THE BRAINERD DISPATCH.

VOLUME 14, NUMBER 14. BRAINERD, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MARCH 1, 1895. INGERSOLL & WIELAND, PUBLISHERS.

A Meritorious Measure.

A bill has been introduced in the legislature by A. F. Ferris, the member from Crow Wing county, which if it passes and becomes a law will be of vast benefit to many farmers whose meadows were burned over in the fall of 1894. The bill provides that $15,000 be appropriated out of any money in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, to furnish grass seed for distribution in certain counties afflicted by forest fires wherein the grass and meadows were wholly or partially destroyed. The board of commissioners are constituted a board of examination and adjustment of the applications for grass seed under this act and are required to meet on the first Monday in April 1895 to act on the same and determine who are entitled to benefit and in what amount, but no applicant can be allowed a sum exceeding $60 for this purpose. The auditor is required to give notice before March 10, by posting notices and publishing an official notice one week prior to March 25 in the county paper, that all persons wishing to avail themselves of the benefits of this act must file an application with their town clerk on or before March 25th, in which must be a statement of the number of acres of meadow owned or controlled by the applicant upon which the grass and grass roots were destroyed by said fire and how many acres of said meadows the applicant intends and desires to reseed during the present year. All applications shall be open to public inspection and the bill is so framed that only those who are entitled to the benefit will be able to procure it, and the parties coming under the provisions are bound by oath not to sell, trade or in any manner dispose of the seed so furnished by the state.

The bill has been reported favorably by the committee on appropriations and will be advanced upon the calendar so that its early passage is almost assured. There are many acres of such meadows in Crow Wing county and it it is for the aid of our home farmers thus affected that Mr. Ferris has been working in this matter.

As we go to press we learn that the above bill passed the house under suspension of the rules last night.

This is the first day of spring.

The Hayward trial is almost ended, likewise H. Haywards miserable life.

Next Monday we will have had two years of Grover. Lord help us, have we got to stand two years more?

A petition has been presented to the legislature by Crookston citizens to impeach Judge Ives. Ives is a populist.

A revolution has broken out in Cuba. This is an annual occurrence, in fact, the only genuine sport the Cubans have every year.

A large portion of May has evidently become detached and injected into the last of February. This is all right if Febuary doesn't try to come to the surface in May.

Postmaster Merrill has resigned. He could not be blamed for wanting to cut the present administration. Congressman Wilson succeeds him in the cabinet. It is hoped that he will make a better cabinet officer than he has congressman.

It is evident that an attempt will be made to get more money to build a state capitol. Tax payers of the state should let legislators know that they will permit nothing of the sort. Two million dollars will build as good a building as is necessary.

Anna Gould paid three million dollars for a husband. Husbands are indispensable in all well regulated families, but in this case the price is too high considering the quality of the article. Most imported choices are usually considerably dumaged.

The Cass County Pioneer says that Commissioner Ellis denies saying that Cass did not want organization? If that is true it is evident that Mr. Ellis has a very defective memory or a peculiar way of handling the truth. But then Bro. Oliver is excited and it is possible he may have imagined these things.

The Journal editor seems to have a feeling of resentment against Mayor Halsted, which crops out every time he refers to Mayor Halsted's attempts to stop gambling in the city. Now, we believe that Mayor Halsted is honest in his efforts to suppress this vice, although mistakes may be made and innocent parties made to suffer in making arrests.

The Cass County Pioneer's prattle about taxation without representation is all bosh. It is simply a question of expendiency. When Cass county is sufficiently advanced in wealth and population to afford separate county officials of its own, it will, no doubt, have them. Until then it is good business sense to have their business transacted by Crow Wing officials.

The Journal this week takes a shy at the game and fish law. It says the law was passed with the idea "that God made fish only for the purpose of giving city dudes and others fun in the summer." Now, this is the utterance of a demagogue. The law was intended to prevent the wholesale depopulation of our lakes and streams by unscrupulous speculators who want to catch fish with nets and spears in the spring by the wagon load. Fishing under the law is free to all from April 15th to December 1st, with hook and line, and all have an equal chance. And no one would be arrested or convicted if they caught fish decently during the closed season for their own use. If the Journal editor will take the trouble to investigate he will find that all who have been arrested and convicted under this law have not trespassed because it was necessary to "keep body and soul together."

BRAINERD, - - MINN.

A Georgia raccoon, supposed to be tame and being allowed the privilege of a farmer's house, recently killed five cats and severely wounded three fine dogs.

