At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world were placed side by side for trial in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronz medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated M. Schmit, Wheeler & Wilson manager of the Legion of Honor of France.

Another week gone bye and no St. Cloud land officials appointed by the democratic party. How tiresome this biding is getting to be to the pap suckers.

The reassessment of Itasca county by Senator Dalton has raised the valuation of forty-seven townships $3,215,155 at an expense to the state of $6,493.

Cook county spent $200,000 in convicting Pendergast, the murderer of Carter Harrison and if it had cost twice that amount it would have been money well invested.

Finally Congressman Baldwin has decided how to vote, and although he has received protests from the Duluth board of trade and stock exchange he will support the Wilson bill.

The insanity case of Editor Hoskins, of the Alliance Advocate, has attracted wide spread attention. There is no doubt but that Hoskins is mentally deranged but whether permanently or not time will tell. He certainly was a dangerous individual to be in charge of a newspaper, both to himself and the community in which he lived.

State politics are beginning to simmer and the conventions of the republican league clubs will be held in Minneapolis early in February. It is a trifle early for candidates but none too early to begin an effective organization for securing purposes. With good management Minnesota will roll up a republican majority the coming fall that will pass the high water mark.

"What do the people think now of the democratic administration which was to bring prosperity to the country and which wages and constant employment to the workers," is the pertinent question which senator C. K. Davis asks one of our citizens in a private letter this week. The people, Senator, are decidedly "agin" the administration by a very large majority.

The Dispatch for ten years past has been the official paper of the county and at the annual meeting of the board of county commissioners on Tuesday was awarded the contract for 1894, the same as in previous years. People who desire to keep posted on county matters can see the advisability of subscribing for the paper in which the official proceedings of the board appear, as well as the delinquent tax list and financial statement.

A Cass county correspondent of the Staples World says a meeting has been called for the 13th inst. to fix up the organization of that county and that an outside gentleman who has offered to be the "big pusher" to go to St. Paul and engineer the matter will be there. The correspondent adds: "While we are anxious for organization as any one we do not feel inclined to stand idly by and see a whole crew of strangers placed in our county offices as it might result disastrously."

The no-license prohibitionists of Haverhill, Mass., according to reports, have adopted a novel method of driving out the numerous saloons in that city. After May 1 they will open a big saloon and make a cut in "wet" goods. Whisky will be 3 cents a drink and beer 2 cents a glass. The no-license people hope to do all the business, as there will be no profit in it. The license fee of $2,000 and money for the future good stock will be raised by subscription. Thirteen hundred dollars have already been pledged for the purpose. The law limits the number of liquor stores at Haverhill to twenty-seven, which must supply a population, including suburbs, of 75,000. This created a most profitable monopoly for aldermanic favorites, and the no-license element have repeatedly failed to knock them out in the elections.

IDEAS ABOUT BALLOONS.

A Suggestion That Aerial Machines Should Be Made In Triplicate.

Man exploits himself within a very narrow range of altitude. He is never much below the ocean level and not much above it. He hangs the surface, and much of this is too high for his comfort.

As regards the atmospheric ocean, we live at its bottom, and as the floor of this aerial ocean—namely, the dry land, surface—is much interrupted by protruding objects, variations of surface, etc., we get an impression of atmospheric phenomena at variance with what would be manifest higher up.

The surface of a deep, rapid running river is generally placid, while at its bottom may be sharp eddies and swirls, up and down currents, as bottom varies, all of which make but little impression on the surface.

This ocean of atmosphere is in almost continual shifting as the warmer regions of expansion, and the colder areas of condensation, and the areas of varying pressure all intermingle, seeking equilibrium which is ever again disturbed.

It is therefore of necessity to know more than we now know of the character of the upper atmosphere, and to learn this it is necessary to ascend up into it. This must be studied away from the surface influences, and only when many observations have been taken, made from many different points, in all seasons, and the results are carefully compared, may we understand what may be hoped for as to navigating this ocean, what part air currents play in the aerial economy and how and whether we can utilize the knowledge in any way to our advantage.

At the present time there is nothing in which to make these observations but to go up by the old balloon method, on which there has been scarcely any improvement since the days of the Montgolfiers, two centuries ago.

What is now in order is to devise a construction that shall reach the highest maximum of safety and to the lowest point minimum of danger. To those who are interested in aerial matters and contemplate structures, which is to make high and prolonged journeys, the writer respectfully directs attention to the idea of having one or more smaller balloons inside the outer one.

Let us conceive of the triplicate balloon. The first is the outer, the safety shell. The second is smaller and inside of No. 1. The third is the main reliance and inside of the second. The intervening spaces are also charged. The leakage is much less. The entire outfit cannot be so jeopardized in case of accident.

