They Never Die.

How dear to the heart are the old accounts of childhood.

The laldheaded jokes that our infancy knew,
The pans prehistoric we vented in wild mood;
And ancient conundrums so feeble and few!
That sweet recollections rise quickly and work us
To sigh with regret as the tears fall in showers,
When we hear from the lips of the clown at the circus
The crinkle-crankle chestnuts we all love to see.
The moss-covered chestnuts, the mildewed conundrums
And jokes that were aged before Adam fell.

The gossips have set Grover's wedding day for June 12th.

Bartley Campbell, the eminent play writer, has been adjudged insane.

A St. Louis anarchist editor has been expelled from several labor organizations.

Jas. G. Blaine has joined the local assembly of the Knights of Labor at Cleveland.

Geo. P. Craigin, Fergus Falls, has sold a half interest in his patent lock to eastern parties for $6,250 cash.

Over two hundred candidates were given the Scotish Rite degrees in Masonry at the annual convention just closed as Cincinnati.

A hundred shop employes of the Manitoba road at St. Paul, were laid off indefinitely on Wednesday. Railroad work is very quiet.

C. L. Smith, secretary of the state forestry association, is now engaged in making a collection of woods of Minnesota for exhibition.

It is whispered that J. C. Flynn of Little Falls will be a candidate for the legislature on the Republican ticket this fall.—Elk River Star.

Prince defeated Schock in the great seventy-two hour bicycle race at Minneapolis. The former covered 1,042 miles and the latter 1,028

The Northern Pacific railroad is enjoying a veritable boom. It is said that its passenger traffic was never so heavy in its histor as it is now enjoying.

The dam at St. Cloud is now about one-half way across the river, but much more than half the work is done. It will be finished within three or four months.

Kuhles & Stock, the wholesale cigar firm on Fifth street St. Paul have shut down their works temporarily owning to a depression in business and have discharged their hands.

Minneapolis saloon keepers have boycotted a leading ice company because the president of that company voted against the reduction of the liquor license in the city council.

Governor Hubbard has caused a circular to be issued offering a reward of $500 for the murderer or murderers of Andrew Kopp the man found in a Northern Pacific wheat car at Duluth last fall.

During the second week in June there will be a reunion of the Wisconsin and Minnesota Grand Army posts at Lake City. A general invitation is extended to all ex-officers and soldiers to be present and participate in the pleasures of the camp-fires.

A suit has been begun by the health department against the dry goods firm of Mandel Bros., at Chicago, for violation of an ordinance which provides that seats must be furnished for females employed in mercantile and manufacturing establishments.

An exchange says that J. C. Hessel, of Little Falls, was attacked one evening lately while on his way home from business and severely pounded by unknown parties. He was knocked senseless and is confined to his bed from the injuries inflicted. He has no idea as to who penetrated the deed or any reason why it was done. He had sixty dollars with him at the time but none of the money was taken.

The paid base ball players throughout the country number 1,000 and draw annual salaries aggregating about $900,000. If to this sum were added the expenses of sustaining the grounds, the salaries of managers, gate keepers, ticket sellers and others, the total would probably reach more than $1,000,000.

W. C. Beecher, son of Henry Ward Beecher, whose nomination as collector of customs at Port Townsend, Or., is pending in the senate, is in that city to answer the charges against him, which, it is thought, will cause his rejection. His confirmation is opposed by the Democrats of Oregon, where he is not considered a party man, or fit to hold the office. He was formerly a purser on one of the steamers plying up and down the coast, and his record as such is said to be none of the best. Since he has been acting as collector he has been charged with irregularities in connection with the seizure of an invoice of opium, but the treasury department investigated the matter and did not consider it sufficient to justify his removal.

The east-bound passenger train on the Northern Pacific, which left Bozeman at 12:40 P. M. Monday, was derailed half a mile west of Fort Ellis. The dining car and both Pullman sleepers both left the track, the sleeper dragging some six hundred feet on its side. A brakeman named Fitzpatrick, while trying to signal the engineer, to stop the train, was thrown from the platform of an overturned car and instantly killed. A man named Harris, a cousin of President Harris of the road, while attempting to crawl from the window of the Pullman car, had his legs pinioned under the car as it overturned. When released, they were found badly crushed, and amputation may be necessary. The front portion of the train proceeded to Livingston. A wrecking outfit was at once dispatched to the scene of the disaster. The cause of the wreck was an expansion of the rails, through heat, the ends of the rails being too near together, admitting of no expansion.

Mr. Ely an eastern capitalist who was in Tower the past week offered a prize of $5 for every baby born during his visit whose parents were in the employ of the Minnesota Iron Company. It not being a very good season for babies, Mr. Ely was only required to distribute $20 among proud mothers.

Cannot Accept.

A challenge has been received here from the Brainerd base ball club for a match game, to be played at Brainerd on the 23d of this month. Inasmuch as the Verndale club has not been reorganized this spring, the challenge can not be accepted.—Verndale Journal.

Birds of a Feather.

Charles H. Reed, formerly attorney for the State in Chicago and subsequently chief counsel for Charles J. Guiteau, the assassin of President Garfield, was arrested in New York Tuesday and occupied a cell in Ludlow street jail, in default of bail, charged by Cap. Campbell & Co. with the embezzlement of $1,700.

Too Sharp for Him.

A well known confidence man of St. Paul tried to "do up" W. A. Kindred of Fargo, on Tuesday. He first wanted him to loan him money to get his watch out of pawn. Mr. Kindred tumbled to his man, and said him nay. He then wanted him to cash a draft for $200 on a man in Iowa by the name of Frank Brooks, but this didn't work, and in a fit of desperation the crook offered him if he wouldn't give him a quarter to buy a drink, but Kindred wasn't to be bitten, and this confidence man was for once in his life left some distance out in the cold.

Lovers Four and Maidens Five.

This story of the Allegheny Mountains, is a charming little volume that will capture the novel reading public this season. The fact that twenty-five thousand copies have been printed in the first edition shows the magnitude of the advance orders. Not only will the story be enjoyed for its own sake, but it assuredly will direct new attention to the prettiest and most accessible mountain resort in a America, Cresson Springs. The splendid trains of the great trunk line of the Pennsylvania Railroad pass within full view of the broad verandas of the Mountain House. Into a pretty love story by Mary Hartwell Chambers, has woven all the lost tales of the Alleghenies, and descriptions of the beautiful walks and drives of the mountains. Nothing that can interest the visitor or the historian has been overlooked, and the pretty romance therefore acquires a permanent value that will cause it to be preserved for re-reading. We noted many epigrams and clever sayings by the young young women who conduct the campaign against the Allegheny club. Many of them we would like to reproduce here. The serious fault that we have to find with the story is that it is not longer, as it can be read at a sitting. Published by Porter & Coates, Philadelphia, Price, 25 cents.

What Baking Powder Shall we Use.

This plain question comes home to every housekeeper. We all desire pure and wholesome food, and this cannot be had with the use of impure or poisonous baking powder. There can be no longer a question that all the cheaper, lower grade of baking powders made from either alum, lime or phosphate acid. As loth as we may be to admit so much against what may have been some of our household gods, there can be no gain saying the unanimous testimony of the official chemists. Indeed, analysts seem to find no baking powder entirely free from some one of these objectionable ingredients except the Royal, and that they report as chemically pure. We find some of the baking powders advertised as pure, to contain, under the tests of Profs. Chandle. Habirshaw and others, nearly twelve per cent of lime while others are made from alum with no cream of tartar. This, we presume accounts for their lack of leavening power as sometimes complained of by the cook, and for the bitter taste found in the biscuits so frequently complained of by ourselves.

But beside from the inferiority of the work done by these powders, the physiologists hasurge us that lime and alum taken into the system in such quantities as this are injurious. They are not decomposed by heat nor dessolved in mixing or baking. They go with the bread, therefore, into the system, where there physiological effects are indigestion dyspepsia; or worse evils.

The question naturally arises, why do these cheap baking powders use these things? Alum is 3 cents a pound lime still cheaper, while cream of tartar costs thirty-five or forty. The reasons for the chemical purity of the Royal Baking Powder were recently given in the New York Times in an interesting description of a new method for reducing argois, or crude cream of tartar. It seems that it is only under this process that cream of tartar can be freed from the lime naturally in it and render chemically pure; that the patents and plant for this cost the Royal Baking Powder Company about half a million dollars, and that they maintain exclusive control of the rights.

Prof. McMurtrie, late chief chemists of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., in the interests of commerce, made an examination of this process, and reported upon the results attained in the refined cream of tartar. The following extract from his report would seem to answer the query often repeated at the head of this article, and which is so frequently propounded by the house-keeper:

"I have examined the cream of tartar used by the Royal Baking Powder Company in the manufacture of their Royal Baking Powder and find it perfectly pure, and free from lime in any form. The chemical tests to which I have submitted the Royal Baking Powder prove it perfectly healthful, and free from every deleterious substance."

He Gave it Away, However.

Detroit Free Press: "Madam," he said, after a long survey of a flower stand at the farmers' market yesterday, "could you recommend me something to place on my wife's grave?"

"I think so," she answered, as she looked him over. "How long has she been dead?"

"Six years."

"Married again?"

"What is that to you."

"Oh, you needn't be so cranky about it, I've dealt in cemetery flowers for the last fifteen years, and I know about how things work, If you are still a widower you want about $4 worth of flowers and a border of moss. If you are married again you'll pick out a $5 cent rose bush, beat me down 15 cents, and send it to the cemetary by a cardriver."

He pretended to be very indignant, and went to the other end of the market and bought two feeble-looking pinks for seven cents apiece.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Henry Celaire and Lase Celaire, his wife, mortgagors, to Ellis J. Palmer, mortgagee, dated the 15th day of May, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-five, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county of Crow Wing, in the State of Minnesota, on the 12th day of May, A. D. 1885, at 8 o'clock p. m., in book "G" of mortgages, on page 96, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the amount of Twenty-eight and 90-100 ($28.90) Dollars, and no proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, said mortgage was duly assigned by the said Ellis J. Palmer to W. A. Fleming, dated the 15th day of August, A. D. 1885, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 17th day of August, A. D. 1885, at 8 o'clock p. m., in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 137 and 138.

Now, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, I will on Saturday, the 26th day of June next and provided said mortgage is not paid prior to that time, at the mortgaged premises therein described, at public auction at the front door of the court house, in the city of Brainerd, in the county of Crow Wing and state of Minnesota, on Wednesday the seventh day of July, A. D. 1886, at eight o'clock in the forenoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and cost and expenses of foreclosure, and the taxes, if any, which may be stipulated in said mortgage to pay the same.

