that the Brainerd postoffice is not rich (?) enough for him and that nothing will repay him for his untiring zeal in the Democratic ranks but a clerical position under Collector Guernon.

Speaking about stoves reminds us that Conklin, Clark & Co. have the best articles in the market. It is an everyday occurrence to see from five to a dozen leave their place of business on Front street to grace some parlor or sitting room, and where the mass of people go you can rely on it being a place to buy. If you don't believe it, just give them a call.

The Truth, the Whole Truth, and Nothing But the Truth.

This is a truthful list of the new black dress goods we received in the past few weeks: Black Cashmere de Elberon, silk warp, Henrietta cloth, Imperial Sultan cloth extra fine, Brandilions, Shartau cloth, Armenian plain and figured, black cloths, full line of colors in the new and popular Tricotine wove goods. Our selections and prices are the best and cheapest.

COHEN BROS.

The editor of the Elk River News says he is not very badly "outlawed over Brainerd although it is a lively town and contains some very nice people."—You see Bro. Dare, the fact is you have been educated up to the Brainerd standard, and it is not at all surprising that you should fail to appreciate the life a man leads in a real live town.

The train from Duluth on Monday night was delayed some ten hours on account of a freight train off the track. Several of our attorneys and county officials were at Aitkin attending district court which was in session, and they were compelled to remain over. We understand, however, that they enjoyed themselves.

We understand that it is the intention of the railroad company to fence in their grounds at the shops on the north side with a high board fence this fall. This will cut off the roadway that is now commonly used to reach East Brainerd and will make the new bridge across the ravine a necessity, as the other road is very steep and narrow.

The new Catholic school opened on Thursday in the Sixth street school building with an attendance of about forty scholars. The school will be under the management of the Benedictine sisters, five in number, and we are informed that they are prepared to teach any branch of study required. The institution will be a success from the start.

Through some oversight we neglected to mention the removal of McFadden & Johnson into their new quarters in last week's paper. This firm now have as fine quarters as the most fastidious could desire. Their room is larger and well lighted and metropolitan in every particular. Wm. Dreskell is located with them, and using the front window for his watch repairing business.

The most amusing game of base ball that has been played in Brainerd this season took place at the fair grounds last Saturday between the fat men and the lean, in which the former were beaten by a score of fourteen to twenty. It was really surprising to see how elegantly the heavy weights made the circuit of the bases and easily in the out field, even with the perspiration running down their faces in streams. All hands did well.—On Saturday the light weights who came off victorious last week will play with the middle weight or men whose avoirdupois does not exceed 200 or go below 150. This will undoubtedly end the base ball season in Brainerd.

The fire alarm called out the citizens and department in double quick time on Tuesday morning at about 4 a. m. The blaze was in East Brainerd and from here it leaked and though the car shops were on fire but it proved to be the old tank house near the paint shops. This tank was not used very much only in cases when the water works were out of order at which times the engine would be supplied from it and filled up again for an emergency. How the fire originated is a mystery and the theory is advanced that it was the work of an incendiary, but it is not at all probable as its quite evident that as parties intended igniting a blaze that would set something else on fire besides a water tank. The house that was built around the tank had been used for storing oil and waste up to a short time ago and it is thought that some tramp had engaged lodging there for the night and that a spark from his pipe must have done the mischief. The tank house will not be rebuilt. The loss is something like $2,000 or $3,000.

A Deuced Lively Town.

The writer, in company with Bro. Dare, of the Star-News, visited Brainerd last Thursday afternoon. In some respects Brainerd is a deuced lively town. But we propose to pay another visit to the "City of the Pines" at an early day, when we shall have something to say of the town, its people and its prospects.—[Princeton Union.

Will There be a Change?

Thursday's St. Paul papers contained the following telegram from this place: "There is a flurry of excitement over a rumor that Postmaster Hartley has been suspended and the appointment given to H. H. Barber, late cashier of the First National bank. Mr. Barber is son-in-law of Ex. P. White, who, being seen about the report, disclaimed any knowledge of the matter. Mr. Barber, Mr. White says, is still in New England, where he has been employed since he left here, but he has recently lost his place and was expected home about July 1. Mr. White said if appointed the appointment had been made from Eastern backing, though possibly Mr. Kelly may have indorsed the recommendation. Mr. Hartley has received no notice of the change."

Light vs. Middle Weights.