The outer saves the second; both save the innermost. This is the mainstay, and as the inside is the safest as the inside pressure there is neither strain nor a particle of leakage. A small outside captive might still be held in tow for experiments.

With plenty of ballast, fluids and provisions, a two months' continuous journey might be made and, currents favoring, the circumnavigation of the globe might be accomplished.

The grand possibilities in polar and all other geographical knowledge in thus getting bird'seye views of the earth and photographing them are simply such as to stagger the imagination. Even if the inner structures were not within each other, and only inside of the outer one, any one can see that the safety line is much higher.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A "Beauty Parlor" Sylphide.

A west end lady was recently caught for $500 by a scheme which has been worked in all the large cities. She was induced to buy out a beauty parlor, as it is called—a place for the sale of cosmetics and all articles which will enhance the charms of the complexion—and which was alleged to have a good trade and plenty of stock on hand. An inventory showed that she had invested principally in empty boxes, but still the good will might be worth something. When former patrons came around and threatened suits for damaged complexions, she was glad to remove and escape with her life. It is said that this scheme is worked every day in the year on innocent purchasers in Chicago.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Oratory In England.

Oratory is no doubt a tradition of the house of commons. What are we to say about it? In America you seem still to love talk for its own sake. I was told that in the States grown men and women really enjoy sitting still and being talked to in a lead voice. You love to hear the rolling sentence and the lofty and familiar sentiment. We don't. It cannot be denied that a few common juries dislike what a few decades ago would have been considered very passable eloquence. Nobody growing upon us, this dislike of being talked to in a lofty vein —or indeed in any vein.—Scribner's.

New Pneumatic Tire.

A new pneumatic tire brought out in England, which is described as a really good thing, has a tread of prepared cotton wool covered with soft cloth, which is inserted between the cover and the air chamber, rendering it almost impossible to puncture it even with a sharpawl. The weight of this pad is 10 ounces, and the cost is trifling.—Hardware.

The Toughness Accounted For.

The other day a gentleman entered a certain restaurant in Regent street and ordered a chicken. The waiting was evidently tough, for when the waiter came in he beheld the gentleman in a passion and the bird whole.

"Waiter," he said, "this chicken is very tough."

"Very sorry, sir, but, you see, that chicken always was a peculiar bird. Why, when we came to kill it, we couldn't catch it, so at last we had to shoot it. It flew on the homestop and."

"Ah, by Jove, that accounts for it. You must have shot the weathercock by mistake!"—London Tit-Bits.

Crimes of Hygiene.

Who first wore a cutaway, shabbelled coat? A broker. Who first startled an amazed, long eared Academy of Music audience with an ulster? A broker. Who first sprung a dog collar on his club? A broker. From fob chains to pointed shoes, every article of fancy wear was first introduced by a member of the board of brokers.—Jay Howard.

CHANGING QUICKSANDS.

An Expedient For Overcoming the Difficulties In Sinking Shafts.

One of the most ingenious expedients for overcoming the difficulties of sinking shafts for mining or for other purposes in wet "measures" is the "freezing process." Supposing that the bottom of a shaft is to be continuously flooded that the miners are unable to use their picks or in any way proceed with their excavation, pipes are run down from the surface to the flooded locality and through these pipes is forced a powerful freezing mixture.

The consequence is that the impending water becomes solidified, and the workman can quarry his way through the ice which now becomes a protection from the body of water beyond, and the sinking of the shaft can be continued. A process somewhat akin to this is the new method of forcing up quicksands, etc., or Neukirch.

Where quicksands or damp and unstable strata are encountered, powdered cement is forced in by air pressure through a pipe lowered in the sand. The pipe is about 1¼ inches in diameter, but is drawn to a point at its lower end, where there are three openings, each three-eighths of an inch in diameter. The upper end of the pipe is connected to an air pressure supply by a rubber hose.

An injector is provided, to which the cement is fed, and meeting with the air blast is driven with considerable pressure into the sand. The cement is retained by the wet sand, forming a kind of concrete with it. The introduction of the tube is facilitated by the use of the air jet, which clears the sand away from the point of the tube. When the pipe has reached a firm stratum, the cement is turned on and the pipe slowly raised to the surface.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Short Lived Triumph.

There is a man in Boston who is far beyond the financial condition denominated "well to do," but he has a great fondness for an old soft hat, and at his summer resort insists upon wearing one. A certain young lady undertook the liberty of taking exception to this headgear and asked him why he wore it. Mr. A—— looked at her reproachfully. "I dress as well as I can afford to," he answered.

The young lady did not know his real financial status and was conscience stricken. But in a week or so she found it out and determined to be avenged. Her opportunity came after their return to town. Mr. A—— was to be her escort to some function, and when she came trailing down the stairway in a most fetching evening gown, he made some remark that gave her the long desired opening. She drew a look of triumph, mingled with reproach, in her tone as she answered, "I dress as well as I can afford to." But the triumph was of short duration, for Mr. A—— only answered softly, "Yes, you bet you do."—Boston Budget.

