Probate Notice.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss
County of Crow Wing. }

In Probate Court.

In the Matter of the Estate of Robert G. Matheson, Deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Melissa Matheson, of Cayuga County, New York, representing, among other things, that Robert G. Matheson, late of Crow Wing county, Minnesota, on the 15th day of November, A. D. 1890, at Brainerd, Minnesota, died intestate, and being a resident of said county of Crow Wing at the time of his death, possessed of personable estate in this county, and that said petitioner is the widow of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be so granted to her.

It is ordered, That said petition be heard before the Judge of this Court on Monday, the 19th day of October, A. D. 1891, at ten o'clock a. m., at the office of the Judge of Probate in the Court House, in said county.

Ordered further, That notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased, and to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Brainerd Dispatch, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Brainerd, in said County.

Dated the 24th day of September, A. D. 1891.
(Seal.) By said order,
MILTON McFADDEN,
Judge of Probate.

LEON E. LUM,
Attorney for Petitioner.

WHERE was Donnelly when the jury came out? In the soup.

A FEW more democratic officials and the city of Brainerd would be bankrupt.

IT will be a Chilli day when the United States government allows its sailors to be murdered with impunity.

HENRY CALAMITY STIVERS is good. The Tribune editor is a dandy coining suitable names for the Journal scribe.

A DISASTROUS earthquake is reported to have occurred in Japan on the 28th, a great many lives being lost. Over 300 are reported being killed in one town.

THE democrats are attempting to drown their sorrow over their approaching defeat in Ohio by shouting victory. They'll have no opportunity to shout victory after the election.

DONNELLY won his suit against the Pioneer Press. That is the jury decided he was libeled, and then assessed the value of his ruined character at $1. Bill King says the jury valued Donnelly's character from 94 to 99 cents too high, and judging from his (Donnelly's) political history Bill King is about right.

ST. PAUL has appointed a committee to go to Washington to assist in securing the National Republican Convention for Minneapolis. We do not believe that Minneapolis would be generous enough to return the compliment if St. Paul were attempting to secure the honor.

ACCORDING to the Railway Age there has been laid during the first nine months of the year 2,220 miles of new railway track. This is about 950 miles less than was reported dusing the same period last year, when the total for the year reached 5,733 miles The Age says the yearly addition of new track has not fallen as low as 5,000 since 1885, but in that year it was less than 3,000, and in 1884 was less than 4,000. The Age thinks the total for the year will be about 5,000 miles, which is a good fair average year.

HON. J. L. HAMWICK, of Sherburne county, said to a Tribune reporter on Monday that he would like to see H. C. Stivers nominated for congress in this district, as he was the greatest vote-catcher in the district. Mr. Harwick is badly off. Even Dr. Hemstead got more votes than Mr. Stivers in this legislative district last fall, and yet the genial Doctor was beaten two to one a few months later for mayor in this city. Mr. Stivers would not develop more than a party vote here in his home county.

The Way Democrats Do It.

The salary of Gov. Abbett, of New Jersey, is $10,000, or double that of any of his predecessors, and he has two sons serving in appointive offices, one drawing $2,000 and another $5,000 a year, and his brother, imported from Pennsylvania, in another office, drawing $2,500 a year. This is true Jeffersonian simplicity, in taking all that can be had.

Season For Cards.

Already the entertainments for the long evenings of fall and winter are being arranged, and clubs for whist, euchre, high five, &c., &c., are among the other pastimes. One or more packs of excellent playing cards will be sent post paid to any address in the United States, upon receipt of ten cents in stamps or coin for each deck desired. Address C. M. Pratt, Gen'l Ticket & Passenger Agent, Minneapolis & St. Louis Ry., Minneapolis, Minn.

America's Fastest Train.

BUFFALO, Oct. 28.—The Empire State express, a new train on the New York Central, made its first trip from New York to this place yesterday. The train of five coaches weighed in all 278 tons, the engines which drew it—one to Albany and the other thence to this place—weighing 100 tons each. Between Crittenden and Wende the best time was made, the train covering a mile in 51½ seconds, equivalent to 70 miles an hour. The entire journey of 439½ miles was made in 8 hours 4[illegible] minutes and 45 seconds. The schedule time is 1½ minutes less, or 6½ miles an hour.

A Narrow Escape.

A dispaten to the Minneapolis Tribune last Saturday from Staples, says:

Conductor McLagan and his rear brakeman, on train No. 56, met with a severe, though happily, not fatal accident at about 1 o'clock this morning near Fairchild, a mile east of this place. Owing to defective working of the air brakes, both men were thrown from the forward platform of the caboose, striking the car forward of it and being thrown to the ground, but fortunately outside the track. The injured men were brought to this place and attended by the company's surgeon, who found up considerable bruises, while congratulating them upon their fortunate escape.

Work of Fiends.

MILES CITY, Mont., Oct. 24.—Shortly after dark to-night an obstruction, composed of heavy timbers, was discovered on the Northern Pacific track in this city at a point about 20 feet from the entrance to Tongue river bridge. The track at this point is on an embankment about 20 feet high, and had the obstruction remained undiscovered, the west bound passenger which passes here at 9 o'clock, would undoubtedly have met with a terrible accident, resulting in great loss of life. Both railroad and civil authorities are at a loss to locate the perpetrators, but a roundup of all suspicious characters will be undertaken at once, and every effort made to find the guilty parties.

N. P. Improvements.

The Northern Pacific have a staff of surveyors out on the old St. Paul & Duluth line along the river. It is understood that this old route will be used by the Northern Pacific as a cut off for Duluth business coming from the west. This will be a great saving to the bridge, over which at present every passenger and freight car passes. Besides a saving of time will be gained, for instead of going around by Superior to reach Duluth, the Duluth business will in future come direct here from the junction over the old line. This new line also gives the Northern Pacific a complete belt line from Carlton around the two cities, which is no doubt the main object sought by the railroad.—Duluth Tribune.

Edison's Latest Motor.

NEW YORK, Oct. 25.—Thomas A. Edison was seen at his office in Ogden, N. J., regarding his newly perfected motor system for steam and street railroads. Asked if it will displace the steam locomotive, he replied:

"Yes, it will displace steam if economy, as well as speed and safety, is a factor of locomotion; not because it will make easily a speed of a hundred miles an hour, while steam strains itself to make sixty, but because it will get one horse power out of from one to two pounds of cheap coal, while out of six pounds of higher cost a locomotive can only get the same one horse power. It will displace it because it will be cheaper."

"When will it displace it?"

"It will begin to do it between Chicago and Milwaukee, at the World's Fair. In pioneering you have to have a man with nerve to adopt your ideas. I have found the man. He is Henry Villard. It is his idea to have the system in operation between Chicago and Milwaukee during the exposition. He intends to demonstrate that there need be no such thing as waiting for trains between cities now considered a long distance apart. He intends to run a train, say of two cars, every twenty minutes.

"I would not be surprised after that to see him introduce the system over the whole of the Northern Pacific lines, though he would not be compelled to it at all at once and throw away all his locomotives. By this system electricity can be gradually introduced, more trains being sandwiched in between the steam trains as the locomotive wears out."

Mr. Edison was disinclined to describe his invention. "I cannot go into details," he said, "for fear of injuring my rights on the other side—though, by the way, I never made anything out of my European patents —but I will say briefly that the current will pass from the stationary engine to a central rail between the tracks, thence through the machinery attached to the bottom of the cars of the motor. A freight train, of course, would need a motor because of the number of cars, although a single passenger car could be run carrying its own motor beneath it, thence to the wheels, and thence back by the side rails to the power house or stationary engine. Three of these, with a horse power of 10,000 to 12,000 each, would be the motive power of the Pennsylvania railroad system between here and Philadelphia."

Notice to Delinquents.

A long list of delinquent subscribers have been favored with statements of their accounts during the past few days. The list has been made out irrespective of persons, and it is hoped a general response will be made. In some cases the accounts run over a period of several years, and the necessity of our asking a settlement can readily be seen. We must have our pay.

A POLISHED BUTLER.

The Intellectual Genius from Abroad Who Looks After Chauncey Depew.

Chauncey M. Depew has in his employ a butler who is a very superior person, says the New York Press. He is of Swedish birth and ancestry, a college graduate, and he speaks several languages. Coming to this country to conquer fortune, he found it difficult to obtain employment for which his breeding his education, and his inclinations fitted him. A position in an office which he was offered proved, from its indoor confinement, injurious to his never overstrong constitution, and he finally became attached to Mr. Depew's office at the Grand Central depot. Shortly after his installation there Mr. Depew had one of the few but serious illnesses which have befallen him in his busy life.

The young Swede, coming frequently to his residence on business errands, finally became a stationary fixture there and his entire and untiring devotion to Mr. Depew during his illness won the gratitude and admiration of the great man's family. On his recovery Mr. Depew, like the fairy god-mother in the story books, asked the Swede to choose what he would and it should be given to him. And he negged to be allowed to remain as butler. After the amazement caused by his request had subsided it was granted, and for many years he has been not only a trusted but an esteemed servitor in the house of Depew

Every few years, when he has accumulated a considerable sum from his wages, he is bitten that bait many a nightier man has found fatal. He starts a newspaper and keeps it going until his savings are exhausted. Then he returns to his allegiance to the butler's pantry. He is phenomenally punctilious about his duties, and all discharge of them is received by the courtesy and respect to others best shown in those who have much self-respect. The god of his idolatry is Chauncey M. Depew, though he is closely pressed for this distinction by that little edition of himself, Chauncey M. Depew, Jr., aged 10 years.

