Our Degenerate Little Tree

The whole history of the organism seems testimony to the marvellous persistence of parts in spite of countless daily tasks. Take, for example, the present position of the little tree. We know not the conditions of its birth in historic man, and have but little information as to its vitalizing average tribes at the present day, but we know that in civilized people, whose feet are from infancy subjected to conditions of restraint, it is an imperfect organ.

CLIMBING A TREE.

The ingenious manner this tree is performed by a Native Australian. A black native uses his knees when climbing. If the tree is small in girth he sometimes uses a vine, passing it around the tree and holding onto it as he ascends. The most common way, however, is to ascend by means of notches into the tree or back about one and a half inches deep and about three feet apart. Having fixed upon these ledges ascending, the climber cuts a notch like his stone tomahawk about the weight of his hand, and then he is ready to ascend. A black native uses his knees when climbing. A Generous Man.

"Harkins," said old Mr. Barlow to the foreman, "the firm has decided to discontinue a system of profit sharing with its employees."

"Good enough," replied Harkins with a shrug.

"What were the firm's profits last year?"

"Last year the firm net $7,000."

"How much of that was yours?"

"I received $1,000."

Superior Experience.

The imaginary invalid, who fancies he has had all the diseases in the book, is the most common of all. He is not often an amusing person to a physician, but not and then a valuable one. He is usually a man of a good deal of diversion. A man of good will, who had been a graduate in the medical school, had made a practice of changing his physicians on the slightest pretext. He had a long nose called in a young physician, who had gained considerable reputation.

AFFAIRS OF STATE.

COV. NELSON'S INAUGURAL SPEECH.

A Message to the Legislature Which Emphasizes a Course and Master-Plan for the State.

Gov. Nelson took the oath of office in the presence of a large gathering of friends and well-wishers. His inaugural address was a message to the legislature, emphasizing a course and master-plan for the state. He spoke of the state's progress and the challenges it faced, and outlined his vision for the future. He called for unity and cooperation among all citizens, and for a commitment to the principles of justice and equality. He also mentioned the state's economic situation and the need for reform. His speech was well-received and set the tone for his administration.

State Institutions.

The state's educational institutions are facing challenges. The legislature is considering measures to improve funding and support for these institutions. There is a focus on increasing enrollment and improving the quality of education. The state is also looking at ways to make higher education more accessible to all citizens. The governor has expressed his support for these efforts and has called for continued investment in the state's human capital.