Joe Jefferson Answered.

Joe Jefferson never had but one person with him who did not reverence the man as they did the name. This individual, one Bagley by name, was the property man, and annoyed the great comedian with undue familiarity. He had called Mr. Jefferson "Joe" during his entire 30 years' service. Just previous to an auspicious opening in one of the big cities, Mr. Jefferson discharged Bagley for humiliating him before a number of his friends. Bagley got drunk right away, and that night paid his way to the gallery to see Mr. Jefferson present "Rip Van Winkle." The angry man had just driven poor, destitute Rip from the cottage, when Rip turns and, with a word of pathos, asks, "Joe, have you no interest in the house?" The house was deathly still, the audience half in tears, when Bagley's cracked voice resounded, "Only 80 per cent, Joey—only 80 per cent!"—Chicago Times.

Sparrow and Swallow.

Editor Huildaway of the Easton (Md.) Ledger gives an account of a most remarkable encounter between a barn swallow and an English sparrow. The swallow, as stated to the editor, had built its nest among the rafters of the barn of Mr. Denney, near Royal Oak, in Talbot county. While on the nest the swallow was attacked by the sparrow, and the two birds had a furious battle, which went on sometimes in the air and sometimes on the ground. The swallow was courageous, but it had not the wind of the sparrow and finally had to yield to its antagonist. Having driven the swallow from the barn, the victorious sparrow took possession of the nest and contents.

In about an hour the swallow returned to the barn bearing in its mouth a bunch of something resembling long horsehairs. The bird went directly and noiselessly to its nest, threw itself on the back of the sparrow, and before that astonished bird had recovered from the shock caused by the sudden and violent return of its vanquished foe the swallow put a horsehair noose around the sparrow's neck and somehow fastened the other end of the lasso to the nest or to the rafter. The sparrow soon choked to death on its unexpected gallows, where it hung for several days.—Chicago Tribune.

Small Fruit Growing.

In the vicinity of many small towns there are good openings for growing acre and marketing small fruits. The grower should plant a good variety of strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, grapes, currants and gooseberries, as the longer he is in the market the better he can supply the wants of his customers. It will be a help to him, if, in addition to the different kinds, he has two or more varieties, one early and one late, and in some cases a medium variety, in order to prolong the season as much as possible. One advantage with the home grower is that with good care his fruit can be put into the consumer's hands in a better, fresher condition and at a less cost than if shipped in.

As with many other things connected with farming, the better plan, usually, is to start on a small scale and gradually increase as success and the business warrant.

In order to sell cheaply it is essential to grow them cheaply. As an aid to this prepare the soil in a good tilth before planting.—St. Louis Republic.

ONE HOUR WITH THEE.

One hour with thee, when in the dell
The tawny twilight shadows fell,
Inlaid with hues of silvery sheen
That fell from glittering stars unseen,
And in the ermant's rolling light
Queen regnant of the autumn night
In splendor shone the maiden moon,
And crickets chirped a pleasant tune
And katydids their vespers hymned,
And in the darkling branches drummed
The dryads of some belated tree—
I spent that last sweet hour with thee!

One hour with thee! So silent then,
With thoughts too deep for mortal ken,
Involved in that delicious trance,
Our hearts too full for utterance,
Two spirits blended into one,
With pulse beats timed in unison;
We watched the day's departing glow
And caught the changing west and low,
Of errant winds that swept the wood
And filled their sweet and solitude
With strains of music wild and free—
One hour with thee, one hour without thee!

One hour with thee! Can I forget,
Though by the cares of life beset,
The warm hand clasped, the soft caress,
The look of melting tenderness,
The greeting smile, the parting sigh,
And then, at last, the final good-by?
Now, after so much joys have come,
So sad that each must walk alone,
And bide beneath each other's roof
A heavy heart that's aching now!
One hour with thee, one hour without thee!
If but an hour—one hour with thee!
—Montgomery M. Folsom in Atlanta Journal.

Cardinal Newman's Idea of a Gentleman.

In telling what he thought a gentleman should be Cardinal Newman once remarked: "He has the habit of his company. He is tender toward the bashful, gentle toward the distant and merciful toward the scrupulous. He is considerate. He will remember to whom he is speaking; he will be thought for all the company and avoid allusions that would give pain to any of them, steering away also from topics that irritate. When he does a favor to another (and he does many), the gentleman will somehow make it appear that he is receiving the favor instead of conferring it. He is never mean or little in his disputes. Moreover, he knows that he has intellect far above the average in the fact that he never mistakes personalities and sharp sayings for arguments. Most of mankind do. When grief, illness or losses come to him, he submits to pain because it is inevitable. Bereavement he has with bright philosophy because it is irreparable. He goes to death without a murmur because it is decent."

