In our column this week will be found a letter from the pen of Capt. Willard Glazier, the gentleman who claims to have located the source of the Mississippi River. The matter is of considerable local interest just now, and so our columns are always open to both sides on any matter of public interest, and we give it space. It is worth reading.

What truth there is in the charge of plagiarism made against Capt. Willard Glazier, we do not know, as we have never had the pleasure of reading Schoolcraft's description of his explorations of the upper Mississippi, and consequently do not know whether the captain used Schoolcraft's language or not. This we will try to ascertain for you.

Farm and Household.

Cattle may get very scarce
The shortage of cattle in the North West is now so acute that the farmers are beginning to look for other sources of supply. It is estimated that the cattle supply in the North West is only one-third of what it was a few years ago.

How to Beat Weeds
The act of breaking stock of more vital importance to many of our farmers is to get rid of the weeds that infest their farms. There are several ways of doing this, and the farmer should choose the one that is best for his land.

Writing on the winter care of cattle
The National Stockman, J. H. Deming, writes in his issue of January 1st, 1914, that the winter care of cattle is one of the most important branches of the farmer's business.

THE LAND OF THE GOAT.

The West is now a land of goats. The goat is becoming one of the most important animals on our farms. It is easy to raise and produces a large amount of milk and wool.