The game of ball between the light weights and middle weights will take place at the Driving Park grounds tomorrow afternoon at 2:45 sharp. Admission to the grounds will be 15 cents.—The names of the light weights were published last week, as was also their positions in the game. The names of the middle weights is as follows: F. H. Stanley, c; Frank E. O'Brien, p; Tom Sanborn, 1 b; Chas. Congdon, 2 b; G. S. Fernald, 3 b; J. C. Foote, ss; Wallace Bell, lf; W. W. Babcock, cf; J. E. Wilson, rf.

Westfall has the agency of James L. Libby & Co.'s fine shirt. For quality and perfect fit they cannot be excelled. Don't fail to see them before purchasing.

Railroad Employe's Library.

A meeting was held in the library rooms at the Northern Pacific shops on Monday evening for the purpose of getting the proposed scheme of a library for the employes of the railroad in this city under headway. R. M. DeLaimbert was chosen chairman and A. Mahlum secretary. This meeting was the first one and the principal object in its call was to select men from the different departments to work up the organization and get it in running order, which was done, and the meeting adjourned until the first of next week, when business of importance will be transacted. This idea of a library for the workmen is by no means an original one in this instance, as it has been successfully carried out in other places, and is of considerable importance to those interested. It will furnish a place for the men to spend their leisure hours with both profit and pleasure to themselves and it should be encouraged on every hand.

MARRIED.

THULIN—OLSON—At the residence of the bride's brother-in-law, Joseph Eckblom, on Sept. 19th, Mr. P. M. Thulin, formerly of Marshalltown, Iowa, and Miss Christine Olson, of Chicago, by Rev. N. B. Kelly.

The contracting parties are well known in this city and have the best wishes of all their friends. In the evening they were serenaded by the Brainerd band at Mr. Eckblom's residence on Ninth street, and after which they were invited in to partake of refreshments. Mr. Thulin is one of the gentlemanly employes of the N. P. paint shop.

McPHERSON—McDONALD.—By the Rev. Father Vandry, on Sept. 20th, Mr. A. McPherson to Miss Annie McDonald. Both of this city.

The newly married couple start out on life's voyage under very favorable circumstances and they have the best wishes of a host of friends.

Try Parker for anything in his line He always keeps the best.

Baptist Library Society.

A very enjoyable occasion was enjoyed at the Baptist church on Tuesday evening, it being the regular meeting of the Young People's Association of that church. The first thing on the programme was the election of officers for the ensuing three months and resulted as follows:

President—Dwight Potter.
Vice President—B. S. McMahon.
Secretary—T. Bartlett.
Treasurer—Miss Annie Thabis.
Organist—Miss Carrie Riggs.

After this came a very nicely prepared programme and which was listened to by the audience with interest. It consisted of reading by Miss Annie Thabis; recitation by Miss Lillie Robinson; song by Miss Addie Everett; reading by Mrs. Green; recitation by Miss Vestie Hayden; guitar music by Miss Maud Heustis and Mrs. M. E. Robinson; reading by Miss Brockway; recitation by Miss Olive Closier; song by Miss Clara Martin; recitation by Miss Nellie summers and reading by Miss Louise Smith.

This society holds regular meetings every week but the literary programme is produced only once a month.

Youthful Vandalism.

Base ball is a very pice game and we never knew an instance until the present week where it lead to vandalism and the mutilation and destruction of property. Brainerd has got two or three quite youthful base ball nines and one of these clubs composed, we understand of southeast Brainerd youths between the ages of fourteen and seventeen years, made their minds they must have uniforms with which to appear on the diamond in a creditable manner to themselves and their posterity, but how to obtain them was a mystery which was finally solved by some of the ring leaders. These bright youths made up their minds to get the material from the passenger cars which were standing on a side track in the yard at the shops awaiting repairs. This was on Friday of last week, and the day watchman at that place caught them in the act of carrying off some of the cushions from the coach shop. The boys on his approaching ran away and he did not think that there was anything wrong and so did not investigate further, but when the same crowd were found in the neighborhood again on Sunday he went into the car and found to his surprise that those young rascals had cut the plush from the cushions of twenty-six seats and the backs of eight seats in one car and stripped nine seats in another car in a similar manner. The matter was at once reported to the railroad authorities and the counsel for the road has under advisement what is best to do with the boys who so wantonly destroyed $250 worth of property.—Several of the youths were not so much to blame as two or three who lead them on, saying that the railroad men had sold them the cars were discarded and that they could have all the plush they wanted. The manner in which they carried it away was in bags and two of them stuffed full were found in the brush near by. The boys have not stated how they expected to get their suits made up without exciting suspicion if they were not detected before, but we will wager a uniform for them all round that it will be a sorry lesson for them and one that they will remember for some time. If they get off with only the cost to the reform school they may consider themselves lucky.