Personal.

Dr. Morell Mackenzie, the famous specialist in diseases of the throat, said to have had extraordinary success in curing patients, a power which sometimes appeared almost magnetic.

Once a death occurred in his consulting room—one of those cases which Sir James Paget used to call "operations for surgery." The brother of the dead patient was furious and hastened to Dr. Mackenzie's office, determined to give him a piece of his mind.

Such was the fascination of Mackenzie's manner, however, that the infuriated man cooled down by degrees and in a short time found himself conversing quite calmly about the fatal case. The turning point reached when before departing he sat down in the operating chair, and after allowing Mackenzie to examine his throat paid him his fee without a murmur.—Youth's Companion.

Education.

J. Ernest Lane, F. R. C. S., in an address at the commencement exercises of the medical school attached to St. Mary's hospital in London quoted this familiar paragraph, which, while not new, deserves to be published again: "That it's boy destined for a profession were to be taught nothing but reading, writing and arithmatic till he was 11, and during that nothing but Greek, Latin and mathematics till he was 18, at 30 that boy would turn out a more widely cultured, better read man than if in his early years he had been stuffed with geography, history, philosophy and the twopenny-halfpenny fragments of chemistry, botany and zoology, which constitute school science."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Manliness.

Learn from the earliest days to insure your principle against the peril of ridicule. You can no more exercise your reason if you live in the constant dread of laughter than you can enjoy your life if you are in the constant terror of death. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a point of morals, do it—however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear, do it—not for insolence, but seriously and gravely, as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom, and who did not wait till it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion.—James Miller Monthly.

Two Papers for the price of One.

The St. Louis Globe Democrat semi-weekly—Tuesday and Friday—eight Pages each issue—sixteen pages every week—only one dollar a year, is unquestionably the biggest, best and cheapest semi-weekly paper published in the United States. Strictly Republican in politics, it still gives all the news, and gives it at least three days earlier than it can be had from any weekly paper published in the west. The farmer, merchants or professional man who desires to keep promptly and thoroughly posted, but has not the time to read a large daily paper, will find it exactly suited to his wants, the price, only one dollar a year. MINNESOTA REPUBLICANS PREPARE FOR THE NEXT ELECTION

They Decide to Open Their Campaign in February With a Convention of the State League of Republican Clubs and a Notable Speech.

St. Paul, Jan. 3.—A meeting of the Republican state central committee was held at the Merchants' hotel yesterday afternoon at which the president and secretary and members of the executive committee of the state league were present, and plans for the next campaign were discussed and other business transacted. It has been the idea of prominent Republicans of the state that the campaign of 1894 shall be prefaced by educational work among the voters of the state with a view to affording them some reliable information on national issues of the day. The first work shall be done was the principal question under discussion yesterday. It was thought that this work could perhaps best be done through the organization of the state league of Republican clubs, which reaches into every county, and for this reason Frederick E. Searle, president, and C. C. Stearns, of the league, were invited to be present at the meeting of the state committee and assist in perfecting a plan to which both the committee and the league will lend unanimous and in co-operation.

Those present were as follows: Of the state committee, Chairman Tamblyn, Secretary Harris Richardson, William Lockwood, Col. Clark Chambers, Fred A. Day, Jay A. Dye, L. C. Orr, W. E. Joubert, John Zelch, Eugene Hay, Alvah Eastman, Jules A. Lawrence, A. C. Chamberlain, Capt. Ian Sans, Soren Listoe, Daniel Shell, C. L. Benedict.

Mr. Koerner seemed to be considered to be the general sentiment that an early start be made, the meeting in the month of February, the time which was carried.

In connection with the league convention every speaker impressed the necessity of securing prominent orators like Gov. McKinley, Thomas B. Reed, Lodge, etc., for the campaign and this will probably be done.

Mr. Goodnow then moved that "it is the sense of the meeting that it will be for the best interests of the Republican party of this state for the Republican county committees to co-operate with the state league and the state central committee in the work of affording to the voters all the information they may desire on the vital political issues of the day." This was adopted.

Mr. Goodnow then requested that the state committee, its chairman and secretary, co-operate with the league in holding a league convention, which will probably be held in Minneapolis. The meeting continued in the discussion, and in this way the state committee, the league and the committeemen were welded together and will work intelligently, by as a unit, on one broad, general plan.

Chairman Tamblyn, of the state committee from the Twelfth judicial district, tendered his resignation, as he is a candidate for the office of county attorney, and will not deem it advisable that a candidate for that office should remain on the committee. The resignation was accepted. Henry W. Fee was elected to fill the vacancy.

Mr. Converse moved that a member of the state central committee be elected to represent the Seventeenth judicial district, created by the last session, embracing the counties of Norman, Polk, and Kittson. Hon. Thomas Vibert, of Crookston was elected to represent the district on the committee.