The premises described in said mortgage, and so to be sold, are the following described lands situated in the county of Crow Wing and state of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: Lots numbered three (3) and four (4), in block fifty-one (51) in the town (now city) of Brainerd, according to the recorded plat thereof, of record and on file in the office of the Register of Deeds of said Crow Wing County.

Bishop Williams, Episcopal, of Connecticut, has decided that women shall not vote in church meetings. Is the cause going backward?

The New York legislature has passed a bill declaring null and void the franchises which the Broadway railroad company secured from the city council by bribery. The governor has signed the bill, and the property thus reverts to the state. The action of the legislature is to be fought in the courts.

William Henry Hurlbert declares in a telegram from London that the defeat of the Home-rule bill is admitted by its friends. The most of the intelligence received in the United States as to home-rule prospects comes from Gladstone sources. A more intelligent opinion as to the result can be formed on hearing both sides.

The most trusted prognosticators assert that wheat will rise in price, in this country and in the European markets, from this time till next harvest, and that the foreign crops—notably the Russian—can not be brought so pointedly into competition with American wheat as it was last year. In fact, for wheat farmers, it is believed the prospects this year are better than for several years preceding.

The relief fund for the families of the dead and suffering policemen of Chicago already amounts to more than $35,000. This is an evidence of the wide-spread and profound sympathy toward the victims of the assassins' bullets. The police did nobly at the anarchist riots, and gave the people of Chicago an assurance of protection in the future which is exceedingly grateful.

Dr. Billings, surgeon of the United States army, has been furnishing documentary evidence of the health of this country. In his report for the tenth census he informs us that the annual increase in population due to the excess of births over deaths is 878,522, and that the mean annual birth rate for the past ten years has been 36 per cent. With children coming at the rate of nearly 1,000,000 a year, the prospect is that the vacant lands of the West will be rapidly filled up.

The people of the South, with rare exceptions, have not been afflicted with labor disturbances, and consequently have hardly had any interruption to their commercial and manufacturing prosperity. The advantage that Southern business enterprises possess in this respect are fully understood and appreciated by Northern capitalists. It is estimated that during the first three months of this year, in new undertakings and in the extension of old ones, fully $36,000,000, most of it contributed from the North, and from England, has been invested in the South.

It appears that since the government in 1851 began to sell stamped envelopes there has been a steady increase in the amount required each year, until now the government has for several years been selling more envelopes than all other producers combined. Last year 279,000,000 stamped envelopes, worth $5,723,000, were sold. With every letting of the contract for furnishing these envelopes its size increases and the price of the envelope is reduced. Envelopes which in 1869 cost $4.80 per 1,000 can now be had for $1.80 per 1,000, and the extra letter size that then cost $6 are now sold for $2.40.

The May report of the Department of Agriculture indicates an improvement during April of two points in wheat with a general average of condition at 95. The wheat crop reports of the Farmer's Review of Chicago, from Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and Nebraska are of a very promising character. Northern counties in Dakota report an authentic increase in acreage. The recent rains in Dakota and Minnesota have left the ground in good condition. The growing plants are reported to have taken a good stand. In Wisconsin spring wheat is just putting in an appearance, while winter wheat is from eight to ten inches high. The reports from Iowa indicate a full average crop.

It is surprising to find in many papers earnest advocacy of a large standing army and a stronger government, which means an unrepublican government. The police authorities of Chicago, New York, and some other cities have shown that our local governments are strong enough, if in proper hands, to prevent anything like an overthrow of the law by communistic uprisings. On the other hand it must be remembered that in Germany, France, Belgium, Russia and England, all strong governments, sustained by standing armies, communistic outbreaks have frequently taken place and they have not been put down any easier than in this country. We are about as well off in this respect, if not better, than the so-called strong governments. The fact is that the pending troubles only call for a more prompt enforcement of the law.

Secretary John E. Russell, of the Massachusetts Board of agriculture, reports that sheep husbandry continues to decline, partly on account of the slaughter of great numbers of western sheep glutting the local markets with mutton. What with threatening dogs and low prices for wool and mutton, the business is without encouragement. The price of hay in Massachusetts is regulated by the baled stuff imported from Canada, which, notwithstanding the duty of $2 a ton, or 10 to 15 per cent. of the current price in the local markets, comes in in sufficient quantities to depress values. The farmers who produce milk for Boston realize almost no profit, even if the value of their farms does not diminish. Butter-making, however, where it is carried on carefully, has been fairly remunerative, the competition of spurious butter not having been felt by the best dairies. The present tendency is to establish creameries, where skillful dairymen are employed and a uniform quality of product is secured.

Condensed General News.

Resignation of Secretary Jenks.

Washington Special: Assistant Secretary of the Interior George A. Jenks, has tendered his resignation. He and his family will return to their home in Jefferson, Pa. His resignation was due to circumstances entirely disconnected with his official relations. For twenty years he has been the attorney of John Dubois the millionaire lumber king of Western Pennsylvania,—who offered him a retainer of $20,000 a year if he would not accept the position of assistant secretary of the interior when it was tendered to him a year ago. Mr. Jenks declined this, but told Dubois that he would be at his service any time he might need him. The latter insisted that Jenks should sign a contract that if he (Dubois) should die or be disabled Jenks should leave Washington and give his attention to the affairs of his estate. A few weeks ago Dubois was taken ill, and sent for Jenks, giving him instructions as to the management of his property. Two weeks ago Dubois died, leaving $8,000,000 to his nephew and only heir, and it became necessary for Mr. Jenks to resign at once in order to take charge of the property. It will be a difficult thing for the president to obtain a man for the position Jenks has occupied who will give as much satisfaction as he has done. Every one who has business before the department speaks in the highest terms of him, and his ability is unquestioned. It is a matter of universal regret that he should leave the department.

The Ohio and Indiana Cloud-Bursts.

Cincinnati Special: A tornado passed through Columbia township, five miles from Albany, Ohio, Wednesday night, the 12th inst. Mrs. Margaret McComas, aged sixty, was instantly killed, also her nephew, Hathman McComas, aged twenty-one. Lizzie McComas was seriously injured, but will probably recover. The house was entirely demolished. Mark McKnight's house was entirely demolished, and himself and wife badly hurt. Stephen Wilcox's house was completely wrecked, and Wilcox was severely hurt. Many other buildings were destroyed and persons slightly injured. Madison county suffered to the extent of more than $200,000. The unprecedented flood caused nearly all the road bridges to be carried off. In Fayette county a flood of eight feet came tearing down Paint creek yesterday afternoon into Washington court house, and increased until four hours it had risen eighteen feet—the highest ever known.

All the lower part of the city was inundated, and many people driven from their homes. Dozens of bridges were washed away. In Clinton and Butler counties the damage, which was great, was chiefly by wind. The house of J. A. Carson in Lemont township, was demolished, and a domestic was hurt. At Middletown trees were blown down and the river rose higher than it has been since 1875. It was full of wrecks of houses, barns and fences. Heavy damage by wind occurred south of Middletown.

The Trade of Last Week.

Bradstreet's Journal says: The industrial agitation in favor of fewer hours work daily has largely disappeared elsewhere than at Chicago. At New York it has been a practical failure, while at Chicago the attitude of manufacturers in several leading lines in locking out some 47,000 employes who demanded a shorter working day, promises to arrest the progress of the movement. Within about two weeks there have been strikes at leading industrial centers to secure fewer daily hours of labor aggregating 200,000 employes; 150,000 have secured concessions without striking, and not over 42,000 of the 200,000 strikers have secured their ends. This indicates that over 190,000 employes are working fewer hours per day than one month ago, a small proportion of the total number claiming to be interested. With the favorable change in the industrial outlook, general business is reported to have made some advances.

Lord Hartington's "whips" report that 110 Liberals have pledged themselves to vote against the home rule bill, and that thirty are doubtful. The Conservative leaders advise the Conservatives in the house of commons not to speak during the debate, as they wish to hasten the division on the second reading. It is rumored that Mr. Gladstone is consulting with his colleagues upon the advisability of withdrawing the home rule bill. Labouchere says he believes Parnell will agree to an amendment retaining Irish representatives at Westminister, if that is the only method of satisfying the Chamberlainites and carrying the home rule measure. The government has forwarded 2,000,000 rounds of ball ammunition to Dublin.

A decided sensation was created at the capitol on the 14th inst. A few persons of both sexes were seated in the rotunda. The police officer of the day, who was among the number, was astonished by seeing a rapidly moving figure which suddenly emerged from the northern corridor leading from the circular airduct and elevator. It was the figure of a man stark naked. With a yell he bounded along to the round stone which marks the center of the rotunda. He planted himself on that stone, and, folding his arms, he struck a heroic attitude, exclaiming that he was going through the house of representatives, as Speaker Carlisle had told him to get a razor and have that erased, pointing to some letters and symbols inserted on his arm in India ink. The police immediately rushed to the man, who made no resistance.

The secretary of the interior has rendered a decision in a case appealed to him from the commissioner of pensions by a Washington law firm, which had issued a circular offering to collect for a contingency fee of 25 per cent. certain bounties which they claimed were due to the widows of soldiers killed in battle, under the provisions of section 1656 of the Revised Statutes passed March 19, 1836. The secretary sustains the commissioner and decides that the half pay for five years provided for under this section was not a bounty but a pension. The effect of this decision, it is thought, will be the abandonment of this class of claims.

The secretary of the interior has rendered a decision in the case of R. M. Sherman and others, in which he reverses a decision of Commissioner Sparks, and holds that Sherman, who held a second mortgage on a tract of land the entry of which had been cancelled by the land office, was a party in interest, and had such a standing in the case that he might be heard to maintain the validity of the entry in question.

Condition of the Crops.

May 17.—The following crop summary was printed in this week's issue of the Farmer's Review, of Chicago.

The heavy rains of the past week have lessoned somewhat the former excellent outlook for spring wheat in Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Dakota. The great rainfall has also occasioned some injury to the winter wheat in Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio and Indiana, where, in some of the fields, it was beginning to head out. The reports do not indicate, however, any serious damage as yet. In other respects the outlook for all the grains in all the states and territories continues excellent. The reports of a poor showing for winter wheat, or reports of injury from insects, with the exception of the permanent damage heretofore noted in various counties in Kansas, are rare and isolated. The presence of the chinch bug is noted in Morrisonville county in Central Illinois and several Indiana counties. In Indiana winter wheat has attained a growth of from ten to fifteen inches, and the outlook continues excellent. The generality of the reports of Missouri indicate a crop of 25 per cent. above the average. In Kansas some of the counties note improvement in the winter wheat outlook within the last thirty days. Butler is to be added to the list of counties where the crop is an entire failure. The reports from Michigan indicate an improvement in the wheat outlook within the past two weeks. The reports from Ohio are generally of a promising character. The reports from Dakota continue favorable. Cass, one of the principal wheat-growing counties in the Red River valley, reports that the outlook could not be improved. The condition of wheat is reported 20 per cent. above the average. The reports from Minnesota are uniformly good. The Nebraska counties still complain of too much rain, and that wheat on all-low lands is looking poorly. The general average of the crop on uplands is good.