He Saw Millions in It.

A weak, sickly-looking individual with a shawl and a pair of gaiters, entered a railroad restaurant and said to the waiter:

"Waiter, bring me a sirloin steak, and omelet and some baked potatoes."

"Yes, sir, that—

"And some baked ham, and—and a small mutton chop" waiter."

"Yes, sir, too—"

"A couple of bottles of beer and a half a dozen English muffins."

The waiter put down his tray with a knowing smile. Glancing over the counter to see if the proprietor was looking, he leaned over and whispered:

"Say, mister, you don't want a manager, do you?"

THE FIGURE "9."

The figure 9 in our dates will make a long stay. No man or woman now living will ever date a document without using the figure 8. It standsin the third place in 1891, when it will remain ten years and then move up to second place in 1900, where it will rest for one hundred years.

There is another "9" which has also come to stay. It is unlike the figure 9 in our dates in the respect that it has already moved up to first place, where it will permanently remain. It is called the "New 9" High Arm Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine.

The "No. 9" was ordered for first place by the experts of Europe as the Paris Exposition of 1889, and when it was contrasted with the leading machines of the world, it was awarded the only Grand Prize given to family sewing machines, all others on exhibit having received lower awards of gold medals, etc. The French Government also recognized its superiority by the decoration of Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, President of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

The "No. 9" is not an old machine improved upon, but is an entirely new machine, and the Grand Prize at Paris was awarded it as the greatest advance in sewing machine mechanism of the age. Those who begin in our next season, therefore, of having the very latest and best.

A DEMENTED clergyman wandered from home, and on finding himself in Chicago, committed suicide.

STERN justice is costly sometimes. Stern county, California, paid $300, the cost of prosecuting a man for stealing 60 cents, and he was acquitted.

RICH iron ore has been struck in San Ysidro mine, a few miles below Ensenada, Lower California. A vein, 1,000 feet long and 60 feet deep has been found.

A CHINESE laundryman in Tom Green County, Texas, advertises his establishment in the newspaper of the county with display type and a quarter-column humorous cut showing the Melican men driving in donkey carts to his store.

THE problem of the settlement of the troubles in Ireland has now passed out of the sentimental stage and become a financial one. Who is going to receive contributions and disburse them judiciously? Without money there can be no successful party maintained in Parliament.

QUEEN VICTORIA is as yet undecided as to whom she will select as the poet laureate successor to Lord Tennyson. If it will relieve the good old lady's mind Uncle Sam will ship her a few loads of verse-slinging nuisances for whom he has no use and will gladly pay the freight.

A NEGRO who applied for shelter at a poorhouse in Tennessee the other day says he is 105 years old. He says that his uncle of the same name lived to be 130 years old. A grandfather was 125 years old when he died, and a grandmother 118. The old man smokes and drinks and eats heartily

WHATEVER may be true of the ruin wrought by "Chinese cheap labor" in the days when Ah Sin played that famous game of cards, the Chinese of the eastern states are fairly well paid workmen. Chinese laundrymen charge nearly or quite current market rates for their work, and Chinese cooks, whether in New York or in California, demand comparatively high wages.

SCRANTON has a remarkable wheel which weighs 400,000 pounds. It is a cog wheel, fifty four feet in diameter and eighteen inches face, and has a capacity of 30,000,000 gallons of water and 2000 tons of sand per twenty-four hours, run at a velocity of ten feet a second on the inner edge of the bucket. The total length of the shaft is twenty-three feet and six inches.

LAWYER RINGROSE of New Haven, Conn., became infatuated with a female witness who foiled him on a cross-examination and wedded her in haste, thereby making reasonable a change of his name to Ringnose. She was a sort of a grass widow prosecuting a husband for theft, with a divorce suit on the side, and Ringrose was the man's attorney.

IT is said that between the island of Madagascar and the coast of India there are 16,000 islands, only 600 of which are inhabited. On any of these islands a man can live and support his family in princely luxury, without working more than twenty-five days in the year. In fact, on some of these islands, he need not work at all, as nature provides the food and no clothes are required.

THERE is a popular notion that articles sold by fakirs on the streets are cheaper than like articles in shops, but exactly the reverse is true. Shoe laces, for example, sell upon the streets at from five to twenty-five cents a pair, while they may be bought in the larger shops at from ten cents to $1 per dozen pairs. The same is true of suspenders and of other small articles chiefly of personal wear.

THE residents of Los Gatos, Cal., were much interested recently in a peculiar vehicle. It had wheels at one end and a sled at the other, not for alternate snow and bare ground, but as a wagon up hill and sled down, the road being shifted as one or the other was met. Ten years since, says a correspondent from that place, hardly any other conveyance was seen; hundreds of elegant equipages are now seen every day.

BIG game is still plentiful in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The provincial authorities have assigned a small capitation grant for the killing of dangerous wild beasts, and so can tell approximately how many are put out of the way each year. According to the records there were slain in 1887, 130 bears and nearly 1,000 wolves; yet even these figures do not represent the entire number, as some sportsmen do not report their successes.

As rain producers Melbourne and Dyrenforth are "nowhere" when compared with the Georgia man. James L. Fountain of Mount Vernon killed a rattlesnake that measured five feet in length, and hung it up for rain. "There had been no rain in that section for two weeks or more, and there was not the slightest appearance that there would be any more. But in less than three hours there came a right good shower."

PITY the sorrows of poor old China, cogitating with none to advise whether it were better to risk a foreign or a civil war. With all christendom willing to make targets of her seaports a foreign war would be hopeless from the start and terribly disastrous. With a civil war under present conditions her existing imperial dynasty would be pretty sure to achieve a nasty death. One horn or the other of the dilemma she must choose speedily, and either threatens to produce enormous changes, the very thought of change or innovation being in itself like a death knell to the nation of changeless conservatism.

As no powder was kept in the office the explosion is supposed to have been the work of discharged employes. J. W. Waggener, president of the company, has offered a reward for the apprehension of the culprits.

WILLIAM LYON, manager of the Linseed Oil Company, committed suicide at Pittsburg, Pa., by shooting himself through the head. Lyons was 60 years of age, and quite prominent. He has been in ill health for several years, and this is assigned as the cause of the deed.

SEVERAL eminent French lawyers have been consulted upon the matter of the release of the fund of the Irish parliamentary party, now on deposit here. They agree that the problem is a knotty one, and believe that the first step must be an application to the court of chancery by the heirs of Mr. Parnell and those of Mr. Biggar, for Mr. Biggar was a trustee of the fund at the same time Mr. Parnell was. The French judges will not act, probably, contrary to the decision of the English court, unless in declaring themselves incompetent to adopt it. This would cause prolonged trouble. If the money goes into the Cais teed Consignations it is lost to all but the French treasury. Legal proceedings will serve to keep it from everybody for many years and then it will fall to the state. Meantime Messrs. Monroe & Co., the Paris bankers, have funded the whole in securities bearing 5¼ per cent interest, realizing £2,500 annually. This amount added to the fund, will reach a large total before the vexed legal question can be settled.

CRACKED CRANIUMS.

Several Free Fights With Sticks, Shovels and Stones Between Parnellites and McCarthyites.

Hospitals Filled With Participants Who Have Been Laid Up for Much-Needed Repairs.

CORK, Oct. 28.—Messrs. William O'Brien and John Dillon arrived here to-day. The two distinguished members of parliament were met by a deputation composed of members of the National federation, representatives of the Gaelic club, the municipal officers and a large number of priests.

An enormous crowd of people lined the route, followed by the procession which followed Messrs. O'Brien and Dillon from the railroad station. The procession was headed by a brass band, and was escorted by a strong detachment of police. As the procession passed through the streets there was considerable hissing and booing, and several stones crashed through a large portrait of William O'Brien which was carried in the parade.

Upon arriving at the assembly rooms Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien were given an enthusiastic reception, during which several warmly applauded speeches were made. While the speechmaking was in progress a body of Parnellites attacked the bandsmen of the McCarthyites and tried to demolish their instruments, now a favorite proceeding upon the party of the contending factions. A warm free fight followed, but it was only of short duration, as the police charged in upon the combatants and soon put an end to the hostilities.

Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien after the reception at the assembly rooms was ended, escorted by a number of friends, attended the Cork county convention, where Mr. Dillon acted as presiding officer. During the course of an address made to the county delegates, Mr. Dillon complained of what he termed the "organized violence" of the Parnellites, and made other allusions to the political situation which were loudly applauded by those present. Mr. O'Brien further declared that it had become his duty to drive the followers of Parnell from parliament.

A LIVELY SCRIMMAGE.

After the Cork county convention had adjourned, there was a serious fight in the streets of this city between the McCarthyites and the Parnellites. As soon as the convention had closed its proceedings, Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien passed through the city, still accompanied by the procession which met them at the railroad station. Suddenly the McCarthyites were attacked by a large mob of Parnellites, and both sides fought desperately with sticks, clubs, shovels and pikes. A detachment of mounted police was sent for, and they spurred their horses in between the two lines of combatants, striking right and left with the flat of their sabers amid two crossing showers of stones and bricks. A large number of wounded were stretched bleeding and groaning in the streets before the troopers restored order. The neighboring hospital had to find accommodation for many wounded persons by the time hostilities were suspended.