Trunks and valises cheap at Westfall's.

Will we have Street Cars.

Rumor hath it that ere long Brainerd will have a street railway in full operation. It is said that the line will connect south Brainerd with the passenger depot and that another line will run to East Brainerd to accommodate the vast amount of travel to and from the Northern Pacific shops. The road when built will probably pass over the bridge that has been ordered over the ravine. Just keep your hand on your pocket and have the exact change ready for pickpockets will undoubtedly abound in profusion.

Our line of clothing was never more complete. You can get good suits from $4.00 up, good serviceable overcoats at $5.50, $6.50, $7.00 and fine dress overcoats from $18.00 to $25.00. Call and see them at the new store in the Towne-McFadden block.

THE CATHOLIC FAIR.

The Catholic fair which closed on Saturday evening was a success in every way successful, the result financially being all that could be expected considering the times. The following is a list of the presents that were awarded by vote and the names of the parties who were running for them:

Mrs. P. H. Carney and Mrs. B. A. Whitney, for one of the finest gold watches at F. G. Sundberg's jewelry store, awarded to Mrs. Carney, The votes amounted to $253 for Mrs. Carney, and $135 for Mrs. Whitney.

Conductors J. Corcoran and K. McCusker, for conductor's silver mounted lantern, awarded to Mr. Corcoran.—Total amount received $66.

Mrs. Grandmont and Wm. Barron, for overcoat, awarded to Mr. Robinson. Total amount received $138.

A. F. Leopold and O. C. Foster, for doll in bridal costume, awarded to Mr. Leopold. Total amount received $35.

Mrs. Farrow and Mrs. Bone, for very fine tea pot, 125 votes for the former and 127 votes for the latter.

Music was furnished by the city band, Prof. Cooke and Mr. Mitchell, all of whom were publicly thanked by the pastor.

The ice cream table in charge of Mrs. Chapman was a great success, netting $60.

Next in order of success may be mentioned table No. 3 in charge of Mrs. John Hughes and Mrs. Gorman.

Table No. 2 was managed by Miss Johns, Cohen and Miss Minnie Beaney, and was very fine.

Mrs. C. Grandelmyer had table No. 1, and the finest display of articles at the fair.

The pastor requests us to express his sincerest thanks to the generous non-Catholic friends and to the press, for all given in making the fair a success. He mentions especially the non-Catholic Scandinavian friends, and says that the entire community has his sincerest thanks.

The management of the fair presented to Mrs. B. A. Whitney a magnificent silver water pitcher in recognition of her services.

The net proceeds of the fair amount to $1,300, which has been deposited in the First National bank.

THE RINK.

WHEN THE MISTS HAVE CLEARED AWAY.

When the mists have rolled in splendor
From the beauty of the hills,
And the sunshine warm and tender,
Falls in blessing where it wills,
We may read love's shining letter
In the rainbow of the spray;
We shall know each other better
When the mists have cleared away.

If we err in human blindness,
And forget that we are dust,
If we miss the law of kindness
When we struggle to be just,
Showy sings of peace shall cover
All the sad that clouds our way,
When the weary watch is over
And the mists have cleared away.

When the silvery mists have rolled up
From the faces of our own,
Oft we deem their love has failed us,
And we wander on path alone;
We should see them near and truly,
We should trust them day by day,
Neither love nor blame unduly,
If the mists were cleared away.

When the mists have risen above us,
As our Father knows his own,
Face to face with those we love us,
We shall know as we are known.
Low beyond the orient meadows
Floats the golden fringe of day;
Heart to heart we hide the shadows,
Till the mists have cleared away.

NEAR WHEN DAWNING.

When life's troubles gather darkly
Round us, we begin to follow fancy;
When no hope the sad heart lightens,
No voice speaks a word of cheer;
Then the darkest the shadows scatter,
Giving us a cheering ray—
When the night appears the darkest,
Morning is not far away.

When adversity surrounds us,
And our sunshine friends pass by,
And the dreams so fondly cherished
With our earthly treasuries lie;
Then amid such gloomy seasons
This sweet thought can yet be drawn;
When the darkest hour is present
It is always near the dawn.