Arrest of the Murderous Anarchist.

The following additional particulars of the capture in Chicago of Louis Lingg, the young German who is supposed to have thrown the bomb at the Haymarket are learned: "Officers Lowenstein and Schutler went in civilians' dress to Gustav Kline's cottage, on Ambrose street, one going to the front door the other to the rear. Schutler advanced toward the young man, but before he had advanced half a dozen steps the latter drew a ponderous Colt's navy revolver from his breast, and cocking the murderous-looking weapon, leveled thirteen inches of barrel at the officer. "If I have to die, you'll die, too," he shrieked in German, as he placed his finger on the trigger and took deliberate aim at the officer. Schutler, seeing his peril, rushed upon his would-be murderer, and a life and death struggle ensued. Lingg fought with the fury of a wild beast, and made repeated efforts to discharge the weapon, the barrel of which was held by the officer. The men rolled over and over, upsetting tables and chairs, and rattling the window panes in the room. While the fight was fiercest there was a crash at the front end of the cottage, and Officer Lowenstein, who had heard the struggle within and burst open the door, tumbled in out of the rain, and hurried to his comrade's assistance. The appearance of the second officer made Lingg delirious with rage. He shrieked and cursed in his native tongue, and refused to relax his grip on the revolver until Lowenstein seized him by the throat and choked him until his face grew purple and red. The weapon, with its cylinder filled with huge bullets, was then taken away from him. He was then handcuffed and taken to the central station. On the way he said:

I wouldn't care what they did with me if I had only killed those two officers. I tried to shoot them, and I am sorry I didn't succeed.

Another Ohio Hurricane.

A most fearful storm occurred at Forest, Ohio, last Friday night the 14th inst. It came up suddenly about 10 o'clock, the inky black clouds being livid with a brilliant light which made the atmosphere bright as day. A roaring noise accompanied the storm. In that vicinity it swept clean a track half a mile in width and 9 miles in length, not striking the town to any extent. William McElree, wife and two children and mother-in-law, Mrs. Higgins, were buried in the ruins of a large brick house and the first named killed. The rest were injured, the last named fatally. Mrs. Rufus Lease was killed in her house. Isaac Lambert, eighty years of age, was buried under the house and fatally injured. A. L. Packert was fatally hurt by falling timbers. Thomas Moore was buried under the ruins of a large frame house and badly hurt. The Union Bethel and Methodist Protestant churches were destroyed. Two brick school houses were destroyed. Trees were uprooted by the acre, and hundreds of orchards are completely gone.

The storm went in a northeasterly direction in Wyandotte county, doing great damage also. The village of Levell is reported destroyed. Great damage is reported in Seneca county. One man says the air was filled with balls of fire, and he saw a strange light. Others corroborated this story. The light under the dark cloud looked like that from a large gas well. A great number of people are without homes. Some farms are made almost worthless. The loss is about $350,000 or $400,000.

Conviction of One of the Boodle Aldermen.

New York Special:—The first of the boodle-aldermen to be tried was found guilty at one o'clock Sunday morning the 16th inst., and there is a general impression that speedy justice will be meted out to the rest of the notorious board of 1884, which voted away the franchise of Broadway. Ald. Jaehne's trial for bribery in the matter of the franchise came to a termination at 1:20 this (Sunday) morning, when the jury returned a verdict of guilty of bribery. The trial has attracted wide-spread attention during the week, and the court room was crowded all night with people anxious to hear the verdict. The case was given to the jury shortly before 11, and a little after 1 word was received in the court that a verdict had been agreed upon. The jury filed into court, and after the usual questions the foreman announced that they had found Jaehne guilty of the offense charged in the first count of the indictment—the reception of a bribe of $20,000 for voting for Jake Sharpe's franchise. When the verdict was announced Jaehne paled slightly, and then his faced flushed a deep red. Several of the other indicted aldermen who were present were visibly affected by the result. The judge reserved sentence and Jaehne was locked up. The jury stood eleven to one for conviction on the first ballot, and reached their decision on the second. The punishment for receiving a bribe is a term of not more than ten years in state's prison, or by fine of not more than $5,000, or both.

A Vigorous Charge Against Anarchy.

The grand jury for the May term of the criminal court at Chicago was summoned to appear before Judge Rogers. The judge made his charge, saying:

We hear a good deal lately of what constitutes freedom of speech. There is no constitutional right for men to assemble and engage in wild harangues and incendiary speeches. These men must be held responsible for what they incite others to do. It is only your province to deal with crimes, with acts that have been committed. Nevertheless, the history of the last few days will make it necessary for me to avert to other matters than the actual commission of crime. If men are incited to riot, arson and other unlawful acts, the men responsible for this may be held answerable for the results. The principles of law inculcate the doctrines that men who teach riot, who incite unlawful gatherings to incendiary acts are responsible for the effect of these rantings. A red flag is a public nuisance. It is an emblem that no quarter will be given. The police have a right to suppress these people to prevent the commission of crime. They have the right to quell all such disturbance and the police and the chief magistrate of the city did their duty.

Judge Rodgers dismissed the jury, who retired to their room.

Paramour and Murder in Wisconsin.

Marshfield, Wis., Special: The little village of Loyal, in Clark county, fifty miles from this city, is in a state of great excitement over a murder. Daniel Ellis, a well-to-do farmer, about forty years of age, and with his family and invalid wife lives near Loyal. Ellis has always borne a good reputation and owns considerable property. Two years ago Henry Wright, a well known resident of Marshfield, moved to Loyal and rented a farm of Ellis, living in one of Ellis' houses. Wright's wife is a prepossessing woman of about thirty years of age, and comes of a good family, her parents living near West Bend, Washington county. For several months there have been suspicions among the neighbors that Ellis and Mrs. Wright were criminally intimate, and their liason had become noted. A few days ago Wright returned and ate a hearty supper prepared by the wife, and was suddenly taken with violent pains and cramps. His agony was fearful and lasted until morning, when he died during a violent spasm, his only attendants being Mrs. Wright and Ellis. Ellis protests his innocence, but Mrs. Wright has confessed. The woman's statement is:

She and Ellis had been intimate for over a year and a half. She was to kill her husband with poison, and after he was dead and buried, Ellis was to murder his wife in the same way, and then, after a sufficient time, the partners in the crime were to be married. She gave her husband a dose, but it was too large and he threw it up. Then Ellis fixed a dose for him that killed him. He had been suffering two weeks from the effects of the first dose.

Ex-President Arthur's Decline.

The New York Times says: Ex-President Arthur has been steadily growing worse during the past week, but has not relapsed so far as to have lost all the ground gained during his unexpected rally of ten days ago. Some of the more enthusiastic of his friends believed that the turn for the better had come, but the steady decline since has dampened this enthusiasm, and there are few, if any, who now believe that the ex-president will ever again leave his house alive. Sudden and unexpected rallies, followed by gradual but steady declines, are peculiarities of Mr. Arthur's disease, well known to physicians, and watched by them with grave fears. The danger is ever present that the poisoned blood of the patient will suffuse the brain, and when that happens the victim of Bright's disease feels the last of his sufferings. Mr. Arthur bears his confinement patiently and bravely.

The Irresistable Coachman.

Society in Tarrytown, N. J., was thrown into a flutter of excitement by the public announcement that Miss Grace Morse, eldest daughter of Rev. J. P. Morse, and a niece of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, had eloped with the family coachman, George Winter. Mr. Morse is a missionary preacher attached to the Blackwell's Island penitentiary. The family has one of the most spacious and elegant residences in Tarrytown. Miss Morse, now Mrs. Winter, is twenty-two years, highly educated and attractive, and has been much courted. Winter is twenty-three years of age. During the absence of the family they drove to North Tarrytown, and were married, returning to the house intending to keep the matter secret. It became noised about, they fled, and are now supposed to be in hiding in the town. The family are very much angered and humiliated over the matter.

Geo. H. Butler's Secret Marriage.

Washington Special: The death of George H. Butler reveals the fact that there was a secret marriage when only a romantic attachment was supposed to exist, and explains why a well known lady has shown so much interest in his welfare and reformation. While he has been an inmate of St. Elizabeth, the Providence hospital, and other institutions here, his most frequent visitor was Miss Josephine Chesney, and from her hands he received many attentions that caused surprise and gossip. The day after his death there appeared in a local paper announcement that in 1880 the marriage was performed by the Rev. Dr. Byron Sunderland at the residence of a friend in Maryland. He preserved the secret with the understanding that it was not to be announced until Butler had reformed permanently. Gen. Butler was informed of the marriage and gave it his approval.

The east-bound passenger train on the Northern Pacific, which left Bozeman, Mont., at 12:40 p. m., Monday the 17th inst., was derailed half a mile west of Fort Ellis. The dining car and Pullman sleeper both left the track, the sleeper dragging some six hundred feet on its side. A brakeman named Fitzpatrick, while trying to signal the engineer, to stop the train, was thrown from the platform of an overturned car and instantly killed. A man named Harris, a cousin of President Harris of the road, while attempting to climb from the window of the Pullman car, had his legs pinioned under the car as it overturned. When released, they were found badly crushed, and amputation may be necessary. The wife of Rev. George C. Stull, en route East with her husband, received severe injuries on her head and face, and is internally injured. Mr. Harris and Mrs. Stull were removed to the Fort Ellis hospital.

Queen Christina of Spain gave birth a few days ago to a son. In response to a summons there had assembled at the palace to await the accouchement all the cabinet ministers, the foreign diplomatic representatives, the principal civil and military magnates, a deputation of members of the cortes, and other distinguished persons. The child was born at midday. Both mother and son are doing well. The usual pomp and ceremony were observed in connection with the birth.

Senator Gibson's bill for a board of national defense provides: The board shall consist of the president protempore of the senate, the speaker of the house, two members, not of the same political party, to be designated by each of the committees on ways and means and appropriations, the army and navy committee of the house, two senators and two representatives, to be designated by the presiding officers of each house from senators and representatives of different political parties, the secretaries of war and of the navy, the lieutenant general of the army, the admiral of the navy, two other officers of the army and two officers of the navy. The duty of the board is to adopt and put into operation plans and methods for the construction and armament of the natural defenses by land and water.