The committee were then requested to retire, and the state committee then went into executive session, at which was considered the question of finances and the best methods of carrying on the campaign, the date of Republican literature, etc. After an hour's deliberation the committee adjourned.

INCOME TAX GOES.

SENATE AND HOUSE MEMBERS SETTLE THE QUESTION.

It Decided to Levy a Tax of Two Per Cent Against Individual Incomes of Over $4,000—Exempts the Incomes of Corporations.

Washington, Jan. 3.—The advocates of the individual income tax proposition triumphant at the meeting of the Democratic members of the ways and means committee. All the members were present when the final meeting was held at the treasury department, and, second, a proposition offered as a substitute by Mr. Cockran of New York to tax the incomes from corporations 1 per cent, and inheritances 5 per cent, to raise a tax of 10 cents on whisky and to restore sugar to the dutiable list at a half cent per pound. The vote on Mr. Cockran's substitute proposition which was taken first, was as follows: Ayes, 4 to 4, as follows: Ayes, Messrs. Wilson, Cockran, Stevens and Montgomery. Noes, Messrs. McMillin, Turner, Whitney, Bryan, Bynum, Tarsney and Breckinridge.

The original proposition was then submitted and the vote stood 5 to 3, as follows: Ayes, McMillin, Turner, Whitney, Bryan, Bynum and Tarsney. Noes, Wilson, Stevens, Breckinridge, Montgomery and Brecklaridge.

It was also decided in connection with the latter proposition to increase the whisky tax 10 cents per gallon, that is from 90 cents to $1, to be levied against whisky in as well as out of bond. Upon this proposition also this increase would work undue hardship to the owners of whisky in bond. It was decided to extend the bonded period from three to eight years. The tax on playing cards at one time fixed at 5 cents per pack was reduced to 2 cents, and the consular receipts fixed at one and cosmetics was discontinued. No increase was made in the tax on cigars, but the increase on cigarettes, $1 per 1,000, was allowed to stand.

The committee estimate that the tax on the incomes from corporations and individuals (corporations being treated as individuals) will raise $30,000,000 revenue—$12,000,000 from corporations and $18,000,000 from individuals. The increase in the whisky tax, it is estimated, will give an additional revenue of $10,000,000 per annum. The proposed tax on bank deposits was to be levied upon in case the proposition for an individual income tax failed, was not deemed necessary.

MONKEY AS A SLUGGER

He Pounded a Bulldog Until He Could no Longer Hear His Heart Beat.

"The most novel fight I ever witnessed," remarked Mr. James Meehan to a Cincinnati Enquirer man, "was between a bulldog and a monkey, down in Cuba. A friend of mine had a bulldog that had licked every canine on the island, and he was very proud of him. A gentleman from South America said that he had a monkey that could whip the bulldog, and the owner of the latter laughed at the idea. After some talk ——— of $500 was made, and the only ad- ——— was that the monk ——— have wo——nal he was to be allowed the privilege of using a baton about the length of a policeman's club, but not so heavy.

"The affair was in a public place, and in a pit that was surrounded by an iron grating. There was a big crowd on hand to see the fight. Of course everybody thought the bulldog would chew up the monkey. After a few minutes, however, the audience was surprised at the agility displayed by the monkey. The bulldog would make a rush at the monk, and the latter would jump to one side and allow the bulldog to hit his head against the iron grating. Then he would let the dog make a rush and then jump on the bulldog's back a time or two. This would keep up for an hour or more, and then the dog began to get tired. The monkey began to feel that. He would let the dog make a rush and then jump on the dog's back a little time or several times with the baton. This was kept up for an hour or more, and then the bulldog's head and the monkey actually pounded him to death. The monkey's head would strike the dog over the ears, and then place his ear to the canine to see if he still breathed.

"Finally the owner of the dog agreed to give up the fight, but the owner of the monkey said that it was too late, as the monkey would not quit until he had killed the dog. This was one of the peculiarities of the monkey. They always killed their victims. The owner of the dog said he did not want his dog killed, and insisted on taking the fight off. While they were telling the monkey petted the dog several times with the baton, placed his ear on the dog, and with a sudden jump leaped on the shoulder of his owner and commenced to use monkey language. The dog was examined and found to be dead. The people applauded the victory of the monkey, and it looked as if the monkey understood it."

SWALLOWED HER TEETH.

A Remarkable Accident to a Young Lady in Milwaukee.