Lizard who is said to be a tonic, and a cure for many diseases of the eye. For the brewing of this decoction more than 100,000 dried lizards are annually exported from Pakhoi, in China.

In 1702 an act was passed forbidding King William III. to quit his dominions without leave from the representatives of the country, and this necessity arose from his frequent visits to Holland.

When a gunpowder lighter comes alongside a ship all fires are put out. Matches are carefully stowed away, the cook suspends operations, pipes are extinguished, and the heavy chests are carried on board by hand.

Queen Victoria, at the earnest request of Princess Beatrice, has decided to continue the writing of her memoirs, and it is reported that the first volume will soon make its appearance.

Miss Elizabeth Bray Downing, whom it is said, the late John Greenl af Whittier would have married had it not been for his mother's near illness, attended, died in West Newbury, Mass., at the age of eighty-five years.

A French railway has lately arranged its telegraph lines so that at a prearranged signal the wires are switched from the telegraphic instruments to telephones, thus enabling the operators either to talk verbally or to communicate by the telegraphic code at will.

A large sum of money was in the pocket of Joseph Grimm of Hammonton, Pa., while he was riding his bicycle along a lonely road. Three highwaymen stopped him, and he threw his watch some distance from him. While the rascals were searching for the watch he escaped on his wheel.

The Gladstone majority of forty in the present parliament has fallen to twelve under Rosebery. This is a critical margin, but if an appeal to the country becomes necessary the grand old man is in unusually good shape to make the most important speeches of the campaign.

Writers describing the Coolgardie gold fields in Western Australia speak of 150-pound pieces of quartz, with nuggets standing out from the rock like peanuts. But as water sells for $1.25 a gallon the wealth of the mines is only comparative, even if all that is said of them is true.

Ex-Senator Henry G. Davis of West Virginia has offered to give to the state a suitable site for an industrial school for girls and $50,000 to build it, on condeiaoh shrdlu cmfvvpp etaoinfluidmotion that the state establish such an institution and make annual provision for its support.

Preparations are being made for the celebration next June of Prof. C. C. Landgelli's twenty-fifth anniversary as dean of the Harvard law school. He was appointed a professor in the school in 1870, and in December of the same year he was elected to the deanship.

The Japanese city of Osaka will soon have a large watch factory, fitted up with the latest American machinery and under the superintendency of an American citizen. Japan's friendship for this country is not likely to be besmeared by our disposition to mind our own business in international affairs.

The keys that are used the most for musical compositions are C major, G major, containing one sharp, and F major, containing one flat, the reasons being that these keys are easiest to play on keyed instruments, such as piano or organ, and because keys with few sharps or flats are better adapted for instruments in an orchestra.

A musical critic who has heard Paderewski play parts of his Polish opera declares "that this opera of Paderewski's is going to do more for his fame than his playing has done, and that it will mark an era not only in the great pianist-composer's career, but an era in art itself. It is an absolutely superb work, of great intensity and full of truly human pathos."

Some one who is very near to Bismarck writes that the prince "has his old, venerable, axe-laughing acquaintance. His eye is just as fiery and spirited, and he has the same interest in the events of the world. But other wise he is like Rubens from whom the palette was suddenly snatched, and who had to look on while, year after year, his pictures were smeared over by dilettantes and ruined."

In some recent experiments with the new smoke rifle bullet was driven through forty-eight inches of pine, another penetrated oak to the depth of thirty inches, and still there were left with ease through iron plate two-thirds of an inch thick. The time has passed when troops can shoot over the heads of a mob. Rather the bullets must cut into the rioters or women and children a mile away be the chief victims.

A hundred and fifty years ago every man who pretended to a scientific education was supposed to be able to read and write a little Latin, and most if not as well as his own tongue. It was the vulgar language of science and all books intended for general circulation were written in it. In course of time it had hardly ceased to be the vulgar tongue of European literature, and when he says "Veni, Vidi, Vici" he knows "little Latin" it does not necessarily mean that he knew less than most college graduates know now.

The movement to establish a national park at Appomattox is meeting with much favor in Virginia and elsewhere. It is virtually the place where the civil war ended, and there is no finer instance in military history of the meeting of two generals each of whom were also gentlemen, one to accept a final reverse in a manly spirit, the other to show equal nobility in securing the fruits of national victory without the slightest feeling of a personal triumph. A group commemorating the grand simplicity of Grant and Lee in that culminating scene of the war would do no harm to the fame of either, or to the pride of American citizenship.