Three thousand men belonging to the London volunteers, and officers of the same force, have offered to join any army put in the field by Ulster in rebellion against Irish home rule. The volunteers, it is stated, offered to equip themselves and to fight in the Ulster cause without pay or reward. British Orangemen are called upon to hold a mass meeting in London, under the auspices of the Primrose club, for the purpose of inaugurating a league for the protection of the "unity of the empire." One of the objects of the league will be, it is declared, to secure the enrollment of men "accustomed to service." The Standard contains an advertisement for an adjutant for the league.

London cable: The rumors with regard to Mr. Gladstone's intervention in this crisis are conflicting. Only one thing is certain, and that is that he has given up all hope of getting his home rule bill through this parliament. It is stated in some quarters that, if left to his own choice, he would dissolve parliament at once, but in this desire he has not the sympathy of his cabinet.

Lord Tennyson, Robert Browning and Sir Theodore Martin are arranging for a great banquet to be given in London by authors and artists in honor of Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Sir Thomas Erskine May, who was recently elevated to the peerage, with the title of Baron Farnborough, is dead.

The debate on the home rule bill was continued in the house of commons. Sir Richard Asheton Cross, Conservative, was the first speaker. He said: "The bill would not secure a good government for Ireland. If it were passed there would be two sets of judges in Ireland. One set would administer justice in revenues and the other would administer justice in criminal cases. The former would be protected by the imperial parliament and the other would be left to the tender mercies of the Irish people. Mr. Gladstone had said that the union was affected by bribery, but the premier himself was offering the large bribe of £50,000,000 to Ireland, and this was not the first time that he had offered a bribe. Parliament would cease to be imperial if the Irish members were not retained.

The particulars of an attempted assassination and suicide near Town Monument Grant county, Or., has just been received. William Cochran, a sheep rancher of very bad reputation, waylaid and shot Pry Wilson, a highly respected citizen of that county, with a needle gun. The ball failed to inflict serious injury. Wilson escaped on a fleet horse, but was followed some distance by Cochran, who again attempted to murder him. When the assault became known a crowd of Wilson's neighbors collected and started for Cochran's house, determined to lynch him. Cochran had reached his house meantime, and hearing the lynchers coming after him resolved to commit suicide. He hastily wrote a letter, bade adieu to his grown daughter, took a dose of strychnine, and rushing into his bedroom blew out his brains with a rifle.

The collector of customs at Sitka, has been notified that the practice adopted by him of issuing "permits to import" liquors into Alaska for medicinal purposes is inconsistent with regulations which authorize permits by the customs officers in Alaska for the landing of liquors already brought to that territory, and no permits to be issued in advance of importation.

After months of search, Prof. Jonathan Emory of William and Mary college, Va., has discovered the aerolite, which fell in Washington county Sept. 14, 1885. It was found imbeded deep in the soil on Frederick Miller's farm, two miles north of Claysville. Prof. Emory says it is the largest aerolite on record, and weighs fully 200 tons. Its composition is chrominum, nickel, aluminium, copper, magnesium and tin.

Malvin M. Thompson, a young grocer living at Chicago was present at the Haymarket meeting on the night of May 4, and says he overheard August Spies, Schwab and a third man whom he did not know at the time, consulting about the number of dynamite bombs to be thrown into the ranks of the police. Mr. Thompson overheard Spies say, "Will one be enough? Had we better not send for more?" He could not catch the reply, but immediately afterwards Schwab and the third man went away together, evidently to procure something. Mr. Thompson has identified Adolph Fischer, of the Zeitung force, as the third party who was consulting with Spies and Schwab.

The engagement has been of long duration and the wedding was to have taken place last winter, but was postponed on account of the illness of Senator Miller. It is the wish of Mrs. Miller that it occur at once, and the ceremony will be performed in the presence of a few intimate friends. Lieut. Glover has obtained leave of absence for a year, and with his bride and her mother will leave for Europe on the 9th of June.

The newspapers announce the death of Vice Admiral Lynch on the voyage from Spain to Chili on the Royal mail steamer Cotopaxi. The body was embalmed and put ashore at Zenerifae. It was to Admiral Lynch's bravery and skill that Chili was indebted to her great success on the sea during the Chili-Peruvian war of 1879-82. Lynch captured all the Peruvian war vessels and made the splendid fight in which the Peruvian ironclad Huascar was captured—one of the hottest naval battles since the ironclad era was inaugurated. Lynch was a Spanish-Irish man.

In the court of claims Judge Davis delivered the decision of the court in relation to the liability of the government for the French spoliation claims, in which the chief justice and all the judges concur. The court, after discussing the law, is of the opinion that the claims are a valid obligation against this country, which sacrificed the rights of its individual citizens to secure a great national advantage, and that the treaties of 1803 and 1831 with France, and the treaty of 1819 with Spain, do not apply to the spoilation claims, and therefore the claimants should recover.

The French government has become seriously alarmed by the extensive preparations of the communists for a demonstration May 27, and extraordinary precautions are being taken.

Maj. Gen. D. E. Sickles is at the Riggs to appear before the court of claims in behalf of Brevet Brigadier General Adam Badeau, who claims to be a captain on the retired list of the army. Under the laws of 1869 and 1879 the second auditor held that Gen. Badeau is not in the army, and this opinion was confirmed by the second controller. Gen. Badeau then entered suit in the court of claims for his pay as captain to test the matter. Gen. Sickles is not affected by the auditor's rulings, as the act of 1875 confirmed him in his position as major general retired.

The Brooklyn sugar workers' strike has been declared at an end and the union dissolved.

CALAMITY AT XENIA, OHIO.

Some Thirty Persons Known to be Dead, While Many Others Remain Unaccounted For—The Storm, Elsewhere.

Dispatches from Xenia, Ohio, of the 13th say: About 7 o'clock terrible clouds were seen gathering, with terrific lightning, followed by peals of thunder. This lasted till 9 o'clock, when an extraordinary clap of thunder seemed to open the gates, and the rain fell in torrents. It appeared like a cloud burst. Water backed up at the east end of the town to a lake against the Panhandle railroad. The bank gave way suddenly and the flood came dashing through town along Shawnee creek in waves fifteen or twenty feet high. It swept twenty or thirty houses away and did $100,000 worth of damage. The gas works are flooded and the town is in darkness and terror. The cries of the people in the flooded district were awful to hear.

THE VICTIMS.

The following are the killed and missing: Mrs. Nellie Anderson and sister, Lydia Casey (colored), both widows past 60 years of age, lived in Barr's bottom; Mrs. Samuel Corcoran and two sons, aged about 12 and 25 years, widow and sons of the late Samuel Corcoran; Mat Evans (colored), day laborer, wife and child, the child missing; Orrin Morris (white), laborer, wife and five children, three girls and two boys, the oldest a girl of 15 years of age and the youngest a babe of 10 months; Stephen Denton (colored), laborer; William Powell, cart driver, wife and six or eight children, who were found this morning, the rest being missing; Lewis Anderson and wife (colored,) Anderson missing; Mrs. Ed. Lindsay; Mr. Powell and two children.

In addition to the above, two more bodies were found this evening, being children, and they are not identified. The complete number of dead, whose bodies have been found, is twenty-five, with eleven still missing. The loss of property is great.

The city engineer places the city loss at $75,000. The Little Miami road has about sixteen miles swept away.

Cincinnati, May 13.—The storm which did such frightful work at Xenia, was far-reaching. It is heard of in Illinois, through Indiana and Ohio, and at Winchester, Va. Here there has been an unusual electrical disturbance for the past three nights. On Monday night there was almost uninterrupted lightning from 11 p.m. until 6 a.m. Tuesday night a similar condition existed, accompanied by heavy rains and hail, the latter of very narrow range. Last night there was another electrical storm, with heavy rain and hail. The Xenia storm, however, was much more furious. The counties of Montgomery, Clarke, Butler, Warren and Greene lie adjacent in Ohio, and form an elevated plateau, with but shallow valleys and low hills. In these counties are the towns of Dayton, Springfield, Hamilton, Lebanon and Xenia. In the eastern county of Indiana, adjoining this district, is Connersville. At all these places the rain of last night was of the heaviest volume ever known. At Dayton it measured four and a half inches in three hours.

A Cyclone in Illinois.

A dispatch from Odell, Ill., of the 12th says: At 3:45 p. m. to-day a terrible cyclone struck this village, which demolished one brick block, wrecked three warehouses, unroofed the hotel, Masonic hall, and four store buildings, and destroyed the upper story of the Angell block in which were the Odell bank and Odd Fellows' lodge. Scarcely a store in town escaped injury. The loss will amount to $50,000. Houses, barns and sheds were twisted off their foundations and completely destroyed. Trees a foot in diameter were twisted up. The storm did not last over five minutes. Ten minutes before it came the air seemed to get green. Two clouds seemed to advance, one from the southeast and one from the southwest and met over the town, forming a monstrous whirlwind. The large livery barn of Hord Bros. was completely demolished. The large three-story mill was blown off its foundation and wrecked. The two-story brick hardware store of S. S. Cole is a total wreck. The hotel is injured badly. Not a whole window remains in the building. A number of residences were badly wrecked. The streets are filled with prostrated trees and other debris. The new school building is partly unroofed. A one-story school building is completely destroyed. The Congregational church is twisted in bad shape. The Methodist church has one steeple blown off.

Boycotting Punished in Wisconsin.

Milwaukee special: Judge Mallory in the municipal court fined a hired boycotter $25 and costs. It was shown that the defendant, Seidel by name, and others distributed boycotting handbills in front of Adolph Fienhold's bakery. The bills requested everybody to withdraw patronage from Mr. Fienhold, as he was running a "non-union" shop. The proprietor had several times ordered the man from his door, but without effect. Judge Mallory, in passing sentence, said: The boycotting of Mr. Fienhold was an outrage, though the defendant and others had been urged on by demagogues. Such interference with a man's business were unlawful. The judge was surprised that citizens had stood this sort of persecution as long as they had. Boycotting was nothing less than mob law. The fine imposed was the extreme penalty under the disorderly conduct ordinance.

Ruffee the balance due him as agent of the White Earth Indian agency which was consolidated in 1880.

The secretary of state has received a report from Consul Brigham at Paso del Norte, Mexico, in regard to the killing of Capt. Crawford, U. S. A., by Mexican soldiers in July last. He says: There is no way of obtaining definite information, owing to the absence of witnesses, but it is conceded on both sides that the attack was made by irregular Mexican troops employed by the state of Chihuahua, through an unfortunate accident, and without malice. The depredations committed in Mexico by Indians nurtured by the United States government is a grievance that cannot be well overlooked. The affair is being investigated by the Mexican authorities.