There were several affrays here yesterday evening at the close of the various political meetings, and sticks and stones were freely used by both parties. The result is that a number of members of the two opposing parties are being nursed in the hospitals and elsewhere for several wounds incurred during the fray. A girl who was an onlooker during one of these political scrimmages was seriously wounded about the head and face by stones.

Two boys of Limerick quarreled to-day while discussing the question of the leadership of the Irish parliamentary party. Finally one of the lads struck the other over the head with a stone, fracturing his skull, for refusing to answer whether he was in favor of the late Mr. Parnell or Mr. Healy.

Fooled the Police.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Special Telegram, Oct. 28.—James McMichaels, who had a family living in Nebraska, was manager of a dray line here until July 10 last. On that day he disappeared, eloping with Alice Watters, a handsome girl of nineteen years. After they were gone it was charged that McMichaels was a defaulter to the amount of $700. The police could get no trace of the pair.

Two months later the girl came home in widow's weeds. She said she had married McMichal at St. Paul; two or three weeks after he had been injured in a street car accident and died in a few days. The story was believed and the police ceased pursuing McMichaels. The girl went back to her home. The other day McMichaels, restored to the flesh, came into town very quietly, and the next thing known the pair had disappeared again. The story of his death had been told by the girl to throw the police off the track. There is not the slightest clue to their whereabouts at present.

Hit Over the Head With a Club.

AUSTIN, Minn., Oct. 28.—Two crews of threshers came to town last night, got beastly drunk and started home at a late hour. When about five miles out of this city they began quarreling among themselves. Knives were finally drawn and blood flowed freely. One Andrew Mitten, a Norwegian, was hit over the head with a heavy club, fracturing his skull and mashing the drum of his ear. He was picked up in an unconscious condition and taken to his home, where he now lingers between life and death. His recovery is very doubtful. His would-be assassin cannot be found.

Rough Weather on Lake Erie.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 28.—Lake Erie has been too rough for tugs or other vessel to venture out to-day. A number of yachts moored inside the government breakwater here were driven ashore and wrecked, and the man-of-war Michigan had a narrow escape. It has been learned that the schooner J. D. Sawyer, while on her way from Cleveland to Lorain, was driven ashore and wrecked. There was no loss of life.

Still Tinkering With Lymph.

BERLIN, Special—An exhaustive article from the pen of Prof. Koch is published to-day. The article treats of the origin, preparation and application of tuberculine. In it the Professor declares that by chemical experiments he has succeeded in purifying his lymph of all inflammatory matter. He adds that the effect of an application of pure lymph differs but little from the effects of an application of crude lymph. Only, he says the amount of dose determines the effect.

NORFOLK, Va., Special—The schooner Ellen May was totally wrecked off Newport News this afternoon about 3:30 in a fierce southeasterly gale which swept across the James river. The crew was saved.

SUNDAY OPENING.

Bishop Grafton of Wisconsin in Favor of Healthful Recreation.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 28.—Right Rev. Bishop Grafton, of the Episcopal diocese of Fond du Lac, Wis., who arrived here yesterday for the purpose of taking part in services attending the consecration of Rev. Dr. Nicholson as the bishop of Milwaukee, was interviewed to-night in regard to the question of opening the world's fair on Sunday. He said:

I am certainly in favor of having the exposition open on Sunday, or at least that part of it that includes the art and kindred displays. The doors should be open say about noon, when all those who wished to attend church services have done so. After one has properly observed his duties of the Sabbath there is no possible reason why he should not devote the remainder of the day to healthful recreation. That is a real benefit to man, woman and child. Also I would suggest that the restaurants should remain open in order that refreshments should be served to the people. I think that the keeping of the fair open on Sundays would draw to it a great deal of the saloon and theater patronage. It is foolishness to attempt to do that which our intellect opposes and which was not literally intended.

WASHED ASHORE.

Portions of a Steamer Containing the Corpses of Sailors.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—One of the effects of the great storm was seen to-day in the washing ashore near Gorleston, in Sussex, of the stern of the ship Margaret John, from Little Hampton. Four bodies were recovered from the wreck. Nothing is known of the fate of the rest of the crew. This morning the body of a sailor having a life belt around his chest and waist, floated ashore near Yarmouth in the midst of a quantity of wreckage. It is feared that this furnishes evidence that a large ship has been wrecked near that port. A Yarmouth fishing lugger, with her entire crew, foundered during the gales.

Advices from Tunis state that the force of the recent storm was sharply felt on the southern coast of the Mediterranean. A large wall in the city of Tunis, which had been undermined by the flood, collapsed and buried thirty natives. At last accounts rescuing parties were digging away at the debris to recover the bodies of the victims.

MANY VILLAGES INUNDATED.

MADRID, Oct. 28.—Throughout Spain there is more or less evidence of the damage done by floods and of the severe nature of these inundations. Many villages are entirely isolated from the surrounding towns and hamlets, and, as may be supposed, there has been a great loss everywhere in live stock and crops. The villages of Gualchos and Urco, near Granada, have been completely inundated.

MANY BOATS WRECKED.

MARSEILLES, Oct. 28.—Details of the great storm are rapidly coming to hand. Eighteen boats of all sorts, mainly small coasters, were dashed to pieces in this vicinity. A large three-masted Italian vessel was wrecked at Hyeres, twelve miles east of Toulon. At Cannes the gale was severe. The sea with great violence swept over and badly damaged the promenade du Midi. Many vessels took refuge in the various ports of the French colony of Algeria.

REMEMBERS HIS WORK.

Parnell's Efforts in Behalf of Ireland Acknowledged by Mr. Morley.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—Mr. Morley spoke at Manchester last night. He said that he was glad to think that, though the provocation was extreme, neither himself nor his colleagues used a single recriminating word in relation to Mr. Parnell, whose later actions never blinded them to the importance of the work he achieved for Ireland. For himself, come weal, come woe, he would never regret that he had given six of the best years of his life to this great cause. Proceeding to criticise Mr. Chamberlain's speech, Mr. Morley asked what John Bright would have thought of his assertion that the credit for good legislation belonged to the Conservatives. How was it that Mr. Chamberlain worked heart and soul in 1880 to oust the Salisbury government, which he denounced as those who neither toiled nor spun? Not so long since Earl Salisbury dubbed Chamberlain the Modern Jack Cade. This reconciliation is very wonderful, and Mr. Chamberlain must regret as he looks back at the errors of his misspent life.

He concluded by denying Mr. Chamberlain's assertion that he advocated handing Egypt over to either France or barbarism. He was certain that Lord Salisbury did not desire its permanent occupation, and would not thank Mr. Chamberlain for his language about Egypt.

A Decree by Pope Pius IX.

BRUSSELS, Oct. 28.—The Courier of this city publishes a decree alleged to have been issued by the late Pope Pius IX. with reference to future conclaves. The decree confirms the exclusive right of the cardinals to elect a pope free from any intervention on the part of the powers. It also declares that the cardinals in Rome at the time of the death of a pope ought to decide whether the election of a new pope should take place outside of Italy, and that if any attempt should be made to interfere with a conclave it should be transferred beyond Italy.

Natives Slaughtered.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—Dispatches received here from Lagos, capital of the British West African colony of that name, gives an account of the landing and triumph over a number of tribes in the neighborhood of the Cameroons river, upper Guinea, of a force of Germans. The villages of the hostile chiefs was stoned, inflicting severe punishment upon them. Eight of the German landing party were wounded. The number of natives killed is not stated.

Succeeds His Father.

Carter Under the Weather.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Oct. 28.—Commissioner Carter, of the general land office, has been too ill to attend to his duties in the general land office for a few days, and contemplates a trip through the Virginia mountains on horseback. He thinks that the air about this time of year will be similar to what he would find in his Montana home earlier in the season, and he believes he will be greatly benefited by the jaunt. Besides, he has relatives in Virginia. "Col. Carter of Cartersville" is said to still reside in the old dominion.

They Are Excited.

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica, Special.—The Colombian colony at this capital is much excited over the political situation in Colombia. The most conservative are disposed to believe that President Nunez cannot remain long in power.

The Kaiser Consents.

BERLIN, Special—The kaiser has given his consent to the changes proposed by the war office in the appearance and equipment of the German army. The chief object sought to be acheived is the change of bright colors that attract the aim of the enemy for hues that will make the soldier a less conspicuous target. White leather accouterments are abolished, and the heavy spiked helmet is discarded for light headgear. The change will entirely transform the appearance of the German troops.

Cumming Seeks Revenge.

LONDON, Special.—Sir William Gordon Cumming of baccarat fame, who is rusticating in the Highlands, has lodged a protest with the municipal council of Elgin against that body appropriating money to be used in tendering a reception to the Duke and Duchess of Fife. The Duchess of Fife is a daughter of the Prince of Wales, whose name may be remembered in connection with certain events at Tranby-Croft.

Heavy Failure.

LONDON, Special—Israel Liebermann, of Drohobicz, Galicia, has failed, with liabilities of $300,000. He was a member of a syndicate working ozocerite mines. His financial difficulties arose from a flaw in a title deed. It is feared that other firms belonging to the syndicate will collapse.

LOST IN THE DESERT.

An Adventure in the Deserts of Bolivia.