When the spirit flutters fleetest
On the confines of this life,
Parting from all joyful memories,
And from every scene of strife,
Though the scene is red and gloomy,
And the body pallets in fear,
There dark hours will soon be vanished,
And the glories morn be here.

Pain cannot exist in always,
Brighter days will soon be here,
Sorrow may oppress us often,
Yet a happier time is near;
All along our earthly journey
This reflection lights our way;
Nature's darkest hour is always
Just before the break of day.

Let us lay to heart the comfort
In this sweet reflection found,
That, however dim our darkness,
Somewhere still the world around
Dews are glistening, flowers uplifting,
With their fragrance, to be shed,
Lakes and streams and woods and mountains
Mist-in-the-blue of morn!

Never the night, however dismal,
But without a star appears,
Never was sorrow but a day star
Lighted up life's darkened room,
Never was a grief in its bosom
Was the seed of hope imparted,
There is still a sunrise somewhere,
Speeding, speeding round the world.

The Beacon Fire.

It was a wild and rocky coast, along which ran the path that led to the home of old Gaelin Ferr. At certain times the cottage would have possessed but little attraction for a bold sterling youth like Owen Glenn, but a dreadful tale brightened up its appearance—a young girl named Annie, named the most aged grandmother who dozed by the hearth through the long evenings, to watch the bright flames as they shot up from the broad fireplace, and perhaps to see visions of fairy with her slim cross.

Dame Frere was a sharp voiced, bustling woman, long past middle age, and not a bit like, mother, to the gentle, very sweet temper, but she had a soft place in her heart for granny, and it was to please her that she had kept her pretty namesake to come and visit them for a few months.

Annie was a tall, slight girl as strathan a pine tree, and as graceful as a fawn. Her yellow hair hung in a perfect maze of shining curls all about her shoulders and far down below her waist. Imagine a sweet innocent face lighted with great lustrous dark eyes, and a red mouth always curving into smiles, and you have some idea of Annie.

Most of the young girls in the vicinity, were buxom, merry lasses, with hair and eyes to match—both of intense blackness—and with dark cheeks of the hoyden in them. Their laughter was loud and hearty, and their ways more frolicsome than refined, but that it is not strange that when this graceful, pale stranger came among them, with her shy ways and delicate coloring, her swift changes of expression and native ease of manner, she was at once taken into the hearts of all the young people in the neighborhood.

Owen Glenn had fallen head over heels in love at first meeting with Annie, and had not missed a single opportunity of meeting her at the various rustic gatherings to which he was invited, and to-night he was going to seal his fate by telling Annie that he loved her, and if he could but meet with a response to the ardent feeling with which he had worshiped her.

Owen was not all selfishness as to the success of his suit; for there was another who admired Annie, and this was far above him in worldly station and wealth, and as Owen, in his freedom from envy, also believed, in good looks and in other qualities calculated to win a girl's heart.

Annie had never had the pleasant little courtes es and attent ons of both in a way calculated to reveal her mother, though, as to that, it would have been an impossibility for her to be other than an sweet and gracious as not to gain little hope in each pass onate young heart.

This matters stood as Owen started from his home to take the long and tedious walk over the cliffs which must be traversed before he could reach the cottage which sheltered the object of his love.

It had been raining steadily all day long, and as night came on the wind had risen to a gale.

But, wrapped in his waterproof cloak and lighted by a dark lantern, Owen cared nothing for the blowing elements, and walked along, whistling softly and then again singing to shake himself, after the fashion of some huge water dog.

Suddenly the booming sound reached his ear.

It came from a seaward direction, but at first he kept on his way thinking:

"This is not the harbor, and every one who has the slightest knowledge of the locality will be sure to avoid such a dangerous coast, so its no business of mine."

Again the sound came. This time Owen stopped and listened.

A thought came into his mind as he did so. It instantly so directly of disappointment, and Robert Hunter was the first to congratulate the young couple.

"Who'd have thought it," he whispered to Owen, "that the tables would have been so turned? Truly, there's a side in the affairs of men which takes us fond, leads on to fortune, and you took it, my boy."

The consumption of tea has been gradually increasing of late years in Great Britain, and now the English drink five times as much tea as people in this country coffee is the favorite beverage, and they consume eight times as much coffee as tea.