Miss Helen Burns made a startling discovery Thursday. She had neglected to take out her upper plate upon retiring the night before, and upon awakening found it to some manner the teeth had fallen into her throat. She was awakened by the pain caused by their passage down her throat. At first she thought she swallowed pay cancel no more pain, and so far she has been in no way inconvenienced by their presence in her stomach. A cup of tea and supper ate on a rubber plate, and was a whole except for the loss of three teeth on one side. The dentist was not inclined to believe that the young lady could have swallowed a large plate, but she convinced him that she had. It was a temporary plate, which had a ring been worn too long, allowing the gums to shrink away from it, had become too large. Being so large a piece half broken out of it, and it would no longer remain in the mouth. Miss Burns told the doctor that the plate did not cause her any pain, but she was frightened naturally enough. The doctor assured her that there was no cause for alarm, as long as she fed no pain.

Dr. Carmichael says that while people are sometimes choked by false teeth getting into their throats, the cases where the teeth have been actually swallowed are very rare. He knows one such case yet occurred in this city, to the doctor's knowledge, and he knew the teeth lodged before they entered the stomach, and the man died in great pain. He predicted that Miss Burns would safely accomplished the feat of swallowing her plate and teeth, and that it would pass out well with perhaps never to be troubled by the teeth. He does not think that the plate can pass into the intestines, and he is in doubt as to what is likely to be its fate. He says that nothing can be done until the plate makes its position known by pain, and then relief may be afforded by an operation or possibly in some other manner.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

"Tamping and Ramming Boreholes.

An innovation in mining work is an invention for tamping and ramming boreholes. The hole itself is made of a smaller diameter at the inner end where the cartridge is placed. A small wood disk rests against the shoulder made by the smaller hole and pushed in the cartridge. The tamping consists of blocks of compressed clay, which are broken up in the hole by the ramming. The disk, blocks and hammer-head are pushed in by a rod which may be threaded on to the fuse wires. Clay blocks are made in a very simple way by a simple machine, and by their use uniformity in the tamping material is secured.

Stopping a Generating Plant.

A clever method of stopping a generating plant at a distance has been devised by a New Zealand electrical engineer. In the installation which has carried out with the addition of this device, was for a private residence, the turbine being about half a mile distant from the house. The main switch was arranged in the owner's bed room, so that he could shut down after retiring to rest.

"It was while Shoemaker Johnson had the upper store at Rosebud," said Col. George Barry the other night at the Lotos club, "that the postoffice was the chief of government border for the agency," quotes the New York Sun. "I was stationed at Fort Niobrara in those days, and occasionally I went over to the Rosebud at other times than issue day. Old Bill Huston, a sort of retired soldier, was managing around the agency then, sometimes working as a herder, but for the most part picking up what he could as a hunter. He was the best shot with a Winchester I ever saw, and he made a good thing out of the heaf of a game he killed for a dollar a pound. I remember one time I was comin' up from the lower store 'nd was 'bout half a quarter of an hour ahead of a shedder bull ringed right past my car so close I could feel the wind of it. I looked around and there on the creek, bout half a mile, was old Bill Huston skinnin' up a stage 'nd sky-maulin' with fellers I'd never I wasn't knowed.

"When I did you do, Moss?' asked Johnson.

"I jess waltzed over there,' answered Moss, 'an' say I to Bill: 'What in thunder,' I says, 'air you a-doin' of?'

"Humph! says Bill. You darn fool; don't you spose I'm a-doin' this?' Moved on, and you was plum four inches out o' range."

STUDYING A NEW PART

An Actor Describes His Sensations While Thus Occupied.

In the study and preparation of a part what a multitude of sensations and emotions the actors go through; what elation and depression; what exhilaration and despair he experiences! In the selection of the role and its delivery to the public; at the first reading of a play by the author when a by any stage name."

"You mean that he has married you?" cried Rose.

I—I——"

Rose sprang to her feet and ran to Miss Elmore's assistance.

The poor girl, who had been standing up as she spoke, and suddenly tottered, would have only just by time to fall into her arms and to prevent her falling to the floor.

"It is nothing," gasped the girl as Rose helped her to the sofa. "I am well, and this nasty old world surprises me—this——Oh, my heart!"

The young actress put her hand to her heart with a cry of pain. Her face was livid, her lips were blue. In a moment she was by the side of the sofa senseless.

Rose rang the bell for the servant, and told her to fetch a doctor, and when she tried to force the poor girl to her opens and of her some brandy. She was terribly alarmed at her appearance, and was afraid that she was dying. Miss Elmore was the first to speak.

"Don't be alarm, Rose," she said, "I will be all right in a moment. I am only overcome by the shock of the news. I—I——"

"Certainly not! To attempt such a thing would be to kill her."

Rose turned angrily upon Mr. Wilson. With the help of the servant poor Miss Elmore was placed in Rose's bed, and the latter had recovered a little the doctor ordered her to be kept perfectly quiet, and insisted that no further excitement be went away.