Mr. A. J. Duffield, in the course of his "Travels Abroad," was making his way into the interior of Bolivia in company with fifty mules "laden with merchandise," and "ten muleteers heavily laden with ardent spirits."

The company had travelled all night and had made about forty miles, climbing about five thousand feet, when Mr. Duffield committed what he styles one of the greatest follies of his life. He left his companions and started off alone across a desert in which there are no permanent tracks, nor any landmarks or guideposts.

"It was from no love of adventure," he says, "that I set out alone from Culupo; it was simply to escape from the clouds of dust raised by the fifty mules. My companions assured me that I could not miss my way. So on I went over level ground at an easy pace.

"Before me lay a motionless sea of sand, and above me hung the sun pouring down heat. But the air was sweet. It penetrated my bones, and I went on mindless of all things save the bliss of being. This uncommon feeling lasted for some five hours, when I waked as if from a happy dream to find myself all alone.

"I had no sense of danger, but pulled up the mule to get a steady view of things. In front nothing was to be seen but the mules ears, behind nothing but its tail. I knew enough of mules to believe that this one knew what it was about, so for another hour I allowed it to go at its will. Then we came up to what I imagined must be my own troop of mules.

"'How far are we from Mescanti?' I inquired, in a confident tone.

"'This,' said the courteous Indian, in cultivated Spanish, 'is not the trail that leads to Mescanti.'

"'Where, then lies the trial?' I inquired.

"'Yonder,' was the reply, and the dark-faced child of the sun pointed indefinitely with his chin to a part of the world at right angles to that over which we were then passing.

"Being in haste, for the day was now waning, I bolted off, and came not on one track but three tracks, but they all ran in the same direction.

"It was now six o'clock. In a few minutes the sun would set and I should be left in the dark. Still I had no fear. On taking a steady view around the world, I observed a dip in the distant hills. There, if anywhere, I should find water.

"We sped on our way. The sun set and the night quickly became dark. There was no moon. Soon I caught sight of what seemed to be a torch. It proved to be a star and was a long way off.

"Still we kept on. Midnight came and the cold was intense. We reached what seemed to be a deep, yawning pit, which lay in a direct line with the star. Down went the mule into what turned out to be an extinct volcano —a crater of pumice. We climbed the other side with difficulty, making a great cloud of blinding dust, and on reaching the solid earth I proposed to give the mule a drink of water.

"To my horror there was no water to be had. The strap which had fastened the horns containing the water to the croup had given away. To my actual thirst was now added an imaginary one, which became intolerable. In my distress I had no heart to mount the mule, and walked at its side, picking up one or two pebbles to roll under my burning tongue, which began to swell, or so I imagined, as my thirst increased.

"Soon my attention was called to a mysterious stretch of darkness over which hung the friendly star, and as I was peering into it, the mule turned with a suddenness which nearly hurled me from the saddle. I pulled up, and heard the sound of rippling water!

"We had reached the precipitous banks of the Mescanti River. If the mule had not started back we should have fallen down a steep place and been killed.

"The mule had found the river; it was now my place to find the ford. This did not take more than an hour, and I gave the first drink to the mule. After half an hour's rest I was again in the saddle. We swam the river, and in less than five minutes were in front of a roaring fire in an Indian's hut at Mescanti—saved!"—Youth's Companion.

Bogus Suicides.

A physician in the city hospital, talking about suicides the other evening, said: "When a patient is brought into the hospital having presumably taken poison it is an absolute impossibility to know whether or not such is really the case. There are several reasons. Drug clerks are pretty wise nowadays, and one of their frequently practiced schemes is to give a harmless decoction instead of poison to persons who act as though they might intend suicide. The results in such cases are sometimes surprising. The person who takes the alleged poison may be worked up to such a pitch of nervous excitement that all the outward symptoms of poisoning may be exhibited. That was the state of the woman who fell unconscious in front of the Dennison house the other night. She had not taken a drop of any kind of poison. Then very often, people are brought in who are merely shamming. The most remarkable case of this kind I ever heard of was that of young woman who took the 'fake' poison under very sensational circumstances at the Grand Central depot. She appeared to be profoundly unconscious when received here. She remained so while the stomach pump was being used, and that requires little less than Spartan nerve. But when some one made a facetious remark about her underclothing she bit the tube of the stomach pump in two in her efforts to keep from laughing.—Cincinnati Enquirer,

The Eagle Screams.

Chinese Official—"Huh! Whatee Melican Glovement do 'bout it?"

"Hark! Do you hear that terrible rumble?"

"Thatee earthquake. We havee many."

"Do you know, sir, what causes earthquakes?"

"Me no sabe."

"It's the American Government testing its big guns at Sandy Hook."—New York Weekly.

A Comparison.

She, gazing upwards: "How bright the stars are to-night, Mr. Sampson!"

He, promptly: "They are not brighter, Miss Clara, than—than——"

She, softly: "Than what, Mr. Sampson?"

He: "Than they were last night."

Very Serious Case.

Physician to convalescent patient: "My bill, sir, for attendance during your late illness."

Patient: "Great Scott, doctor," looking over the bill and turning white, "was I as bad as all that?"

FORCE AT A KISSING BEE.

A Southern Husband Stands Up for His Pretty Wife.

Back in the North Carolina mountains the student of customs may still find material for researches, says the Washington Post. The most unique are the kissing games, which still cling to the soil. A lot of big-limbed, powerful young men and appled-cheeked buxom girls gather and select one of their number as master of ceremonies. He takes his station in the center of the room, while the rest pair off and parade around him. Suddenly one young woman will throw up her hands and say:

"I am a-pinin'."

The master of ceremonies takes it up and the following dialogue and interlocution takes place:

"Miss Arabella Jane Apthorp says she's a-pinin'. What is Miss Arabella Jane Apthorp a-pinin' fur?"

"I'm a-pinin' fur a sweet kiss."

"Miss Arabella Jane Apthorp says she's a-pinin' fur a sweet kiss. Who is Miss Arabella Jane Apthorp a-pinin' fur a sweet kiss frum?"

"I'm a-pinin' fur a sweet kiss from Mr. Hugh Waddle." (Blushes, convulsive giggles and a confusion on the part of Miss Arabella Jane Apthorp at this forced confession.) Mr. Hugh Waddle walks up manfully and relieves the fair Arabella's "pinin'" by a smack which sounds like a 3-year-old steer drawing his hoof out of the mud.

Then a young man will be taken with a sudden and unaccountable "pinin'," which after the usual exchanges of questions and volunteered information reveals the name of the maiden, who causes the "gnawin'" and "pinin'." She coyly retreats out doors, only to be chased, overtaken, captured and forcibly compelled to relieve her captors distress.

At one of these entertainments, which it was the narrator's fortune to attend, there was a remarkable beautiful young woman who had been married about a month. Her husband was present, a huge, beetle-browed, black-eyed mountaineer, with a fist like a ham. The boys fought shy of the bride for fear of incurring the anger of the hulking spouse. The game went on for some time, when symptoms of irritation developed in the giant. Striding to the middle of the room he said:

"My wife ez pooty, 'n ez nice 'n sweet ez any gyrul hyar. You uns has known her all her life. This game hez been a-goin' on half an hour an' nobody has pined fur her oncet. Ef someone dosen't pine fur her pooty soon thar will be trouble."

She was the belle of the ball after that. Everybody pined for her.

KEEPING BOARDERS.

Some Valuable Hints to Boarding-house Keepers.

A woman who keeps boarders is successful just in proportion as she pays attention to three of the most important things in the house, says the Home Journal: Good cooking, an attractive table and cleanliness in her rooms. By good cooking I do not mean lavishness of material, but the best of what is given, and care in its preparation. No matter if you have smaller quantities, have the quality good. A medium-sized tenderloin, done carefully to a rich brown, even if there is less of it, will meet with more appreciation at the table than eight pounds of leather-steak so thin that it curls up on the platter. Potatoes, though they are the staff of life, become more than tiresome when each recurring day sees them served up in the same fashion. Surely, there is enough methods of serving potatoes to secure variety to the eye and appetite to the palate. Variety is the very life of a table, and it seems strange that so few of the women who preside over boarding houses realize this fact. An appetite is created in proportion to the extent to which it is catered. The sense of taste is the most delicate member of the human body. Please it, and you please the most important part of human desires. Expense is not such an essential in this as in judgement. The pleasantest table I ever sat at was conducted on the same economical principles. But no one could judge the breakfast of tomorrow from the breakfast of to-day. Each meal was different from its predecessor, and yet economy was most successfully practiced. The secret of that table lay in its variety, and in the manner in which the things were served upon it.

Wholesale Punishment.

It is doubtful if the most strenuous opponent of corporal punishment would feel that the chastisement meditated by Brer Tompkins, the father of thirteen children, was severe enough to do any harm.

He was seen one afternoon by his pastor, with a long fishing-rod in his hand, wending his way homeward from a neighbor's.

"What!" ejaculated the minister, in great surprise. "Is you go'n' fishin' at yo' age, Mr. Tompkins? I'm really s'prised!"

"No, I yaint gwine fishin,' sah," protested Mr. Tompkins. "I know 'twouldn't be seemly, sah; but yo' sarmon las' Sunday mawnin' on sparin' de rod med sech a 'pression on me, sah, dat I done borrer dis rod ob Mr. Willis, an I'se, gwine t' stan' mah whole thuteen chillin in a row, sah, and jes' mek one good job ob hit, so's dey won't spile; an' I kin return de rod wid a clar conscience, sah!"