An extensive lock out of striking tailors in Chicago has been inaugurated. This means that 20,000 to 25,000 sewing people, men and women, were denied work. Kirchner, James Wolfe.

Secretary Manning now has interviews with the heads of bureaus at the treasury department every day, either driving down to the building and having them come out to his carriage, or sending for them to come to his house. There is not the slightest sign of his resignation. One of his physicians said that he had no doubt that the secretary would be sitting at his desk before fall.

Managers of the railroads centering in East St. Louis testified before the Curtin committee that the strike at that point was wholly in support of the position taken by the strikers on the Missouri Pacific and that they had no serious grievance of their own. Sheriff Ropiquet of East St. Louis testified that he had commanded the crowd more than one hundred times to disperse, but they paid no attention to him. He had asked the mayor to co-operate with him in dispersing the mob, but was told that he could do nothing, as the police was resigning as rapidly as possible.

The Bissel Carpet Sweeper company, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has announced to its employes that the eight-hour experiment is not satisfactory, and it will return to the old style. Labor was the chief topic of discussion by the Western Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' association at Chicago. About thirty delegates were present, representing a majority of the manufacturers of Chicago and other cities West. All the firms agreed at a meeting a few weeks ago to give the eight-hour day a fair trial for two weeks. A few days ago they unanimously decided to resume ten hours' work May 17. About fifteen hundred employes will be affected by this change. It was resolved that each employer should treat directly with his employes in the matter of wages. Failing to agree, either party may call upon the executive committee of the association for an adjustment.

A terrible hurricane has just swept across the middle of Spain. In Madrid seventy persons are known to have been instantly killed, and 200 others have been seriously injured. The wind struck the city with the suddenness of lightning. A train of cars and cabs were overturned and broken into splinters, roofs were dislodged and telegraph wires everywhere torn from the poles. The parks in and about the city were devastated, and in some cases entirely denuded. One church tower was blown down. A number of houses in the suburbs absolutely vanished before the storm. The queen visited various points in the city and suburbs where the damage was most marked. The damage will exceed $1,250,000.

Mr. Leathem, member from Huddersfield, Reformer, asked whether Parnell would accept the bill as a settlement of the Irish question. Parnell rose in his place and emphatically replied "Yes." Leathem retorted that he had been unable to gather that idea from Parnell's previous speeches. Healey at this juncture sprang to his feet and turning to Parnell excitedly shouted, "Tell him he is a liar." Uproar ensued and Healey resumed his seat.

The house committee on agriculture hoped to get through the house a few days ago the bill taxing oleomargarine, and putting its manufacture under the control of the commissioner of internal revenue, but has been unable to secure consideration of the bill. There is no doubt of its passage when it comes up. The senate cannot do anything on this bill until the house has acted, because it is a revenue bill. Senator Miller is ready to take the matter up as soon as the house disposes of it, and will hurry it through the senate. No resistance has been made to the measure by the patent butter men. Early in the session a representative of Armour & Co. of Chicago was here and made an argument in defense of patent butter, but it had no effect whatever upon the committee, which was so much prejudiced against oleomargarine that it did not even give the argument patient hearing.

The last legislature of Iowa passed the Sweeny bill, compelling foreign corporations doing business in the state to incorporate under the Iowa law. A prominent attorney of the Burlington & Quincy line stated that none of the roads would comply with the law, as they believed it was unconstitutional and irregularly passed. On these grounds they will contest it in the courts.

California's Better Day.

From the San Francisco Bulletin.

There was a time when the two extremes of wealth and poverty were more prominent here than in any other state. That was an incident of the great mineral discoveries which brought the first population to the coast. The dream of high strikes, of sudden wealth, of mines which make millionaires in a day, is pretty well over. The population has settled down to the business of making permanent homes, to small industries where labor is creating capital in ways which attract little attention. To-day the winning men in California are composed of that class who have not yet escaped the exactions of daily industry. They win slowly but surely. They take no unnecessary risks. They are not making haste to be rich in a feverish sense. The solid middle class is to-day the hope of the state—the class which is augmented by many thousands from year to year, and which is patiently working out success all over the state. This producing class is a rapidly growing one. It will be augmented by a large body of immigrants who having some means at the start, find here one of the best markets for labor in the world. The losing and failing element in California never was relatively so small as it is to-day, and the prospering element of population never was greater.

CONGRESSIONAL.

HOUSE.—A resolution was adopted calling on the president for information as to what steps have been taken for the investigation of the seizure of the schooner David J. Adams by the Canadian authorities. Mr. Rice, (Mass.) argued in support of the proposition. He cited historical parallels, and said:

When England, through her carelessness, had let loose the cruisers which had driven our commerce from the sea, the United States had not remained indifferent, and he trusted that there would be now an arm as long and a voice as strong to enforce independently from England for the injuries her subjects were now perpetrating against us, to protectuate upon American fishermen.

SPEAKER.—Among the petitions was one from a dozen citizens of Iowa presented by Mr. Allison, praying for the abolition of the "American house of lords." Referred.

Mr. Hiscock, from the committee on commerce, reported favorably Mr. Hoar's resolution requiring that committee, when engaged in river and harbor bill, to state the facts that show the national importance of the appropriations which are to each item of appropriation is advisable. Agreed to.

In discussing the pension bill and referring to the liberality we said: the period at which pensions were given the survivors, Messrs. West and Hoar differed as to the date when the war closed.

Mr. Hiscock questioned the accuracy of his citation by reminding Mr. West of a fact that he (Mr. Hoar) thought would commend itself to many of the Yankee soldiers. Washington, at the time cited by Mr. Hoar, had not permitted the rations issued to be by the issuance of double rations of rum to the soldiers.

Mr. West retorted: Massachusetts had made much more out of rum than Virginia had. Rum had been the principal staple in the trade of Massachusetts for a great many years. Trading rum for negroes and selling the negroes in the South had so enriched the people of Massachusetts that they lend every other State competitive on the subject of both negroes and rum, and they were now undertaking to a large extent the prohibition rum, after having exterminated slavery. Mr. West criticised the course of the senate in tacking to the river large number of private pension bills without even reading them.

SPEAKER.—Mr. Frye called up the house shipping bill, entitled

A bill to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to encourage the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen and masters of vessels.

Mr. Frye moved to add to the new section, the provisions of the bill recently reported by Mr. Kellogg from the committee on commerce authorizing the president to issue a proclamation whenever he shall deem proper denying to vessels of foreign countries such privileges as are denied to such foreign countries to vessels of the United States. After some colloquy by Messrs. McPherson and West and a word of reply by Mr. Frye, the amendment was agreed to without division. The bill as amended by the senate was then passed, and on motion of Mr. Frye a committee of conference was ordered on the disagreeing votes of the two houses upon the bill. A bill was introduced establishing a national board of health. The reference to the committee on public health was then decided without final action.

HOUSE.—Before introducing a joint resolution in artificial butter to repeal the act of 10 per cent. on notes of state banks issued as circulation to prevent the counterfeiting of United States obligations, Mr. Hewitt (N. Y.) said that he had been informed by several persons that foreign governments authorizing the president to enter into the treasury specific sums of money to pay such bills which he may deem wasteful or unnecessary expenditure. The joint resolution was then read at length.

SPEAKER.—Take action in favor of the house labor arbitration bill. Mr. Logan gave notice of a substitute for the bill providing. A committee of five, to be called a commissioner of arbitration, should be selected by the president, part of them for their knowledge of the law and part of them for their knowledge of the laboring interest of the country. The commissioners to have power to examine witnesses and to render a decision to guide it should be filed in the United States district court. Conspiracies, combinations and become a decree of the court that would enforce a method of compliance with the decision. It should be the duty of the commissioners to investigate the causes of controversy arising between corporations and their employees, and make a report to congress. The bureau of labor should be erected into a department of labor, and that the commissioner of labor required to communicate with corporations to secure certain particulars as to the number, character and compensation of employees, and prices of food, fuel, etc., and to make such comparative statements of similar particulars during a term of five years.

The Senate in executive session confirmed Gen. Rosecrans, minister of the treasury Cousin, Peter Stang, Tennessee, at St. Cloud; John Vliegen, Minnesota, at Barrenmills; John W. Buck, West Virginia, at Wheeling. Surveyors of customs—Robert L. Jordan, Omaha, Neb.; Hans S. Bartels, New York; John W. Burt, naval officer, New York.

HOUSE.—The following reports were made: By Mr. Harris, ways and means, a bill amending sec. 3,387, Revised Statutes, so as to relieve the penalty of the forfeiture of cigar manufacturers to $250, with an additional $50 for each day such manufacturer to be employed by them in making cigars contrary to the law. By Mr. Sadler, Tennessee, adversely a bill to regulate the transportation of intoxicating liquors in the territories; laid on the table. By Mr. Hiscock, agriculture, a bill authorizing the exhibition of works of art and artifacts in the capitol building; house calendar.

The house spent the day in debating the senate amendment to the post office appropriation bill, and directing the postmaster general to make contracts for the carriage of steamship lines for the transportation of the United States mails for periods of not less than five nor more than ten years, at a rate not exceeding 50 cents per mile.

Mr. Riggs opposed the amendment, as did Mr. Mason. He called attention to the Wakefield of Minnesota said: He did not believe in subsidizing steamships, and this appropriation was not going to more nor less than a subsidy. He could not be was not induced by a desire to break down American commerce. He was not induced to vote as he was under the influence or guidance of agents of British steamship companies, and he had not been asked to oppose the bill by any one. He was actuated solely by the proprietors of the American steamship line to withdraw his opposition to the bill declined to do so, and as bogus he remained in congress he should do everything in the power to defeat such propositions as the one under consideration.

SENATE.—The senate passed the general service pension bill, which was introduced by Senator Dolph in the last congress, and passed the senate. Bill No. 1 was laid before the house, and the reading of sec. 2 to 14 to; eight Democrats—Brown, George Hampton, Mitchell and Wilson of Maryland, Confederates, and Payne, Vecchiel, and Watson, Ohio. The affirmative vote on the bill as amended upon the motion of Senator Blair rolled up 31 votes, a full party position. At present there are seven drawing pensions at $1.25 and $1.50 per day, and for the loss of a toe or a finger, and the committee thought there was no use in giving a man $1.25 per day because minus a finger or a toe. The bill now goes to the house, where probably passed.

Mr. Logan presented in the senate a substitute for the house arbitration bill. The measure which provides for a commission of arbitration to be appointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to consist of five members; one to be selected from the Republican organization, one from the Democratic organization, one who is not recognized as a member of either party, and the two remaining one from a class of citizens experienced in the management or operation of railroads, and in the transportation of property and passengers, and in the employ, connected with, or interested in any railroad corporation or company engaged in any business connected with transportation of persons or property; one also to be identified somewhat with the labor interests, having full knowledge of the qualifications and capacity of the laboring people.