Will some of our brother agricultural writers please inform us why it is that the biggest potatoes always grow on top of the peck measure?

Everyone says Household Words has heard of the great Robert Houdin. Besides being the prince of conjurors he was an able mechanician and a skillful clock maker. He was also a clever photographer, and his electric clock made for the Hotel de Ville, the massive town of Blois, obtained a medal at the Paris exhibition. It was not officially known that he was sent to Algeria by the French government on a mission connected with the black art—probably the first time that a sorcerer has been called on to exercise his profession in government employ. The details of his expedition have been published. Its object was to destroy the influence exercised among the Arab tribes by the marabouts, an influence often mischievously applied. By a few clumsy tricks and impostures these marabouts pass themselves off as sorcerers. No sooner, it was thought, was better able to eclipse their skill and discredit their science than the man of the invincible hand. One of the great pretentions of the marabouts was to invulnerability. At the moment that a loaded musket was fired at him and the trigger pulled, he remained unhurt a few minutes before the weapon did not go off. Houdin selected the trick and showed that the touchhole was plugged. The Arab wizard was furious and abused his opponent.

"You may revenge yourself," quietly said Houdin. "Take a pistol, load it yourself. Here are bullets. Put one in the barrel, but before doing so mark it with your knife."

The Arab did as he was told.

"Fire are quite certain now," said Houdin, that the pistol is loaded and will go off. Tell me, do you remember in killing me thus, notwithstanding that I anticipate you?"

"You are my enemy," coolly replied the Arab. "I will kill you."

Houdin replied: "I have struck an apple on the point of a knife and pierced it with the word fire. The pistol was discharged, and the ball flew away and there appeared in its place, where it struck, a wet spot. Then the ball set the marabout had marked. The spectators remained mute from surprise and fear. The marabout bowed low before his superior.

"Allah is great!" he said. "I am vanquished."

Instead of the bottle from which, in Europe, Robert Houdin would have made less stream of every description of wine and liquor, he called for an empty glass jug, which he pretended was full of boiling coffee; but few of the Arabs would taste, for they were sure it would raise direct from the cook one's own coffee-pot. He told them that it would have the effect to deprive them of all strength, and to restore it to them as will, and he produced a small box, which he solid stood on a table with his finger, but it suddenly became so heavy that the strongest man present could not move it. In place of the prize physical strength above everything, looked with terror at the great sorcerer, who, they could see, could annihilate them by the mere exercise of his will. They succumbed this teliet. Houdin confirmed them in it, and promised that on a day appointed upon what he was about to say. Had he proposed to Annie, and been accepted?

"Glenn," he began, "I wish you and I could change places about last night's work."

"It's rather late for that now," was the quiet answer.

"I'm fully aware of the fact, and that's what I regret about it. I'm afraid its all all up with me in a certain direction."

"What do you mean?" asked Owen, with sudden interest.

"Why, if you believe it, I might just as well have left my visit unpaid last night; indeed, had far better have done so. Annie is no more aware of the chance of there being a ship outside in the harbor than a babe unborn, and I prevail upon her not to face the storm and come and help," she said; and she gave me counsel that I should not tell you about my leaving you alone to do the good work," he she called it. I don't believe that Annie ever had a thought in her head of what I ought to have done and didn't."

Such a tide of joy rushed through Owen Glenn's heart that he was well nigh hardly speak, and while he was struggling to hide is emotion Robert went on with his revelations, little realizing the effect of his words:

"She's not going home to-day just out of consideration for me. She begged you to come up and see her and tell her all about it. I wish it had been my luck to have such a job. Women are great on any one who touches their feelings. You ought to have seen her eyes snap and sparkle when she was lecturing me about not staying to help you. However, her look is to be for that, hallo! what has come over you?"

For Owen was hurrying off in the direction of the cliffs.

As he went Robert caught a look upon his face which told him more than Owen guessed, and stood staring at him, thinking to himself:

"I see it all. My failure will be Owen's opportunity, for he has only to follow and as long as I can't have her, what odds does it make? And I saw last night she gave him the preference more than if I had been a stick."

When Annie caught sight of Owen approaching she gave a cry of joy, and with an impulsive, "Oh, how glad I am to see you! I do not want to tell you what I think of you."

Then she stopped short. Something in Owen's face filled her with confusion, and a consciousness of trouble with a ready within his clasp, as his low murmured words of love were sounding in her ears:

"I am so glad as you that I have done right in leaving you alone to do the success of his suit; for there was another who admired Annie, but who was far above him in worldly station and wealth, and as Owen, in his freedom from envy, also believed, in good looks and in other qualities calculated to win a girl's heart.