Adoption by Wholesale.

A light-hearted Parisian, M. Felix Deleuze by name, adopted twelve years ago sixteen orphan girls, to whom he gave a home in his own handsome mansion, and he provided for their care and education a requisite number of servants and governesses. Being a widower and childless, he portioned out a large share of his immense fortune among the wards, who now arriving at woman's estate, are gratefully and cleverly marrying off his hands. Five have chosen good husbands, received the dot of $400 bestowed by the foster-father, and gone from under his roof to make homes of their own. Two of them have taken the veil. Nine yet remain to choose their vocation or path in life, on which, like the king's son in the fairy tale, they will set out provided with a father's blessing wise counsel and a purse of gold.—Illustrated American.

Intoxicants and Muscular Power.

In conjunction with M. Quinquard, M. Grehant has been measuring the effect of alcohol and other intoxicants on muscular power, the subject being a dog, and the muscle being the tendon of Achilles. Compressed oxygen reduced the muscular power to about a half of the normal; alcohol, administered by injection to the point of drunkenness, reduced to the muscular power to about a third of the normal; and curare, administered by hypodermic injection, also reduced the muscular power to a much smaller fraction fo what it had been.

A Useful Accomplishment.

Father—"Johnny, there's a button off your coat. Go up stairs and sew it on."

Little Johnny (in surprise)—"Mother will sew it on."

Father—"I know she will, but I want you to learn to sew on buttons yourself."

Johnny (amazed)—"Why?"

Father (solemnly)—"Some day, Johnny, when you grow up you won't have any mother—nothing but a wife."—Good News.

OUT OF TUNE.

Sweet little maid! whose golden-ripplèd head
Betwixt my grief and me its beauty rears
With quick demand for song—all singing's dead,
Dear!
My heart is sad, I can not sing for tears.

Nay, do not ask me why; I can not sing—
Miss ill tuned notes would do wrong music wrong.
I have no silken lyre to play the langhing Spring,
No voice to join in Summer's tide of song

More from the forest's dying splendor takes
My heart to hymn; and fuller sympathy
Finds with the hurricane November wakes
To tear its tribute from each groaning tree.

Or when the last sere leaves in Winter fall,
While all the world in pity shrouds their lives,
I'll envy them the snowflakes' gentle pall.
That hides their sorrows from the prying skies.

Were it not sweet to slumber at Earth's breast,
Or lie and seem to pull the curtain
down,
Never again to feel the drear unrest
Of baffled love or unfulfilled renown—

The weariness of patient work uncrowned,
The bitter recollection of long days misspent,
The fierce desire, the thing desired found
Void of delight, meant vital, and yet dead?

Nay, dear, not now, not yet! let the slow years
Fulfill their office. Oft at close of day,
The far grim range all beautiful appears,
Kissed by the kindness by the sunset ray.

So bygone sorrow takes a tender hue,
So time can tinge the memory of pain;
Old sorrow is ever sweeter than the new.
And some day, sweet, we'll sing them again.

QUEER MONKEY STORY.

BY LIEUT. P. DE T. CLASH.

Far away in Surinam on the north coast of South America, near to the primal forests of that great continent, is a missionary station belonging to the fathers of Rotterdam. The fathers not only preach the gospel to the Carybe and Hatchimankin Indians, but they also teach them how to cultivate the fertile ground and raise crops.

The woods of South America are populated by millions of monkeys, parrots, and ferocious beasts. The latter, however, finding plenty of food, seldom approach human habitations.

Only a short time ago one of the fathers stopped in New York on his way to the old country and he told the writer a very queer story about the intelligence of monkeys. The question whether the quadrumanous can reason or not will perhaps never be satisfactorily decided, but it is safe to say that their instincts are wonderfully developed. The power of reasoning, after all, is the divine attribute of mankind. Yet the Surinam monkeys, in this case, acted with so much deliberation that they even puzzled the pious fathers.

Last year, the venerable monk said, he had planted five acres with corn. It was hard work. Corn growing involves a good deal of manual labor, and the great heat down in Surinam is not in favor of bodily exertions and exhausts a man very soon. The corn however began to grow beautifully, and our painstaking was richly rewarded. We felt sure that the harvest would repay our efforts and labor an hundred-fold.

The corn had just begun to ripen when to our great surprise one fine morning we found a great part of the cornfield cleared—all the ears taken away.

We did not know what to make of it but suspected the Indians to be thieves. So we decided to watch, and, if possible, catch the rest.

The next evening two of us took our guns and ensconced ourselves in the field. It was a clear moonlight night when to our great surprise what seemed a whole regiment of monkeys marched from the nearby woods. They were all sizes, small and large, and with an old round-bottomed monkey standing in front of them. He evidently was the commander-in-chief.

The watchers kept their breath, avoiding carefully to make any noise, and awaiting further developments. At the same time they made sure they could not be seen. "We did not want to kill any of the brutes," continued the father, who had been one of the guard, "but only wanted to frighten them to such an extent that they would never dare to come back again.

Suddenly we heard a single yell ringing through the silent starlight night, followed by an infernal thousand-fold re-echoed howl which I assume made the air tremble and almost frightened us out of our boots.

Sure enough the monkeys had discovered our presence, and the whole monkey land given the signal for attack or hasty retreat. Luckily enough for us it was the latter. You can easily imagine how ridiculous and sublime this retreat was, on account of its velocity and confusion. Not in less than a few minutes all the monkeys had disappeared in the forest, and the night had become as still as before.

We then returned home being satisfied that our Surinam neighbors were the thieves, and we also felt convinced that they would not dare to come back, at least not that same night.

What a mistake we made! The monkeys were a great deal smarter than we, and when the morning dawned the first golden rays of the Sol revealed to us the fact that another possibly part of our corn-field had gone.

The brutes evidently, after our departure, had come back, and finding everything safe and quiet had carried away all the corn they possibly could.

It was really too bad of them, for you must know that at no place and at no season do they lack any food in Surinam. Naturally we felt very much disgusted with their actions, and decided that we would watch again and try to save the rest of the corn against any circumstances. To this purpose we digged a big hole in the ground. The idea was to serve as a hiding place. We felt certain that if we were hidden in this manner the old monkey could not discover us.

On the following night the army of monkeys arrived as usual in perfect military order on the battle field. Again the old general led them. He did it with great care. It would at this time we could see him halting and looking closely 'round. This he also repeated several times until the coast field was reached. Then with a sudden rush the field was taken by storm. At this moment I fired what afterwards proved to be, I am sorry to say, a deadly shot.

The scream, the yelling and howls which followed the gun report were simply deafening and the confusion among the animals beyond description.

The apes fled in every direction. They moon, however, returned to their general was missing, and no sooner had they done so when half a dozen or so returned to look for the old man. The tried to lift him, and seeing that the poor fellow was unable to move, they tried to carry him away. I felt now very sorry for having fired the shot, and would have given the whole corn-field for not having done so. We both hastened to the spot in order to assist the wounded monkey soldier. On our approach the other monkeys dropped their dying comrade and like the rest took to the woods.

The dying animal was an old, fine specimen, and the expression in his eyes a pitiful sight to behold.

He had his long forearms crossed and his hands he kept pressed on the bleeding wound. We shuddered for had nature given him a tongue to speak he would surely have said to me: "How cruel of you to kill me for a little bit of corn, you that have come from distant shores to tell the people of this country of the Lord, of love and thou shalt not kill."

We took the poor fellow to the station, not withstanding all care he died two days later. We shall never shoot another monkey, unless mad, how much corn they steal. It was too bad a night, and to my last day I shall not forget the tear I read in that monkey's eyes: "Thou shall not kill."

AN ADVENTURE IN NORWAY.

An Account of a Thrilling Climb at Night.

I shall never forget that climb. We were hardly out on the road before we began to ascend, and I had shortly to stop for breath. My guide however, if silent was thoughtful, and he soon caught me a glimpse of the path where to pause. Up through the dusk we went he guiding me, now by a word telling me how to step, or now turning to give me his hand to help me up a steep place, or even a large rock or around a bad angle. For a time we had heard the roar of the torrent as it boiled below us, but as we ascended it had gradually hushed, and we at length were in a region of profound silence. The night was cloudy, and as dark as ever in midsummer in that far northern latitude; but I knew that we were climbing along the edge of a precipice, on a narrow ledge of rock along the face of the cliff. The vast black wall above us rose sheer up, and I could feel rather than see that it was a sheer down, though my sight could not penetrate the darkness which filled the deep space below. We had been ascending about three hours when suddenly my guide stopped, and winding his rope from his waist, held it out to me. I obeyed his silent gesture, and binding it around my body gave him the end. He wrapped it about him, and then I hear the bang the arm, as if I had been a child, he led his way along the narrow ledge and around the face of the wall, step by step, telling me where to place my feet, and waiting until they were firmly planted. I began now to understand what we were about, "over the mountain" in the day. We were on a path of nearly 2,000 feet high. If it had not been for the strong firm hold on my arm, I could not have stood it. As it was I dared not think. Suddenly we turned a sharp angle, and found ourselves in a curious semicircular place, where the path was lost. Right, deep in the concave, as if a great place had been gouged out of the mountain by the glacier which must once be there. "This is a curious place," I ventured to say. "It is," said my guide. "It is the Devil's Seat. Many have died here." His tone was almost fierce. I accepted the rebuke in silence. We passed the singular spot, and once more was on the ledge, but it was not so narrow as it had been the other side of the Devil's Seat, and in 15 minutes we had crossed the summit, and the path widened a little and began to descend.—Scribner.