HOUSE.—The house committee on public lands reported a general bill repealing all the laws granting lands to certain railroads and to certain states for the benefit of railroads, and restoring such lands to the public domain. It was reported for the reason that the several forfeiture bills have before reported and still pending before the committee cannot be acted upon before the close of the present session. The bill also repeals all laws now in force granting lands to the following corporations:

St. Louis & Iron Mountain, Little Rock & Fort Smith, Detroit, Hillsdale and Indiana & Ontonagon, North Wisconsin, formerly St. Croix & Lake Superior, and branch to Dayfield; Wisconsin & Duluth, formerly Portage, Winnebago & Superior; St. Paul & Pacific; St. Vincent Extension, formerly branch to the Red River of the North; St. Paul & Pacific, Brainerd branch, formerly branch to Lake Superior; Hastings & Dakota; Oregon Central, Atlantic & Pacific, Texas & Pacific.

The bill recently passed by the senate forfeiting part of certain lands granted Iowa to aid the construction of railroads in that state, was reported to-day from the house committee on public lands.

HIS MARY.

'Twas Christmas night, ten years ago!
Two weeks had I been courting Mary
When first my lips pressed Mary Jane's—
Those glory, how transporting.

I say so because that night,
I did not care a flinder
If every yule log in the land
Were burned down to a cinder.

The sun, the moon, the earth, the stars,
The tender Christmas tidings—
To our love's sweet confidings!

To-day three chubby, handsome boys
Are romping in my study,
Their father was my college chum,
Their mother say not I.

WAITING AND WINNING.

BY HELEN FOREST GRAVES.

"It don't matter so much now, grandma," said Aileen, drying the tears that had dried on her cheeks like dew drops on a rose. Of course it is very silly for me to cry, but I couldn't help it just at first."

"But what is the matter, my pet?" said old Mrs. Harrington, soothingly.

She had found Aileen coiled up in the deep embrasure of the window, where the winter sunset was strained through a pane of ruby glass of crimson and amber, crying bitterly.

The Harrington family were ambitious people. They had come to Virginia from Connecticut in a merely nominal price, the fine old mansion that had once belonged to a luxurious planter long ago, and left to Mrs. Harrington, who had been contented to raise humble corn and pumpkins in the valley of the Susan, and to support a considerable number of private pensioners with the proceeds.

pine woods, drew rein close by the old stone barn, where he had not seen for the last eighth gleaming out for ten years.

"What can it be?" he asked himself. "We children used to play at ghost by there at autumn evening, when the Valdmir family lived there. Or perhaps the careless servants have set something on fire."

He jumped off his horse, flung the reins over a projecting pine bough and went in to see, and the mystery and the ruddy light, Grandma, enthroned in a big splint chair before a fire of logs, drinking her coffee, and Aileen sat spinning at the old wheel, with cheeks softly reddened and rosy lips parted smiling—a very picture of health and beauty.

Both started at the sudden apparition of the captain on the threshold.

"Is boy your name?" said Grandma Dulany, lifting his hat. "I saw the light shining on it and was afraid that something had happened."

"Something has happened," said Aileen, laughing; "I have learned to spin. And grandma and I are having a picnic. Will you come in, Captain Harrington?"

"Well, since your coffee smells so good, I think I will," said the gallant young officer.

His cup—which for lack of more expensive china had been a blue bowl—was scarcely poured out, before their numbers were augmented by Mr. Fergus and Mr. Fenchley, who had seen the lights, and had also observed "Hotspur" fastened to the fence.

"May we venture to intrude?" said they, peeping over the window sill.

"Oh, certainly!" said grandma, smiling.

And Aileen distributed handleless cup and bountiful slices of golden gingerbread, and kept steaming from the fire to her guests.

"We are hardly prepared to entertain so large company," she said, quite composedly; but we can, at all events, give you a simple welcome."

Two—three—half a dozen more dropped in; Old Pomp was summoned, set to pour fresh pine cones on the blaze and bring more coffee and corn cake.

He grinned from ear to ear.

"Pow'ful like de good old times," said he to himself, as he left the room and turned to his cabin. "De berry cream ob de gentry enjoyin' de corn-pones an' coffee like dey was our old master's folks. Ain't nuffin like corn-pone for rale good flavor, dat dey ain't. An' de young lady Fenchley, she's an' pretty as a peach. Reckon de captain finks so, too. He do, sure."

Later in the evening the gentlemen went up to the house, where stood the three Misses Harrington in a simper-ing row.

But their call there was insipid, and several of them returned to the "Stone Barn" to finish their evening.

Adrian Dulany remained the latest of all—quite late, in fact, for the cheerful and veteran grandma—she had discreetly fallen asleep in her chair some time ago—and Aileen to the house under whispering pine-boughs, by the light of a big round moon.

The three cousins whose list of calls had long since ended, were yawning in the parlor.

"Dear me!" cried Selina, as the little clock struck. "Where have you been all day, Aileen?"

"In the old stone barn generally discussed, and Aileen soon knew," by instinct, as the old grand mother was not only friend of all the big, dreary house.

A third source of offense cropped out on All Hallow E'en, when Aileen went out into the woods to gather nuts and apples, and to tell fortunes by burning nuts in the open fire.

"Perhaps it was not her fault that Mr. Daller's vicious bull jumped through the tumble-down fence and frightened her out of the woods; but she was doubtless not personally responsible for the fact that Captain Dulany chose to be in the same room rescued her from the big-horned enemy with such prompt gallantry.

"He was so very kind!" said Aileen, wistfully. "Do you think, grandma, that I ought to tell him that some of the girls that lie walks with me when I go to the post office? or that he gave me a valentine? or that I—I—don't like it? they thought I found in the copse? or that it was he who decorated the big bunch of mistletoe in Greenough's woods?"

"Well, not unless they ask you," said old Mrs. Harrington, shrugging her shoulders. "For she had heard from her grandchildren of the meanness of the Dulany question with some severity.

"I'm theroldest," Selina had said, tartly, "and I ought to have the first chance. And as for you, you're too young for such things."

"I'm seventeen aunt!" faltered Aileen.

"Two or three years hence will do very well for you," said the relentless aunt. "Try and act with silly nonsence out of your head!"

And this was why Aileen was crying. Old Mrs. Harrington understood it all very well. She had been young once. She had felt jolly interference in this particular case, however.

"Don't's wife likes her own way," she said to herself, "and I'm certain she thinks any one is meddlin'. I'll tell her so to her own face presently. I'll go to the big chamber over the stun barn, and get Pomp to build us up a real good fire of pine logs and we'll talk it calmly. There's a carpet loom there and a spinnin'-wheel and all the fixin's and I'll show you how to spin flax when I was a girl and weave rag carpets."

"Will you?" said Aileen, with brightening eyes. "Oh, grandma, how very, very kind you are! I'll go over the big chestnuts and apples in the store-house—and will you tell me about your sailor lover? I've never heard a story but my own dear saw my Grandfather Harrington!"

"Yes," said the old lady—"yes! We'll hev our New Year's by ourselves to-night, child."

So Aileen put away the pretty little blue merino gown that she had worn on All Hallow E'en, and donned instead, the brown Merrimac calico that made her look like a robin redbreast; and just about the time that her three cousins were quarreling for the possession of the big dressing glass to "do" their hair, she and her grandmother were spinning the ancient spinning wheel in the stone barn chamber, and piling wood in the big fireplace to make a roaring blaze in place.

They had a very pleasant New Year's Day after all, though the tears came to Aileen's blue eyes once or twice, when her cousins rolled by over the hard-frozen road towards the house.

And at dusk she lighted the cheerful candles, and sat down to peruse grandma's supper, with fresh corn-cakes, baked in the hot embers, according to the receipt of Aunt Felicia, the colored cook, fragrant coffee and sweet apples, roasted, and eaten with cream.

A STARTLING EPISODE.

Late one evening a group of young men had the smoking-room of the Brunswick to themselves. They sat in a circle round the blazing fire, chatting, laughing, chaffing one another and telling tales, if it were possible, of momentary pause, one of the party, who was lounging in an easy chair with his legs dangling over one of the arms, and his clothed and booted head idly took up a newspaper which was at hand, and read out from the agony column the following advertisement:

"Jack.—Meet me at the marble arch to-morrow, Tuesday, at 9 o'clock sharp. It is the last favor I shall ever ask. Come if you love me. MAGGIE.

There was a sneer on the face of the reader, and the assembled company raised laughter among his audience. One of the young men turned to another, and said, jokingly:

"Jack, the base deceiver! It's your little milliner friend. You've behaved shockingly, and it's your duty to go."

"Bosh!" returned Jack Canister, sipping tranquilly at his tumbler. "She has been persecuting me terribly lately. Maggie isn't her name."

"It's a pseudonym, of course," remarked some one, knowingly.

"I've often wondered," added another, more seriously, "at the continuements of that kind are really genuine or not. I fancy they generally have a veiled significance. I've been told that they often have referred fascinating little bangleries or the disposition of plunder."

"There is a special staff of clerks at Scotland Yard who keep a close watch on mysterious advertisements and are trained to translate ciphers," remarked Jack Canister.

"Deuced uninteresting and unprofitable occupation, I should think," said he who joined the holder of the newspaper.

"I know a man," said young Hazlett of the annex, "who was once a precious fool of by one of those apaches. It was Tom Craik. You know Tom, Jack?"

"Gold diggings," remarked Jack, laconically.

"Yes. I am told he is doing no good there. This was years ago, before I joined," said Hazlett, who had only seen some five years' service. "Tom was always in difficulties, and another was out against his uncle, or another was out against him for committal or contempt; so he was in hiding at the rooms of a friend of mine. He was awful spoons at that time. I forget who the object of his affection was, but she would have nothing to say to him. Well, he was taken in by an advertisement somewhat similar to that from her. Without saying a word to anybody he attended the appointment and was nabbed."

"And quite deserved it," said Jack Canister, "for having such an idiot. That is a very old dodge."

"I never said it wasn't, did I?" retorted the gallant young officer. "Every one knows that Tom was a fool, and that's why he came to grief. I should like to know whether this advertisement is genuine or not," said one of the party, who was evidently possessing himself of the newspaper.

"It would be rather fun to investigate it. I'll put any one else up to it."

"What's the good?" growled Jack Canister, contemptuously.

"Nonsense, my young men, half jestingly, half in earnest, agreed to accompany their friend, and shortly afterwards the circle broke up and the friends separated."