Annie had never had the pleasant little courtes es and attent ons of both in a way calculated to reveal her mother, though, as to that, it would have been an impossibility for her to be other than an sweet and gracious as not to gain little hope in each pass onate young heart.

This matters stood as Owen started from his home to take the long and tedious walk over the cliffs which must be traversed before he could reach the cottage which sheltered the object of his love.

It had been raining steadily all day long, and as night came on the wind had risen to a gale.

But, wrapped in his waterproof cloak and lighted by a dark lantern, Owen cared nothing for the blowing elements, and walked along, whistling softly and then again singing to shake himself, after the fashion of some huge water dog.

Suddenly the booming sound reached his ear.

It came from a seaward direction, but at first he kept on his way thinking:

"This is not the harbor, and every one who has the slightest knowledge of the locality will be sure to avoid such a dangerous coast, so its no business of mine."

Again the sound came. This time Owen stopped and listened.

A thought came into his mind as he did so. It instantly so directly of disappointment, and Robert Hunter was the first to congratulate the young couple.

"Who'd have thought it," he whispered to Owen, "that the tables would have been so turned? Truly, there's a side in the affairs of men which takes us fond, leads on to fortune, and you took it, my boy."

WHAT THE FLOWERS SAID.

St. Nicholas.

"Hey willow-way! I wish I were a daisy,
A merry, laughing daisy," a little maiden sighed.

"Then hey willow-way! when life is bright or hazy,
Be cheerful, gentle spirit," the daisy gay replied.

"Hey willow-way! a butter-cup I'd like to be,
A bright, a golden buttercup," the little maiden sighed.

"Then hey willow-way! little maiden, draw my gleam, Life's golden sunshine," the buttercup replied.

"Hey willow-way! that I could be a clover
With a four-leaved clover," the little maiden sighed.

"Then hey willow-way! ere thy youth is over,
Treasure all its hopes," the flower replied.

"Hey willow-way! if I only could be a rose,
A queenly, pretty wild rose," the little maiden sighed.

"Then hey willow-way! every little maiden knows,
How to be a rosebud," the dainty rose replied.

A Little Coward.

St Louis Republican.

Jimmy Howard was 12 years old, and was away from home for the first time in his life. His mother was an invalid, and his parents had sent him to a boarding-school. He had expected it would be grand fun, and he had enjoyed the first day very much, but it was ended, and here he was in his room with four other boys, and he had promised his mother to read a few verses in his Testament and pray every night.

"I can't," he said to himself. "I know these fellows never pray; see how full of fun they are."

"But you promised," Conscience whispered.

"Mother never half know how hard it would be, or she never would have asked me. Why, I shouldn't wonder if they throw their shoes at me if I get down on my knees to say my prayers. They have the Testament to-morrow when they are not looking."

So he quieted the voice of conscience and slipped into bed, pulled the clothes over his head, and shut out the chatter and tried to pray. But he wasn't happy, and the words would not come. Presently it grew quiet, and he heard one of the boys say, "John, it's your turn to read to-night."

"So it is," was the answer.

And then he listened as John read from the fifth chapter of Ephesians.

"This is my verse, boys," John said, as he finished:

"'Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the spirit.'"

"That one about redeeming the time is mine," said one of the others.

"Seems to me that one about foolish talking and jesting comes home to us pretty well. I never knew that was in the Bible, did you, John?"

"Yes, I've read it to me once, but it is an awful hard one to get by heart to."

"What is your verse?" he asked of a lazy-looking boy who was lounging on the foot of his bed.

"I haven't any," he drawled out.

"Where's the new boy?" asked John. Then, seeing where he was: "O say, Jimmy, you're not so ashamed of yourself to go into bed without saying your prayers?"

"Yes I am, sure and sure alive," the boy said, rolling out. "I'm a regular little coward, I thought I'd all laugh at me, and I couldn't stand it.'"

And as he dropped upon his knees there in the dim moonlight some one else's second lesson of several months of school, about the Prophet Elijah, under the juniper tree, became true to the fact that he was the only one who'd not been ashamed to pray before a thousands in Israel who had not bowed the knee to that false god.