Advertisement Literature.

Not long ago a man stood absorbed in thought at the counter of a newspaper office, and was writing something on a scrap of paper, and as a friend passed him he caught at him as a drowning man catches at a straw.

"Give me a word," he exclaimed.

"Certainly," replied his friend. "What kind of a word?"

"Oh, anything you can think of. It doesn't matter."

"How would collaborate do?"

"Couldn't be better. Thanks, ever so much," and he wrote it down, and handed in the advertisement.

The next morning the friend read—"Sanitas powder sold on collaborated terms to parties desirous of going to collaborated Queensland."

A Norwegian paper gravely announces in its advertising columns:—

"To rent.—An elegant room furnished room to gentleman already heated."

Among the weirdly advertising notices are the following—

"Two young women want washing." "Perfect effected with young."

A cheerful advertisment is this:—

"Try our coffins; you will never use any other."

How the Difficulty Was Mat.

A good story is told of Judge Kent, the well-known American jurist. A man was indicted for burglary, and the evidence on the trial showed that his burglary consisted in cutting a hole through a pane of glass, after the windows were sleeping, and then projecting his hand and arm through the hole to open the shutter and remove the glass.

It was claimed by his counsel that, inasmuch as he never actually entered into the tent with his whole body, he had not committed the offense charged, and must therefore be discharged.

Judge Kent, in reply to this plea, told the jury that, if they were not convinced that the whole man was involved in the crime, they might bring in a verdict of guilty against so much of the man as was involved.

The jury, after a brief consultation, found that the man was guilty of burglary, and the head of the prisoner guilty of the offence of burglary.

The judge sentenced the right arm, the right shoulder, and head to imprisonment with hard labor in the State prison for two years, remarking that, as to the rest of the man's body, he might do with it what he pleased.

Needed in the Family.

"You say you want my daughter," said the proprietor of a country newspaper to a young man who was sitting nervously on the edge of a chair, and wiping his fevered brow with a trembling handkerchief.

"Y—yes, sir."

"Have you spoken to her on this matter?"

"She—she referred me to you, sir."

"Is your affection for her deep and sincere?"

"Sincere!" gasped the young man. "I pledge you my word I haven't slept a wink nor eaten a mouthful for six weeks for thinking of her, sir!"

"George," said the father, after looking him a moment reflectively, "I think you may come into my family. I need a young man of your caliber to wrestle with the circulation of the paper."

A Girl's Reason for Wrecking a Train.

It is reported from Nancy that a girl in charge of some poultry at Chambley lately placed two large stones on the railway line. The engine driver of a tram which was proceeding in the direction of Nancy felt a severe shock on entering the station near St. Julien, and was afraid that the carriages would go off the line. The gendarmes afterwards made an investigation, found the stones and the girl, who confessed to placing the rails. When asked why she thus jeopardized the lives of hundreds of people, she replied coolly that she wanted to bring about a railroad accident so that she might obtain some of the fine hats and dresses worn by ladies who might be killed or injured by the train action. She was then sent to a reformatory.—Tit Bits.

Young Wife: "His teeth, dear."

Young Husband: "Oh, if that's all, I'll run for a dentist and have them pulled out."

THE FARMER'S CORNER.

VALUABLE FACTS AND HINTS FOR THE AGRICULTURALIST.

Village Farming—Hedge Fences—Cross-bred Fowls—Weaning Colts—Fencing Pumpkins to Hogs.

Village Farming.

Mr. John W. Bookwalter owns 60, 000 acres of land in Nebraska, and he proposes to undertake the establishment of modern Utopian villages in it. The plan consists of a colonization of the farmers in a village that he will build, and that will contain schools, churches, stores, an entertainment, libraries, etc. He thinks the present farm life is one of privation, and he expects to furnish his farmer colonists with all the advantages of the towns. The practical farmer can see many obstacles in the way of a successful working of this plant. It is, of course, a large scale adaptation of the European farming village, but the conditions in America, especially in the West, are not favorable to it.

The American farmer, on relatively cheap land, and raising low-priced products, must work with machinery, and time till the soil over a large area. Under circumstances very few could have farms near enough to a village to permit of their making homes in it. Western farming is, and of necessity must be, largely an extensive scale that will not permit of a concentration of the people. In a country where land is high-priced the demand for its products is great, and a tendency exists to intensive farming, and furnishing more opportunity for labor than 50 times its extent in our Western States. As regards grain farming, will permit village farming, but we predict a failure for the present in our country.

Hedge Fences.

Osage orange hedge fences are undesirable. The weight of testimony is against them, but for every such one there are five who are digging them out. For the first 10 years the prospect for a good fence is bright. It continues to thicken, and when well kept is not too high to be easily trimmed. This is the case when the trimming has been done three or four times a year. But the stubs are left an inch or two too longer at every trimming, and in time the old wood must be cut down a foot or two, and this is an unsightly piece of work. The trimming must be done each time just before the thorns harden, no matter how much other work presses. A little delay makes serious trouble. But all this could be endured if the hedge made a trustworthy fence. It gives fine promise, but comes after the first, a condition of trustworthiness hog holes and breaks begin to appear in it. It requires constant attention. Many of the farmers who have ceased to trim them till seven feet high, the appearance of their farms. Other kinds of fences are more satisfactory every way.

Cross-Bred Fowls.

The poultry-Keeper says: "The fact that the cross-bred birds lay by soft-shelled eggs is conclusive evidence that they are over-fat. It shows also that cross-bred birds are more liable to take on fat than the pure breeds, and that they are not profitable. It is evidence that they require less food, and that they have partially been changed from being prolific layers to meat producers. It is not profitable to take on fat by cross-bred birds is the cause of persistent setters, and we are confirmed by every experiment in egg production that we undertake. Why are hens for eggs are making a mistake in crossing their flocks as much as is common. When asked why they introduced it should be from the same breed. All this may be usually true, but there are exceptions to every rule that are great egg producers.

Authorities agree that the variation in the color of the yolk of eggs is due neither to the breed of the hens nor to the food, but to the coloring matter of the food consumed. The richness of the yolk depends on the amount of color noted does not qualify any more than the annatto used to color butter indicates that it was made in winter. A drouth or late in the season, when plants lose their bright color, eggs have paler yolks in consequence. hens give plenty of color to their eggs.

Feeding Pumpkins to Hogs.

The National Stockman says: "The farmer who is so fortunate as to have a good supply of pumpkins has a valuable feed on hand. They are a ration for his fattening hogs. It is claimed by some that hogs will fatten on them as their only food. We would not go to this extreme, however, so far as to undertake to fit a lot of hogs for market with them. We would feed as many each day as the hogs would eat up clean and then give them all the corn they could consume besides. Young hogs with a ration of pumpkins each day will stand a much longer feeding of corn than they would if fed corn alone. It is a wasteful way of feeding, to throw out enough corn to pumpkins at one time, but the last the hogs two or three days. Their food should be given the corn sweet and clean at least twice a day."

Another plan of feeding pumpkins to hogs that has been found to produce excellent results, is to begin early in the fall, when the fattening hogs are in the pasture lot; give them all they can eat as long as the supply lasts, then begin with the corn.

Pumpkins alone will fatten hogs quite rapidly, but the pork from such will be soft and of inferior quality. It needs a finishing with corn to make it firm and solid.

Pumpkins are cheaper than corn besides being a specially health-giving food, hence the fat and lean of pork in the beginning is more economically produced and the profits proportionately increased.

Usefulness of a Trotting Horse.

A San Francisco paper informs its readers that a trotting horse is very useful outside the track, and asserts that "on the vast wheat farms of California he does the work of a mule, plowing, harrowing and hauling heavy loads;" while in the cities "he pulls butcher carts and vegetable wagons, hoodies, carriages, omnibuses and express wagons." Possibly the trotting horse can do the "work of a mule," He may be able to draw the plow and to haul heavy loads, and draw omnibuses and express wagons, but it is safe to believe that the lines can be spread far enough to include an animal that will also be adapted to performing general farm work or draw heavy loads over the city pavements.

Feeding Cows.

Mississippi farmer informs the editor of one of the newspapers in that State that he is selling twenty-five pounds of butter per week which he obtains from four Jersey cows, "with little help." This seems to be well satisfied. Probably he obtains a good return for all his expenditures. But it is strange that in these days of dear feeding, with the well known results, this man, or any other, should be willing to keep Jersey cows on short rations. If anything in the line of dairying has been fully demonstrated it is the fact that the rate of production of a good dairy cow is very closely regulated by the quanity and quality of the food which she consumes. It is not profitable to attempt a great amount of heat from a stove with a very small quantity of fuel as it is to attempt to get large returns from a cow while giving her but little to eat. No one can be good the cow may be also can not, for any length of time, give large quantities of rich milk without a liberal supply of nutritious food.

French Way of Fattening Fowls.