It was seven o'clock in the evening when he left, and Rose, now thoroughly bewildered, wondered what on earth was meant by it all. Here was a woman she actually believed to be her husband coming in search of his wife, and she was nursing her. It would be cruel of her to tell the poor girl that she was not her husband, at any rate she must be kept in ignorance of the truth. The shock might kill her.

But what of the man who was somewhere, probably in search of his dear wife's return? Both women thought of him. Miss Elmore was the first to speak.

"I'm better now," she gasped, as she raised herself on her elbow, only to be restrained by Rose. "You must let me go home; indeed, you must. Jack will be in a terrible state unless I come home."

"Jack!"

There was no longer any doubt in Rose's mind as to who Miss Elmore's "husband" really was.

"You can't go, my dear," she said soothingly; "I cannot allow it."

"Then I must send a message to him."

Rose had thought of that. But how was it to be done? She felt certain that the detectives were following her, and that any attempt to communicate with Wilson would be the means of leading them the clue they wanted to his whereabouts. And she was determined that the secret should not fall into their hands.

Presently Rose had an idea. "I will send a telegram," she said, "if you will give me his address."

Miss Elmore hesitated. But there was no alternative. She gave the address. It was a street running out of the Lambeth-road, and presently Rose wrote out the following telegram: "Have had one of my old attacks, but am better. Am with friend and will be home early in the morning. Don't worry. Kate."

It cost Rose a pang to sign another woman's name to a message to her husband, but she had steeled herself to any further pain, cost her what it might.

As soon as the telegram was written she put on her things, and leaving the servant with the patient, she left the house. Smedley go to the doctor afterwards. Miss Elmore had not come out. It was possible that she had died. The case was getting more complicated than ever, but to be made up his mind that the young lady wouldn't oblige him by coming out while he was there, and so he went after her.

It was evident to him that for the present he was foiled. That the Smedley was in London he felt sure, that he was the actor who called him self Wilson he was convinced, and his view was strengthened by the fact that he had ascertained through his female assistant that Miss Elmore had given no address at the agents except a week known postoffice, where people of all sorts were in the habit of having their letters left.

The next morning Miss Elmore was much better. Rose had watched her till she slept, and had then gone to her own room, on the same floor, to dress.

She was so much better that towards middle day, when the doctor came, he gave her permission to rise.

Then she and Rose talked the situation over, and little by little the tragic actress told her story.

She had been playing with a company in Liverpool when she first met Wilson, who was then taking to the stage. He was not a good actor, but he was a gentleman, and made himself agreeable, and people liked him. They saw a good deal of each other and they fell in love. He asked her to be his wife and she consented, and they were married. Soon afterwards she found that her mother was seriously ill in England, and she wanted to return and see her. At first her husband objected, but at last, upon hearing it over, he consented, but she noticed that he was very nervous as soon as they landed upon English soil. She returned to find her mother dead. All their funds had been exhausted by the journey, and she proposed that they should get engagements in London at once. At last she succeeded in obtaining one with a travelling company for herself and her husband, but the latter, in a little town near London, a message from Wilson to say that he was very poor, and she had had to pawn to pay their rent. Then she saw in the advertisement for an actor to go to the Cape with a company. Her husband still objected, but he would be best for them, and he had sent her to try and get the engagement. Rose knew the rest.

"So," thought Rose to herself, "he has deceived this poor girl, and she really believes that my husband is her husband. Well, I'll see about that!"

Rose was only just in time to catch her in her arms and to prevent her falling to the floor.

"It is nothing," gasped the girl as Rose helped her to the sofa. "I am well, and this nasty old world surprises me—this——Oh, my heart!"

The young actress put her hand to her heart with a cry of pain. Her face was livid, her lips were blue. In a moment she was by the side of the sofa senseless.

Rose rang the bell for the servant, and told her to fetch a doctor, and when she tried to force the poor girl to her opens and of her some brandy. She was terribly alarmed at her appearance, and was afraid that she was dying. Miss Elmore was the first to speak.

"Don't be alarm, Rose," she said, "I will be all right in a moment. I am only overcome by the shock of the news. I—I——"

"Certainly not! To attempt such a thing would be to kill her."

Rose turned angrily upon Mr. Wilson. With the help of the servant poor Miss Elmore was placed in Rose's bed, and the latter had recovered a little the doctor ordered her to be kept perfectly quiet, and insisted that no further excitement be went away.

It was seven o'clock in the evening when he left, and Rose, now thoroughly bewildered, wondered what on earth was meant by it all. Here was a woman she actually believed to be her husband coming in search of his wife, and she was nursing her. It would be cruel of her to tell the poor girl that she was not her husband, at any rate she must be kept in ignorance of the truth. The shock might kill her.

But what of the man who was somewhere, probably in search of his dear wife's return? Both women thought of him. Miss Elmore was the first to speak.

"I'm better now," she gasped, as she raised herself on her elbow, only to be restrained by Rose. "You must let me go home; indeed, you must. Jack will be in a terrible state unless I come home."