The next day Jimmy Howard wrote to his mother a full confess on of his wrong, not forgetting to tell how he had been comforted, while begging for forgiveness, in the thought that the brave Prophet Elijah had at one time been just as weak and cowardly as he.

Odd Tricks.

Harper's Young Folks.

If you want to see curious slight-of-hand performances, you must go to India. No jugglers in the world can compare with those who practice their curious art in that far away-land.

They have neither curtains nor tables, people gather in the plain at once. A tall, loose embroidered mantles with large sleeves, as western wizzards generally wear, and a high pointed cap is generally clothed only with a strip of muslin twisted around the body. His limbs are bare. He stands in an open space yard without a tree, a grass plot or the bare ground and in the midst of a ring of spectators, all gazing at him with intense watchfulness, he calmly commences his work, like miracles.

For instance, he extends to you his empty hands. You see that there is nothing in them. He stoops down, and from the dry, hot pebbles, with his hands together and presently there is a shining silver rupee.

Then he shows you his bare hands, picks up the rupee, breaks it in two, or pretends to do so, and there are two rupees. He breaks these again and again until he has ten or a dozen, and then he throws them from or where he had it hidden, no mortal can tell.

The basket trick is a favor to and a great favorite. The basket is shown you empty. It is turned upside down in your sight. You know perfectly that there is nothing in it, but the juggler says a little song, and presently a mouse is heard; he lifts the basket and out jumps a live rabbit; times; instead of "mouse" one hears "bird," and instead of a rabbit a dove, and one of these emerges in stead of Madam Puss. More amazing still it is to see puss, or a bird, myself all held to the nose, a little cobra—decapitated on the floor. The basket is thrown you empty. It is turned upside down in your sight. ### A Jamaica Trick.

Detroit Free Press.

There was a large crowd of excursionists in the depot at Savannah, and th's made considerable barbering for the people present to get out of the train. There was a pale faced, sl m-waisted young man, we gh about 105 pounds, do., and a colored man a quarter to get some baggage checked. The man was appreciate the situation, and took his time for it. Finally the young man hunted him up to discover that he was getting ready to shed one of his color, and that the baggage was still uncared for. He spoke his mind freely to him, and the barber "eased" in return. Just what led to the climax I didn't see nor hear, but all of a sudden the barber turned and drew a razor from his pocket and made a pass at the young man with the remark that he'd make bloody carpet rags of him.

It would have been a good time for the young man to pull a revolver, but he made no motion. In such a crowd he knew exactly what was happening, and so the rush of the negro was met by the two toe six ps and a jump, the razor in the left hand, and as he landed in front of the barber he struck a terrific blow and made a sweep for the white throat. Next instant it was flying among the excursionists, and the young man was a murderer was carcssing his elbow and howling with pain. As he whirled around to face the crowd he saw that the barber had left the scene, and that the baggage was still there.

Electric Balloon Signals.

London Times.

An invention which it is antic pated will be of importance in future warfare was likely to be exhibited in the grounds of the Albert Palace by Mr. Erick S. Bruce, the inventor. It consists of the application of electric lighting to balloons, by means of which signals may be made by night over very w de areas. Before giving a practical demonstration of the working of the invention Mr. Bruce described a brief lecture in the concert hall of the Albert Palace. He first stated the results of his experiments and explained the manner in which he had arrived at them. The invention consists of an ordinary balloon, made of material as translucent as possible (in the case of large balloons it is not exhibit on the matter at is cambr c), in which are fixed a number of incandescent lamps. The balloon is a captive one, and the rope wh ch secures it is also utilized to convey the signalling which current to the lamps inside the balloon. The Morse system of telegraphy is employed for the signalling which illum nates the balloon with flashes of light of longer or shorter duration. The inventor dates back only two months, and the experiments were made with a balloon which on the first time last night, and were completely successful. It is proposed to continue the experiments by ascending for a month. The chief obstacle to be overcome is the continuous ignition of light into the balloon—as that occasioned by the highly inflammable material of which the balloon is made. This is inflated. This has, however, been successfully surmounted. During the evening several experiments were made, and the balloon was seen to rise and fall, "God save the Queen," "Rule, Britannia," and "Annie Laurie," seemed to Princess Beatrice," were flashed from the balloon.

Mrs. Samuelson sent her colored servant to a neighbor, Mrs. Peter Shinksky, to borrow a pail of milk this morning. "Tell Mrs. Samuelson," was the reply, "that I never allow the paper to go out of the house; she can come over here and get what she can bring over."