The writer has often been asked about the French method of fattening birds in the forced fattening process which is in vogue somewhat in the east and might be worked just as profitably here. The process requires care and is simple enough. There is an ingrament consisting of a rod, a piston rod and a trough with a hollow tube attached. The fowl that is to be fed is held by the operator, the tube is inserted in the bird's throat and he turns the treadle with his foot. By this rapid movement the feeder is not in motion, and gently a mass of food is forced down the gullet into the bird. All the time this cramming operation is going on the fowls are kept in pens with no other food or "nothing or drink" is given them. They wax fat on the treatment. By this process the flesh of the fowl can be flavored to any taste a customer desires, and it becomes as soft and sweet as a capon's. The result is more than anything else like the poularde of the French markets.—Boston and Farm.

Weaning Colts.

For weaning colts provide a good box stall large enough for a number to be weaned. Feed them in it for a week or more, so they will get used to it. See that their mangers and feed boxes are in order before commencing, and provide a good vessel to hold water for the colts. Put in a couple of two or three gallons per head each night. A large iron kettle is the most used good service in my barn. Cleanse the vessel once in every 24 hours, and in order that the water feed and clean. Having lived mostly on liquid food for five months, then turning suddenly to solid, the youngsters need something to moisten it. By having water within their reach they will drink little and often, which will do them more good than larger quantity at long intervals. Be careful in turning in his stall from four in the even until seven the next morning, or 15 hours, is too long to have them do well.—Exchange.

Straw.

Farmers have been slow to learn that they cannot afford to burn straw. It is not wanted for feed it should be rotted and returned to the soil. Its analysis shows it to have a high manurial value, as it contains much carbon that is not valued as a manure, but herein may we to let astray by the tables and theory. Its practical effect on soil adds largely to indicted to pack a great. It lightens and warms up the soil, and lets the air in to feed the roots. It is also absorbent, and should be used freely in the stable, when not needed for bed. Return all straw to the soil either in form of animal manure or in its usual form after rotting.

Cleanliness in the Dairy

A creamery man writes: "The churn, butter worker and all utensils that come in contract with the butter should be washed first with hot water and soap—and good soap, too, not common three-cents-a-bar rosin soap; this will take off all butter or grease, but will not thoroughly cleanse the utensil oh account of the oil or fatty substance in the soap itself, and to over come this rinse with boiling water. Cold water should not be used, as it will cause a very small portion of the soap which has been retained in the seams to harden and remain on the utensil."

Valuable Hints.

In preparing poultry for market dress as nicely as possible.

Most of the poultry sold is well picked, and such is generally preferred.

Don't permit the water from the manure to drain under your poultry house; if you do you will be sure to have fowl cholera, and any kind is not tolerated with a healthy flock of fowls.

Select the warmest place in the colonies where the drainage is good—on the south side of a hill if you have such a thing, and plant your grapes there.

Did you ever think that a weed was something of a blessing to some people? It is. It compels them to do some work that they would do but for weeds, cultivate the crop.

Raw meat in moderation, chopped fine and fed about thrice a week will reduce mortality among the young. Of meat is sufficient for 15 hens. Some cook it, but raw meat is better by far.

For any one wanting a white fowl of excellent laying qualities the white Minorca will be sure to please. Like all the Mediterranean breeds, they are crate admirers and the qualities of each are more or less distinct.

The man who believes—and acts on his belief—that chickens must have shade in the pastures so that they wont loose anything from eating by laying in shade should, to carry out his idea, lay shrubended in the bot sun.

For scalding poultry, the water should, be as near the boiling as possible, without actually boiling; the bird, being held by the head and legs, should be immersed and lifted up and down no water three times; this makes picking easy.

Substitute for Black Walnut.

Black walnut, formerly so extensively used in the manufacture of furniture, is said to be growing exceedingly scarce in Florida. It may not be generally known, but is nevertheless true, that the Florida orange, long and justly celebrated throughout the Southern States, and especially in Florida, is an excellent substitute for black walnut. It can be stained so that an expert could hardly detect the difference between the two woods. If properly seasoned and introduced into the furniture manufactories of the country, the value of the black gum would become known and a new and profitable industry could be developed, adding greatly to the wealth of the state.—Farmedina Mirror.

PROGRESS — CIVILIZATION.

It was a lovely bit of country, too far from the city to be called a suburb, and near enough to allow one to reach the business thoroughfare without too long a journey.

The land was high and rolling, the hillsides covered with luxuriant growths of white oaks, tulip and poplar trees, the latter showing shattering boxes and farms in their leafy nooks.

In one of these leafy valleys, a nine-sided cottage, lived two people, a man and a woman, who, although ignored by the world and ignorant of it, enjoyed in their little corner the happiness of the golden age. John and Jennie were Quakers. They lived on the little farm because John's father had lived there, and he himself had been born there, and Jennie not very far from it.

They were quite well off, and when John died they had no ignorants of the world I erred, because besides their little farming, they had a small "institute," and which, of course, was the dearest object of their affections, they had another interest in the world—the foundation of an orphanage, undertaken by a society of Friends, and although John had already given hundreds and thousands, he was still ready and willing to open his purse and help to carry on the good work.

The quiet and contented life of John and Jennie was somewhat disturbed by the building of an electric railway which was to pass through their farm and quite near their house.

They were very much distressed at the news, but John's wife was more than forty-five, and who had never thought of fighting anybody in this world, made up his mind to let the railroad people have their way and build their road where they wanted of his land; but he took care to make them pay a good price for it.

The road was built and the cars began to run. From John's cottage they could hear the rumbling of the wheels as they glided on the rails along the garden. At first John and Jennie used to look at the cars with their glittering red paint. They were a little afraid of them, but it was not hate it because they could not hate anything; but still, "solitude" was not anything else like the pendants of the French markets.—Fashion and Farm.

PREVENTION OF PHTISIS.

Neglect of Small Precautions Causes Its Spread.

Professor Tyndall has a paper on "The origin, propagation, and prevention of phthisis," in the Fortnightly. In these considerately the preventability of the fell disease, consumption and how neglect of a simple precaution causes it to spread. He quotes from Dr. Cornet the following summary on the subject: "It is universally recognized that tuberculosis is caused by tubercle bacilli, which reach the lungs through the inhalation of air in which the bacilli are diffused. They come almost exclusively from the moist sputum of consumptive persons. The moist sputum, as it dries, enters into the breath of the consumptive patient, is for this mode of infection, without danger. If we can prevent the drying of the expectorated matter, we prevent in the same degree the possibility of infection. It is not, however, sufficient to allow for the ultimate disposal of the patient. The strictest surveillance must be exercised by both physicians and attendants to enforce the proper use of the spittoon, and to prevent the reckless disposal of the infective phlegm. Spittings on the floor or in pocket-handkerchiefs is the main source of peril. Physicians must insist on attending to the precautions laid down in the hospital ought to be posted up in every sick room, while all wilful infringment of the rules ought to be sternly punished. Thus may the terrible mortality of consumption be very diminished, if not abolished; the wards of hospitals may become places of refuge as salubrious as those surgical wards in which no bacilli could be found.

THEY HAD THEIR USES.

Consider the Ants and See What They Can Do.

During twelve months spent in the Australian bush in the year 1870-71 I took more opportunities than were pleasant for studying the habits of ants. These insects, as is well known, are more or less found in almost an absolute pest in hot countries. They march in myriads and destroy everything in their road. I have heard it seriously stated that they consume everything but bottled beer, and even this is safe only when the bottles are fitted with glass screw stoppers' Corn, it seems, is not excluded from the formic bill of fare, and would no doubt be most acceptable and appetizing when soaked in Bass or Allsopp.

In justice to the ant, I am bound, however, to state that they are often most useful in more ways than one. For instance, I bought an opossum rug from a native. I soon became aware that it literally swarmed with fleas and determined to train my dog I exhaust my stock of pepper. Even turpentine seemed to have no effect to speak of. Then arrived one of those irritating settlers. At last in despair I had the rug spread out on a hill. In less than half an hour every flea and objectionable parasite was carried off by the ants, and I got it home quite clean and refreshed.

Again, I had killed a snake in Tasmania, and wished to clean and bleach the skeleton. This I proposed to have mounted as a necklace. I left the body inside the skin, and after four hours there was not a vestige of flesh on the bones. The sun soon did the rest.—Chambers's Journal.

Not to Be Executed.

If the federal government desires to stamp out the lottery evil, there will be little opposition to that end in the south or the press, but if it gives irresponsible underlings the power to execute the law, as when it exercises its right to dictate the press, the result will be not only a gross insult, but indignation and trouble all along the line.

Just now the papers are having a good deal to say about the arrest of a Wisconsin editor because he published a clipping from the exchange column of a Louisiana paper advertising lottery law. If the arrest was made for printing lottery news in the state, then it is mildly to say that our government has become tyrannical when the liberty of the press is concerned.

This policy will not work. If lotteries cannot be destroyed without also destroying the liberty of the press, the country will be in favor of letting the lotteries alone. We cannot afford to give up our right to speak and publish fair criticism of public measures. If the arrest in this one instance, we may expects to be forced to keep silence whenever it suits the government to demand it.

Fortunately the whole matter is bulldozing the newspapers of America. The instance of this arrest will only serve to intimidate very few. No matter what federal officials may do, the newspapers all over the country will not change their convictions that the people have the right to control of the provisions contained in the anti-lottery law, even with any show of violence, be held to be a violation of that law. If the people think that it is getting that law will have to be repealed or modified. In this respect the government should not attempt to coerce public opinion. Any such attempt will only react with disastrous consequences.—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

What card does a girl with several lovers receive? The queen of hearts.