"Jack!"

There was no longer any doubt in Rose's mind as to who Miss Elmore's "husband" really was.

"You can't go, my dear," she said soothingly; "I cannot allow it."

"Then I must send a message to him."

Rose had thought of that. But how was it to be done? She felt certain that the detectives were following her, and that any attempt to communicate with Wilson would be the means of leading them the clue they wanted to his whereabouts. And she was determined that the secret should not fall into their hands.

Presently Rose had an idea. "I will send a telegram," she said, "if you will give me his address."

It cost Rose a pang to sign another woman's name to a message to her husband, but she had steeled herself to any further pain, cost her what it might.

As soon as the telegram was written she put on her things, and leaving the servant with the patient, she left the house. She wasn't going to the office herself. The nearest office was in a grocer's shop. There the telegram would be tricked by the police into giving the address upon the telegram to the servant to the doctor's, told him a little romance about his patient, and left the house. Then she went upstairs and dressed, and then she went out, which would be in a little while, and would probably be likely to follow the doctor's footsteps, or to suspect her servant. Then she did he could get no information from him. As a medical man, and in the execution of his duty, he had his hands through a patient was sacred.

The plan succeeded admirably. Rose went out and tried to comfort and soothe the invalid.

But when o'clock the female detective went away. The man remained till eleven, and then, after a consultation with the police in the house, he went away.

Death of an Old Resident.

On Tuesday morning C. D. Johnson received a telegram from Mankato announcing the death of his aunt, Mrs. J. S. Hinckley, at that place, and on Wednesday noon in company with Mrs. N McFadden and F. B. Johnson he left for Mankato to attend the funeral. A special to the Globe says of the occurrence:

"Mrs. J. S. Hinckley, the oldest white woman settler of Mankato, died to-day. Her death was caused by the effects of a paralytic stroke. She was born at Clarence Hollow, New York, seventy-six years ago. In 1838 she married Henry Jackson, and in 1842 they moved to St. Paul. They took up a tract of land now bounded by Jackson, Robert, Bench and Third streets, and built a log cabin, the first one in the townsite, with a shingle roof. He opened a stock of goods for Indian trade, and did a prosperous business. Jackson street was named after him. The following year he was appointed justice of the peace, and in 1846 was made first postmaster, and in 1849 was elected to the territorial legislature from St. Paul. Mrs. Jackson was the first American white woman in St. Paul. Mr. Jackson, J. S. Hinckley and other St. Paul men came to Mankato in 1852, and organized and laid out the townsite. Jackson died here in 1857, and in 1864 Mrs. Jackson married J. S. Hinckley. A son was born by the first husband, but he died several years ago. He has a son, being the grandson of Mrs. Hinckley, and now of Minneapolis, who becomes sole legatee of an estate valued at about $5,000.

Hawaii.

The Hawaiian Islands are twelve in number, only eight being inhabited. They were discovered in 1778 by the celebrated Captain Cook, who, on his return the following year, was murderer by the natives. Cook named the group the Sandwich Islands, in honor of the Earl of Sandwich, who was at that time First Lord of the British Admiralty. Hawaii is the native name of the largest island, and the appellation favored by the people for the whole group. Honolulu, the capital, is situated on Hawaii, and is 2,100 miles from San Fransico, 3,440 from Yokohama and 4,494 from Sydney. The succession of the native dynasty has been—Kamehameha I, Kamehameha II., Lunalilo, Kalakaua and Liliuokalani, the deposed queen. Kamehameha II. and his queen visited England in 1824, and died there of measles. King Kalakaua, who died two years ago, made a tour of the world in 1881, from which he returned with very extravagant ideas. He erected a palace at a cost of $1,000,000, became indebted to Claus Spreckels $750,000 for money advanced for current expenses. He came under the influence of one Gibson, who visited the island as an agent for the Mormons (then contemplating removal from Utah). Instigated by Gibson, the king brought forward a project for a loan of $10,000,000, and a tax levy of $4,500,000. How heavy a burden was proposed may be seen from the fact that the population in 1884 was only 80,000, and the property on which the tax was to be laid was almost wholly in the hands of four or five thousand whites. In 1887 the white inhabitants rose in revolution, and Kalakaua was obliged to sign a new constitution. Twice before the present troubles the islands have been briefly under foreign domination—once a British officer took possession and formed committees of government; again, French officers abrogated the laws, dictated treaties and established the Catholic faith as the state religion. This was previous to the independence of the kingdom being guaranteed by the United States, Great Britain and France in 1844. Hawaii is a most interesting spot to visit, and many round-the-world travelers have spent a month there, the majority of whom have returned via San Francisco and the United States, taking the Burlington Route east from Denver. For tickets, maps and information regarding the Burlington lines, address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul Minn.