Mrs. Samuelson was very much displeased at this message, but she did not show any of her discontentment.

A few days afterward Mrs. Peter Shinksky sent a servant to borrow Mrs. Samuelson to ask her for the loan o an axe to chop some wood.

"Tell Mrs. Peter Shinksky that I never allow the axe to go out of the yard and that she can bring her wood over here if she wants to chop it up.

Anecdotes of Justice.

The justice of the peace sometimes a peculiarity, and if some one does not watch him he will exercise this jurisdiction, to took a constable, a prosecuting attorney and a clerk to himself. The following instance of the peace that he had the right to send a man to the penitentiary for life. Another justice of the peace sentenced a criminal to be hung on the following Friday between 12 and 1 o'clock if said day, but he couldn't enforce the sentence. An Wisconsin justice of the peace granted a divorce and in two weeks married the couple over again—this dividing the divorce and two dollars for the release. Another forger just so bound a young man over to appear and answer at the next term of the circuit court for the crime of chastity, and the evidence was entirely circumstantial.

Another one, when his first case came up, found a pair of calf skins left behind the dining room table, put his hat on the back of his head, borrowed a chew of tobacco from a friend and solemnly took his seat and in a loud voice announced that court was in session. The first fellow that says a word unless I ask you enough for him to get into the door.

A North Park justice of the peace and under-sheriff was arrested several years ago for the purpose of supplying the people with justice at New York prices, and for a while both offices were they dispensed with a good deal of justice, such it was.

It was a misdemeanor to kill game and ship it out of the state, and as there was a good deal killed there, considerable of it was shipped, and the tail deer especially, and as it could not be told from the doe, the law was a dead one without going across the Wyoming line and back again into the state of Colorado, the justice would summon himself down with warrants, signed in blank, and station himself on horseback at the line, and as the game left the state he would serve the warrants and fine the owners. The officer then drew one of the fines and pocketed the rest, that generally has a coward at one end and a corpse at the other. He pointed this at the owners and paid over generally a fine of $50 and costs. Practicing this fine for several years quite a nimble, but unarmed, knocked the little office down with the butt end of his six-inch whip, took away his leading credentials away and lit out. In less than a week the justice and his copper were in pursuit of the gentleman.

I was once a justice of the peace, and a good many funny little incidents occurred while I was in office. I was not allude to my office all like here in order to call attention to my glowing career, but merely to show them to doubt could have administered the affairs of the office as well as the next rather to speak of one incident which took place while I was a J. P.

One night after I had retired and gone to sleep a tinman called Bill Dunn rag rang the bell and got me out of bed. Bill had a bill against a man who owed him a milk bill of $3.88, all loaded up and prepared to skip across the line over into Colorado, where to grow up with the country and acquire other $3.88 milk bills. When Bill described an attachment for the entire wagon load of goods and said he had an affi avit all ready to sign.

"But," sa d I, as I wrapped a "welcome" hind coor mat around my glorious night cot on, "how do you know while we someone together he is not going to make his way down the valley of the Pardee?"

"Never mind that, judge," says Bill, "you just issue the papers and I'll tend to the defendant."

In 5a hour Bill returned with $35 in cash for fees and costs in the case of the court, and as he settled up and fixed the docket, I asked Bill Dunning how he found the man. Bill said that he made out the affidavit bond and the writ of attachment.

"You see, judge," says Bill Iman, "that the waggin wheel is held unto the axle with a big nut. No waggon kin go any where with out that nut, and that there nut onto the axle. Well, when I disbursed myself of the warn I was packed up and the waggin loaded, I took the liberty to borrow one of them there nuts and put it in my pocket, as it were, and I kept that in my pocket till we served the writ and he pa d my bill and costs in full. Now, you'll allow me that expression, and then I says to him, 'Barber,' says I 'you are go ng far, far away, and you may never see you again. Take this nut, which I have here in my hand as the axle of the off hind wheel of your waggin, and whenever you look at it hereafter, think of poor old Bill Dunning the milkman.'"

It is said that t here is not a gambling house in Boston which is not protected by a thick, bolted door, at which a watchman stands and reads. Electric communicators warn the occupants when any unknown person comes in sight, so that by the time an entrance has been effected by battering down the door, the chips, money and other paraphernalia are all safely stored and the gamblers are chatting and playing euchre in the most innocent manner. It is practically impossible for the police to find a game in progress.