I remember when Mrs. Lucindyne Linsmart, a lady who had won, "when I was a boy," Sarah Bernhardt.

USED THEM IN HIS BLOW-GUN.

Doctor—"Well, my fine little fellow, you have been taking the pills I left for you? Are sure the pills I left for you would cure you. How did you take them, in water or in cake?"

Boy—"Oh, I used them in my blowgun."

The little fellow put the pastry, pills and all, in his mouth and blew them out. At most, all his internal economy needed was a dose of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They are tiny, sugar-coated granules, but they are a perfect cathartic, aperient, or actively cathartic, according to size or dose. As a laxative, only one is required.

The "Pellets" cure Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Costiveness, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

The "Pellets" are purely vegetable, and operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are the cheapest pill, sold by druggists, because they are guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or their price ($5 cents a vial) is refunded. Can you ask more?

If it gives us pleasure to refer to the advertisements of Dr. H. H. Warner, which appear in our columns. For over twenty-five years Dr. Warner's Safe Cure has been before the public, and each succeeding year their valuable properties become better appreciated. They now stand second to none for the relief of that much abused and overtaxed organ, the liver, and for the removal of that cause of so many ills, constipation. They are used in every civilized country, and carry with them unlimited testimonials of their safety and efficacy. Tutt's Liver Pills should have a place in every household.

Nothing to speak of—your neighbors' affairs.

Impish Freaks.

Are those of a disordered liver. But when that organ is thoroughly disciplined with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the ills is adequately secreted, diverted from the blood into its proper channel, digestion grows active, the skin and eyeballs lose their biliousness, pain in the vicinity of the liver ceases, sick headache and nausea depart. The Bitters is an incomparable preventive of malaria, rheumatism and kidney complaints.

The receipts of the society for the past year were nearly $700, and the expenditures nearly $500, leaving a balance of about $200 in the treasury. A Horse on Havill.

Last week's Royalton Banner says: "O. H. Havill was somewhat surprised when his returned house from Minneapolis last Monday evening to find the band waiting for him and also Boyd's best team hitched to a canopy top carriage. As he stepped off the train friends shook his hand and wished him much joy, and before he had time to resist he was ushered to the buggy, helped in and driven to the bank, the band playing the while. He wanted to know what all this demonstration signified. Then he was told that a dispatch with his name attached had been received by W. L. McGonagle on Thursday telling of his marriage and asking Mac to set up the cigars to the boys. Havill says he never sent any such dispatch, and that he is not married. Someone has perpetrated a huge joke. But joke or no joke O. H. led the procession and did the square thing by the boys."

The Tie That Binds.

Mr. J. E. Edwards and Miss Lillie Priest were united in the holy bonds of matrimony at the residence of the bride's parents in Southeast Brainerd, on Thursday evening, Oct. 29th, Rev. W. M. Wright, of the M. E. church, officiating. The wedding was a quiet affair, only a few of the more intimate friends of the contracting parties being present. Both the bride and the groom are well know in the city, having resided here for several years. The groom, an employee at the N. P. shops, is a young man of sterling qualities, and a general favorite among his acquaintances. The bride, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Priest, is a young lady of many accomplishments and a great favorite in the social circles of that portion of the city. The DISPATCH and their many friends wish them unalloyed happiness in their new relation.

The father and brother of the groom from Mandan, and an uncle of the bride, from Motley, were in attendance at the wedding.

A Former Brainerdite Married.

The following from the Ft. Madison Plain Dealer, is an account of the marriage of Charles Taylor, formerly of this city, and Miss Winona Crepes, an estimable young lady of Ft. Madison:

The home of Reuben Crepes, 906 Fifth street, last evening was filled with happy hearts, and with smiling faces and lovely flowers the scene was a beautiful one. But prettiest of all was the ceremony performed by Rev. Dr. Geo. D. Stewart, which united the destinies of Mr. Charles Taylor, of Chicago, and Miss Winona Appleton, a granddaughter of Mr. Crepes. Congratulations followed, and hearty ones they were after which a sumptuous wedding feast was served. The wedding march—Mendelssohn's—was performed in a splendid manner by Miss Lena Becker. The bride was lovely in a brown camel hair traveling dress. She is a lady of refinement and who will in her future home win a large friendship as she has here. Her acquaintances can but think that Mr. Taylor has won a gem, one who will make his life happy. The groom is a young man well and favorably known here, where he has not long since resided. He holds a lucrative position as clerk in the office of his father, A. E. Taylor, general roadmaster of the Santa Fe, with office in Chicago. The happy couple departed at 9:30 for the east. After the 8th inst., they will be at home at 141 Garfield Boulevard, Chicago. Shortly before their departure they were given an enjoyable serenade by the mandolin orchestra.

The Wilson Theatre Company.

Another crowded house greeted the Wilson Theatre Company in the production of the White Slave, a realistic drama illustrating Southern life in slavery days, at the Princess last night. The drama is very similar to Uncle Tom's Cabin, and to judge by the enthusiastic applause rendered by the audience it was certainly a success. Little Dot Farley in her dances received well deserved encores. Miss Pearl Hight, in her song and dance, and Mr. Ed. O'Connor, in his song "He stood on the bridge," merited the encores they received. To-night "Silver Spur" will hold the boards; tomorrow, "Only a Farmer's Daughter" for the matinee, and "Noble Outcast" will close the engagement on Saturday night.—Manitoba Free Press, Friday Oct. 2, 1891.

The above named popular company will be here all of next week. Prices 10c., 20c. and 30c. On Sunday evening the "Galley Slave" will be played.

THE GROWTH OF HYPNOTISM.

Found Under Different Names at All Periods of Human History.

The history of hypnotism, says Dr. Luys in the Fortnightly Review, forms part of the history of the marvelous in human existence. Any one may satisfy himself by reading special books on this subject. The scope of this article does not allow me to lay any further stress upon it. In reality, hypnotism is found under different names at all periods of history, from the incantations of the ancient Egyptian magicians down to the fascinations of Mesmer and the investigations of Braid. These two persons began to separate the wheat from the chaff, and went so far as to show what was real and truly scientific in that series of fanciful practices, bordering on witchcraft, which, under the most varied aspects, have many believers in the credulous who are always prone to swallow marvels.

Modern hypnotism owes its name and appearance in the realm of science to the investigations made by Braid. He is in true creator; he made it what it is, and, above all, he gave emphasis to the experimental truth by means of which he proved that, when hypnotic phenomena are called into play, they are wholly independent of any supposed influence of the hypnotist upon the hypnotized, and that the hypnotized person simply reacts upon himself by reason of latent capacities in him which are artificially developed.

Braid demonstrated that in this series of remarkable phenomena hypnotism, acting upon a human subject as upon a fellow field, merely set in motion a string of silent faculties which only needed its assistance to reach their development. Here we obviously have a new idea and a phenomena of the first importance which constitutes one of the most interesting sexions of the question.

In this field of new research Braid had further opportunity of evincing his clear sightedness in many other particulars, and it may be said of him the outset he foresaw the different stages of hypnotism just as they have been since defined in France. He perceived their different manifestations and he thus laid the first foundation of the structure which has been so fortunately developed by workers in different countries, and which for the future constitutes an entirely new chapter in general neurology.

"Hypnotism," says Braid, "does not comprise only one condition; it is rather a series of different points, capable of infinite variety, extending from the lightest dreams in which the natural functions are unessified, to the profoundest state of coma, from which the conscience and the will are completely absent." In another place he speaks with more detail about hypnotic coma. We are right, therefore, in saying that he foresaw and described the different phases of hypnot-o phenomena, both the lethargy, which he calls coma and the state of catalepsy and somnambulism, which he described in very clear language.

Six Potatoes to a Load.

I was amused a few days since in watching a company of laborers at work digging potatoes in a field in a valley of the Rimac, writes a traveler from Peru in the Philadelphia Call. A man was seen plowed up the hills with a light plow, leaving the tubers exposed on the ground. Six Indian women picked up the potatoes and carried them to a pile in one corner of the field, while the overseer, a Spaniard, stood in majestic and dignified idleness watching the work. The men who were picking up the potatoes had neither pail, bag nor box in which to carry them. Two of them put the potatoes in their hats and the others carried them in their hands, each one going from every part of the field to the piles in one corner, carrying five or six potatoes each trip. Here were eight men and a team of oxen engaged in doing work which in America would be done by one man and a boy.

Any person who feels like despairing, because the world has not gone well with him, should try first of all to figure out to what extent the world is to blame for his failure, and to what extent he himself is to blame. If he has not fitted himself for success, it is his own fault that success has not come to him.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

MONTREAL COLLEGE, Montreal, Quebec, March 4, 1885.—This is to certify that I have examined the formula and prescribed Dr. Ludden's Periodical Pills, of Paris, France. I have considered that if these pills were taken as directed, they would prove a blessing in medicine that would do it, as a fill grain sugar-coated pill, containing all the well known harmless drugs that act upon the generative system. I know them to be positively harmless and safe for all kinds of purposes on any case. I have used them in my practice for the last four years, and find them to be most reliable. (Signed) Yours, H. L. LAUDEN, M. D. Sold by druggists. Price $2 per box. American Pill Co., Boyaird, Proprietors. Sent by mail on receipt of price. These pills may be obtained of S. MCFADDEN, Brainerd, Minn.