The latter who had suggested the expedition was a newly elected member of the club, and, even in his novitiate, had contrived to establish a reputation for fastness of which he was immensely proud. He was also universally liked on account of his amiable disposition and his boyish frankness and though he fondly imagined that he had attained the dignitude that constitutes a man of society, he was really regarded as an honest, foolish young fellow, who would soon blow his chimney pots in the respectable member of society.

Then the next evening arrived young Thurston, who was still determined to carry out his investigation, found that none of his friends were disposed to fulfill their promise of accompanying him. Their curiosity on the subject of the advertisement had faded, and they all laughingly made excuses. Thurston himself, to tell the truth, was strongly inclined to yield to their example, but, with characteristic bravery, he did not like to draw back from his own proposal. Besides, it was only a matter of half an hour, and he had nothing particular to do. So he dressed himself to the trysting place alone in a handsome, quiet attire, and waited exactly at the appointed hour.

It had been a thoroughly wet day, and the rain had ceased so recently that the pavements were still shining, therefore there were very few people about. Thurston lit a cigarette, mentally deciding not to waste more than five minutes, and then began to look leisurely about him.

As he did so he became conscious of the figure of a woman standing close against the railings, watching him intently. She also seemed to be waiting, for him as his glance met hers, and accosted him.

"Are you Jack?" she inquired, abruptly.

"Yes," replied Thurston, recklessly.

They were standing beneath a street lamp, the light from which fell full upon the girl's face, while his was in shadow. He could see, however, that she was a young person, neatly and decently dressed. She scrutinized him for a few minutes in silence, during which Thurston mentally congratulated himself that, instead of blushing, turned uncomfortably red.

"Maggie?" he then guessed interrogatively, instinctively guessing that he was addressing some other person.

"Yes," she answered. "I'm the young woman shortly. I am her sister Helen. Follow me."

Thurston complied. He was taken aback by this peremptory request, and hardly realized what had happened, but followed his companion without a word. He was naturally disconcerted by all this, and began to think that he had designed to personate "Jack," his response to the girl's question had come almost involuntarily to his lips. But having once done so he resolved to maintain the character, though he recoiled by an adventurous spirit, and the desire of having a good story to tell his friends.

The girl silently led the way along the flagstone path. She walked quickly with her head bent, but the brilliantly lighted shops revealed that she was neatly dressed. After a few minutes without a word Thurston began to feel embarrassed, and he attempted to utter some phrase of boyish gallantry. At the first word, however, the girl stopped him.

"Don't speak to me," she said, in a voice trembling with suppressed emotion.

Young Thurston was so disconcerted that he had serious thoughts of dismissing his companion in the street. The only thing only was quite clear to him, and that was that the adventure in which he embarked upon was very different from anything he had vaguely anticipated. The girl's peremptory and quiet manner precluded all suspicion of lightness of character; her demeanor, indeed, impressed him with a feeling of solemnity. He could not for the life of him think what the mystery was that he was not the person he had pretended. Youthful awkwardness and a sense of shame kept him silent.

At length his guide turned aside into a mean, narrow street, and stopped before one of the poorest houses. At the door Thurston made a last desperate effort to unburden himself, but the girl silenced him by a peremptory gesture and preceded him through a narrow entrance, and up a creaking flight of stairs. Thurston, unfamiliar with the habitations of the poor, forgot his embarrassment in uncomfortable wonder and distrust.

At the top of the second flight the girl led her hand upon the handle of a door-way, and then paused. She lifted the candle which she carried, and gazed scrutinizingly at Thurston.

"Summon up your courage," she said sternly, yet with a mocking note in her voice. "Do not be afraid."

"I am not afraid," he said quite mildly.

The girl conducted him into a small, miserably furnished room, with a bare boarded floor, in which was partitioned off with a curtain. Thurston staring about him curiously, for the fleeting time he took these details before his companion advancing to the curtain, drew it aside.

"Look here!" she said.

Thurston started, and then, with an involuntary exclamation, took a step forward, for there, upon a narrow bed, lay what he first imagined to be a woman's figure. It was the body of a young girl.

A child almost, with delicate features and masses of golden hair, which streamed upon the pillow and over the bed clothes. The poor creature's remains had evidently been arranged with a view to picturesque effect, for a thin, waxen hands were folded upon her breast, which bore a cross of lilies. Thurston's horror, his morbid and theatrical, perhaps—was nevertheless strikingly beautiful and touching.

Poor young Thurston was appalled and horrified. He was but a lad and not, therefore, sure of himself. The sublime serenity of death-sleep that rested upon the poor creature's face was in the motionless face of this dead girl. He gazed with a sort of terrified fascination at the spectacle, combined with the painful shock of surprise, made him turn white and faint.

His companion—the girl Helen—meanwhile had been watching him with an expression of relentless severity. The veins of her hand, which clutched at the curtain, stood out in blue and livid, her eyes glared speechless indignation.

"That is why Maggie could not come," she said at length, slowly. "She is dead. It was Tom Craik. You know Tom, Jack?

"Gold diggings," remarked Jack, laconically.

"Yes. I am told he is doing no good there. This was years ago, before I joined," said Hazlett, who had only seen some five years' service. "Tom was always in difficulties, and another was out against his uncle, or another was out against him for committal or contempt; so he was in hiding at the rooms of a friend of mine. He was awful spoons at that time. I forget who the object of his affection was, but she would have nothing to say to him. Well, he was taken in by an advertisement somewhat similar to that from her. Without saying a word to anybody he attended the appointment and was nabbed."

"And quite deserved it," said Jack Canister, "for having such an idiot. That is a very old dodge."

"I never said it wasn't, did I?" retorted the gallant young officer. "Every one knows that Tom was a fool, and that's why he came to grief. I should like to know whether this advertisement is genuine or not," said one of the party, who was evidently possessing himself of the newspaper.

"It would be rather fun to investigate it. I'll put any one else up to it."

"What's the good?" growled Jack Canister, contemptuously.

Nonsense, my young men, half jestingly, half in earnest, agreed to accompany their friend, and shortly afterwards the circle broke up and the friends separated."

The latter who had suggested the expedition was a newly elected member of the club, and, even in his novitiate, had contrived to establish a reputation for fastness of which he was immensely proud. He was also universally liked on account of his amiable disposition and his boyish frankness and though he fondly imagined that he had attained the dignitude that constitutes a man of society, he was really regarded as an honest, foolish young fellow, who would soon blow his chimney pots in the respectable member of society.

Then the next evening arrived young Thurston, who was still determined to carry out his investigation, found that none of his friends were disposed to fulfill their promise of accompanying him. Their curiosity on the subject of the advertisement had faded, and they all laughingly made excuses. Thurston himself, to tell the truth, was strongly inclined to yield to their example, but, with characteristic bravery, he did not like to draw back from his own proposal. Besides, it was only a matter of half an hour, and he had nothing particular to do. So he dressed himself to the trysting place alone in a handsome, quiet attire, and waited exactly at the appointed hour.

It had been a thoroughly wet day, and the rain had ceased so recently that the pavements were still shining, therefore there were very few people about. Thurston lit a cigarette, mentally deciding not to waste more than five minutes, and then began to look leisurely about him.

As he did so he became conscious of the figure of a woman standing close against the railings, watching him intently. She also seemed to be waiting for him as his glance met hers, and accosted him.

"Are you Jack?" she inquired, abruptly.

"Yes," replied Thurston, recklessly.

They were standing beneath a street lamp, the light from which fell full upon the girl's face, while his was in shadow. He could see, however, that she was a young person, neatly and decently dressed. She scrutinized him for a few minutes in silence, during which Thurston mentally congratulated himself that, instead of blushing, turned uncomfortably red.

"Maggie?" he then guessed interrogatively, instinctively guessing that he was addressing some other person.

"Yes," she answered. "I'm the young woman shortly. I am her sister Helen. Follow me."

Thurston complied. He was taken aback by this peremptory request, and hardly realized what had happened, but followed his companion without a word. He was naturally disconcerted by all this, and began to think that he had designed to personate "Jack," his response to the girl's question had come almost involuntarily to his lips. But having once done so he resolved to maintain the character though he recoiled by an adventurous spirit, and the desire of having a good story to tell his friends.

The girl silently led the way along the flagstone path. She walked quickly with her head bent, but the brilliantly lighted shops revealed that she was neatly dressed. After a few minutes without a word Thurston began to feel embarrassed, and he attempted to utter some phrase of boyish gallantry. At the first word, however, the girl stopped him.

"Don't speak to me," she said, in a voice trembling with suppressed emotion.

Young Thurston was so disconcerted that he had serious thoughts of dismissing his companion in the street. The only thing only was quite clear to him, and that was that the adventure in which he embarked upon was very different from anything he had vaguely anticipated. The girl's peremptory and quiet manner precluded all suspicion of lightness of character; her demeanor, indeed, impressed him with a feeling of solemnity. He could not for the life of him think what the mystery was that he was not the person he had pretended. Youthful awkwardness and a sense of shame kept him silent.

At length his guide turned aside into a mean, narrow street, and stopped before one of the poorest houses. At the door Thurston made a last desperate effort to unburden himself, but the girl silenced him by a peremptory gesture and preceded him through a narrow entrance, and up a creaking flight of stairs. Thurston, unfamiliar with the habitations of the poor, forgot his embarrassment in uncomfortable wonder and distrust.

At the top of the second flight

"She is dead," interrupted young Thurston sharply.

"Dead, is she? Well, that's to—I mean poor girl. Sad, of course, very sad," said Mr. Vernon, endeavoring to look concerned, but manifestly failed.

"That being so I don't mind confessing that any little unpleasantness with a lady, just as I am seriously counting a hundred thousand pounds or so—"

"Her funeral is to-morrow," interrupted the young man, setting his teeth.

"Is it? Come, Thurston, what the deuce are you driving at?" said Mr. Vernon, a little irritably. "I suppose there is a little love affair in the background. There generally is. When you are older you will realize the necessity of keeping your feet down firmly at any attempt at extortion."

"Is that all you have to say?" ejaculated young Thurston, scarcely able to breathe quickly.

"Yes, except to advise you, my dear boy, as a friend, not to allow yourself to be mixed up in affairs of this sort," said Mr. Vernon, in paternal tones. "They sometimes lead to police-courts and all kinds of unpleasant consequences."

"Vernon, I believe you are a villain!" cried Thurston, losing all power of control, and looking decidedly dangerous.

"For heaven's sake, don't make a fool of yourself!"

For some unspoken reason Mr. Vernon did not finish his sentence. The two were alone in one of the small card rooms, and the door was open to interfere in case of a disturbance. This reflection probably occurred to the elder man, and possibly the young Thurston was certainly aggressive. Mr. Vernon rose with considerable dignity and discretion, and he manifested it upon this occasion by slinking out of the room without vouchsafing to another interview.

