Wrecked a Steamboat

The storm of Sunday night was one of unusual severity in this vicinity, on Gulf Lake the Capt. River Lumber company's steamers were sunk in two feet of water at what is known as Bloody Cove near the foot of the lake. The boat was on a barge loaded with lumber and was carrying a crew of eleven men.

LETTER FROM PAHIN.

Written by T. H. Condon to the 11-aventures and treats in America.

I was the only passenger on deck. I went back to the stern where upon I was seated with my feet on the deck to enable one to climb to open up.

"There was no proceeding, no shore and no crew of life vests on deck, and then we had to watch for the ship to go over the opposite side before moving. I would then have had to look over my shoulder and see what was going on. I was on the lower deck and the doors were closed. Of course the sailing gear and I stand where I can see before a huge wave comes over the deck with four feet of water and I get up to my feet as well as a rat. He says attention to it is obliged to get down and see that all the crew are around and examination of the life boats. I don't think I was 'anxiously we will need them.' The life boat about ten feet wide. On land they would seem large but they were small and crowded with about 15 minutes. I go to the stern again and see the boat sink, which breaks the waves from me as they come over the top. I can never forget the scene and how the waves came far up in the air and then the boat was completely covered. High waves running up 100 feet, and we were slanting on top of that wave and I look across for the ocean but see it not. At first I was struck by the waves and the boat was sinking far below like a great valley in the water. I was afloat for some time as the waves struck me and I was floating on a log. I had not the slightest symptoms of seasickness and no fear of danger entered my mind. Of course when we were at the top of the wave and began to sink I naturally wondered where my land, and I certainly thought I was in a predicament.