Young Thurston, quite unnecessarily, as it turned out, sent a note to Mr. Vernon, stating where he was to be found the next day, and then went down on the day after he proposed to leave England, possibly for a long period. Meanwhile no one saw him, save as a spectator of a sad little funeral in a dreary London cemetery, at which the only one mourner—a poor, young girl, who appeared too much overwhelmed with grief to notice the stranger in the mourner, at the conclusion of the short service Thurston, who had come forward and cast a wreath of white flowers into the grave.

"I believe I was right, and that you really loved her," murmured the poor mourner as she passed him. "Thank God for it! I shall be happy now, in time, I shall learn to forgive you, as she wished."—London Truth.

The World's Boss Monument.

The iron stairway winding around the interior frame work of the Washington monument has been nearly completed. When it is finished a limited number of passes will be issued to visitors who desire to climb the 500-foot level, provided, however, they supply their own muscle. Not a ray of light enters the monument except through the single door at the base and the little window on the roof so that a misstep in the darkness might prove of disastrous. Passes will therefore be issued only to those who are able to light their own path. All the persistent agitation so far by Congress haven been for constructing the monument. Now that it is nearly appropriated for congress have to be made for making its approaches more easily and convenient. At the same time money will be needed for lighting it and furnishing other facilities for ascent. Why not make it one of the principal things to be seen and visited at the capital.

"I see it stated," said a Starreport er to Colonel Casey the other day, "that the Washington monument is morning and evening on account of the heat of the sun."

"I never made such a statement," was the reply. "That is carrying the thing a little too far. To say, however, that the heat of the sun causes it moves with the seasons, that is in the summer it moves to the east of its base and in the winter to the south. When you consider that the distance travelled is not more than a few inches and it can be made appreciable only with several hundred feet of line it is not such a delicate nature as to be able to measure it. The swinging plumb bobs, now several hundred feet in length were used continually as the monument was in course of construction, informed us of any movement in the structure. There was always movement in the structure, but it settled evenly. The roof of the monument is only a few inches in thickness and is made to respond to either heat or cold, while the interior remains at the same temperature has little or no effect upon it. It is not surprising at all that it has moved from the force of contraction or expansion, but the movement can be distinguished only by the most delicate instruments. It is in the same way with everything around us. Take that column of the post-office—to the state, war and navy department building. "You may find a little crack in walls of the new construction, but it will be caused by the settling of the mortar or cement, between the stones has been crumbled by the extreme heat. Such a settlement in the monument can scarcely be called such in the common acceptance of the term, for it doesn't travel a distance as great as half the width of your little finger nail."—Washington Star.

A Man to be Feared.

Ward H. Lamon, Mr. Lincoln's Illinois partner, who was appointed by the latter U. S. Marshal for the District of Columbia, was a man of gigantic size and herculean strength. He was also a man of iron nerve and utter recklessness of consequences. Lamon's first official act was to arrest Mr. Stanton on the day after he proposed to leave England, possibly for a long period. Meanwhile no one saw him, save as a spectator of a sad little funeral in a dreary London cemetery, at which the only one mourner—a poor, young girl, who appeared too much overwhelmed with grief to notice the stranger in the mourner, at the conclusion of the short service Thurston, who had come forward and cast a wreath of white flowers into the grave.

G. G. Hartley, Brainerd, was an arrival. He formerly was a newspaper man and worked on one or more of the Cleveland O., papers and came to the Northwest and secured a position on one of the Minneapolis papers. After a session in the legislature which he reported, he made for Brainerd and began a life of luxury as a real estate man. He came to St. Paul to get a good look at a street car and enjoy other sights incident to a city.—St. Paul Globe.

Chas. D. Johnson and Mrs. Minnie Weld were united in marriage at Minneapolis yesterday, at least so the papers state, and Charlie has kept the matter so quiet that not even the reporters can get at the facts. The groom is the junior partner in the drug firm of McFadden & Johnson and is a young business man of sterling qualities, a general favorite among his associates, and who all will wish him unbounded joy in the marriage relation. The bride is a well-known Brainerd lady who has resided in the city for a number of years. The DISPATCH extends congratulations.

The art loan and exhibition by the W. C. T. U. in the building at the corner of Fifth and Front street has been the attraction this week. The really interesting part is the art loan exhibits and which consists of curiosities and antiquities belonging to private citizens which have been loaned for this occasion; this department alone being worth the price of admission. In the lower room there is much to attract the attention and interest the mind; the grand pyramid of flowers, the battlemik cave, the ice cream grotto, the Japanese curiosities, the mountain of snow with an ice palace on the peak, all serve to keep one's ideas in a lively state, while the old woman in her shoe with from 60 to 75 children don't for a moment think they are alive for they are all china) around her and the evening concert come in for their share. The entertainment is being well patronized and will continue until Saturday evening. The baby show comes off to-morrow and if there is any distinction made as to which baby "takes the cake" you will see more than one mothers nose turn up in a disapproving manner, for they all think think their's is the nicest and for that reason alone they will have them on exhibition. Don't miss the baby show for the world.

A True Fish Story.

In company with I. U. White and C. E. Smith the DISPATCH force went to Gull Lake on Saturday last for a days' fishing. Mr. White owns a very comfortable cottage on the banks of this lake and uses it to accommodate his friends, and a very acceptable refuge it is for a party of hungry Gull lake fisherman. A most unusual thing happened on this occasion that could be imagined, which was that the party succeeded in catching fish. We make mention of this on account of the extraordinary occurrence, and can back it up by fish tails which were cut off and preserved by Charlie Smith, and which have been on exhibition at his cigar store since Monday. Sunday we were at Fair Trap dam, and the party in less than two hours succeeded in landing eighty as fine pike as ever flopped a fin; besides this were a fine mess of perch, the largest weighing a pound and a half. It is a little early yet for trolling, although on a warm day the black bass will bite. While, at Gull River we were surprised at the improvements that Jr. H. Dodge is making around the Gray place. Everything looks neat and clean and Leo is enjoying a good run of business.

Carl, the Peddler.

Mr. Chas. Gardner will appear at the Sleeper Opera House next Wednesday evening, May 26th. In speaking of him the New York Daily News says:

Mr. Chas. A. Gardner, at the 3d avenue theatre, is playing "Karl, the Peddler." Mr. Gardner has a pleasant German face, when made up for Karl, and is easy and at home on the stage. His singing of his new "Karl Lullaby"—a beautiful composition—is most effective both as a part of the piece and as a melody. The character, as delineated by Mr. Gardner is full of fun by reason of his blunders and his shrewdness, oddly expressed. He sings some nice songs which of themselves are a pleasure to listen to. He has made an artistic success in New York.

Fall In, G. A. R.

The Post invites and urges every old soldier whether a member of the G. A. R. or not, to fall in with us for memorial services on Sunday evening, May 30, and also for Decoration Day services May 31. Turn out, boys, and let us have a fine regiment on Decoration Day. The post furnishes badges free. By order of the Post.

Post Commander.

The Governor's Response.

The following letter explains itself:

J. N. NEVINS, TREASURER OF RELIEF COMMITTEE.

DEAR SIR: I am pleased to acknowledge enclosed in your favor of May 14th, 1886, the draft for $1186.30, the balance of the grand contribution of $1686.30, from the people of the city of Brainerd for the relief of the sufferers from the tornado at St. Cloud and vicinity.

Yours Respectfully,
L. F. HUBBARD,
Governor.

St. Paul, May 18, 1886.

Notice.

The G. A. R. requests all that can do so to furnish a few flowers, bouquets or wreaths for Decoration Day services, as we will be very thankful for them. Any one who wishes to furnish flowers or wreaths for any special grave, or to be hung upon the cross or column in the memory of any dead soldier, will please leave them with the ladies of the W. C. T. U., corner Front and Fifth street, where we will get them and take them to the cemetery. We hope to have a large number of memorial wreaths and bouquets. A soldier who is buried in another state may have memorial tokens deposited here on Memorial day.

Very Respectfully,
ANDREW E. VRON,
Post Commander.

What They Say and Think.

The St. Paul Globe of Wednesday says:

Dr. D. P. Bigger, the division surgeon of the Northern Pacific railroad at Livingston, came down on a business visit. He has occupied that position for a number of years, and previous to coming to Brainerd served as surgeon of the Kansas Pacific railroad at Kansas City. Of late he has become interested in the Hunter hot springs of Montana, and is loud in their praise.

J. C. F. Kindred, Brainerd, was about the Merchants with Lieut. Gov. C. A. Gilman of St. Cloud. Their conversation was intimately associated with the best means of converting the heathen and of making good Republican voters and states. Mr. Kindred is a real estate owner and boomer, who is just now more interested in bringing Brainerd to the front than in political conventions. He last political contest was with Nelson, when the latter defeated him for congress in the Fifth district, fully satisfied him. He is the chief mover and leading spirit in the scheme by which it is proposed to construct a dam at Brainerd, using the slack water for log booms of vast size, and previous to coming to Brainerd served as surgeon of the Kansas Pacific railroad at Kansas City. Of late he has become interested in the Hunter hot springs of Montana, and is loud in their praise.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

Whereas default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Mitchell Mullen and Agnes Mullen, his wife, mortgagors, to P. J. Bowlin, mortgagee, bearing date the 15th day of March, 1884, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Crow Wing, in the state of Minnesota, on the 31st day of May, A. D. 1884, at 11:40 o'clock p. m., in book of Mortgages, on page 425, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the amount of ten hundred and one dollars and seventy-five (10) cents, no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative by reason of said default, and said mortgage will be foreclosed by said of the mortgaged premises described in said mortgage, and sale of the front door of the court house, in the city of Brainerd, in the county of Crow Wing and state of Minnesota, on Monday the 31st day of May, A. D. 1886, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, for the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage and taxes, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and fifty dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage, and to be sold, are the following pieces or parcels of land and premises, situate, lying and being in the county of Crow Wing, and state of Minnesota, described as follows, to-wit: Lot number three (3) of the sub-division of lots ten (10) three (3) and twelve (12) of block number sixty-seven (67) of the town (now city) of Brainerd according to the recorded plat thereof on file and of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county, and also the following described tract of land: Commencing on the west line of Sixth street in said city of Brainerd, at the northeast corner of said block number sixty-seven (67), and bounded by a line running from said point west twenty-five (25) feet; thence south seventy-five (75) feet; thence east twenty-five (25) feet; thence north seventy feet (70) feet to the place of beginning, making a piece of land twenty-five (25) feet by seventy-five (75) feet, the same being parts of said lots ten (10), eleven (11) and twelve (12).

Dated, May 7th, 1886.