Chairman Ferris, of the railroad committee, reported back S. F. 54—Stevens — a proposed constitutional amendment taxing the earnings of sleeping car and other companies, with the recommendation that it be referred to the legislature.

The reports of the committees were adopted.

St. Paul, Feb. 23.—The senate was a little dull and spent the majority of its session in discussing three bills. It decided to refer the question of the finance committee, which reported favorably on the bill, providing printing $13,000 to sufferers from the effects of a cyclone that swept over Meeker and Stearns counties on June 27, 1892. The bills will come up again in the committee of the whole. The Duluth normal school bill was the occasion of some animated debating to the state's educational system and the advisability of having a state university. The bill finally won and took its place on the calendar. The principal point in debate was an amendment to the bill whereby elective professorships which is to be changed so as to re quire a majority of legislators in an election district instead of ten.

The senate passed, under suspension of the rules, a joint resolution memorial requesting congress to pass the Olmsted bill, known as the anti-option measure. Among the bills introduced was one changing the salary from $2,000 to $2,500 per annum which exacts usurious interest as a bonus, or in any other way, gathers in by indirection, and repeal the law making the usury work a forfeiture of the principal and interest. There was also a bill to extend the operation of the mechanics' lien law so as to include the log and lumber of farm machinery, and give them a first lien. The senate then, after the regular business, was crushed. Cries of "Fetch him to the state," "Death to the renegade," were heard. Chief McDermott summoned the major. The senate decided to call the roll and it was apparent that it meant the loss of many of the 37 members to the audience to leave the hall. Upstairs a number of members of the organization who had cheered Slattery's declaration that he belonged to them, had assembled to hear the priest to defend him as he left the hall. Sergeants-at-arms and police were armed in anticipation of trouble. As the ex-priest was about to leave the hall he left his fists for the chief of police stopped them and refused to allow any one to enter the room. Outside Mayor Meyers and Col. William Gaynard were in consultation. The latter blessed at the police and hooted at their orders to disperse. The military was ordered out and by 8 o'clock by the city was sent in, but when it reached the mob dispersed.

"Bring on your military," some of the leaders shouted.

"Let 'em alone, then, they can't save Slattery."

Prominent Catholics addressed the mob, advising them to disperse. When the militia arrived at the scene of the mob, driving them back a short distance. Slattery and his wife were then escorted to their hotel, followed by a howling mob. A detachment of police was left at the hotel to guard them over night. Every door to the hotel was locked and guarded. Mrs. Slattery had been to lecture this afternoon and Slattery for one to-night. Threats are made that they will be driven from the city. Prominent Catholics say that they are using their influence to quell the riotous element and to induce them to pay no attention to the threats of violence. Slattery's There is great fear that to-day may bring further trouble of even more serious character.

A RELIGIOUS RIOT.

AN INTERESTING BIT OF TESTIMONY IN THE SLATTERY TRIAL.

A Witness Testifies That He Saw a Priest Beaten by ex-Priest Slattery and His Wife—Another Which nearly Precipitates Bloody Fight.

Savannah, Ga., Feb. 28.—This city has had its exciting night in its history. For five hours the mob pelled on the verge of religious riots, and escaped only by the presence of police, except the artillery, was on duty. There are two infuriated companies and the Georgia hussars, the finest military organization in the state, mustered at from 3,000 to 5,000. Under part being Catholics, had challenged the performance in the extreme. Bay for the coolness of Mayor Meyers and the commanding officer. Three arrests of blood might have been the result. Bayonet charges were made several times in clear the streets, but the mob which had gathered about Masonic Temple, one of the handsomest buildings of the city and situated in the heart of Savannah, stubbornly refused to retire.

The cause was the lecture of ex-Priest Slattery, who is under an excursion on Cobbledam. By 8 o'clock a howling mob of over 1,500 surrounded Masonic hall. In the hall was an audience of about 400, including a number of ladies. The lecture was hardly begun before brickbats and cobblestones began to fall on the windows. The police had closed all the doors leading to the street and the audience from injury, only two or three being injured by falling glass. The roof of the building was called out and fifty men were soon in front of the hall. The ordinary means to secure an entrance, but were driven back time after time by the mob. Before 9 o'clock the mob had grown to probably between 3,000 and 3,000 people. Then the police broke into the Masonic temple was crushed. Cries of "Fetch him to the state," "Death to the renegade," were heard. Chief McDermott summoned the major. THE STORY OF THE GUINEA.

Tales Connected With Its Coinage and That Used the Gold Standard Since the Year 1716.

In 1806 it was enacted that all persons might bring their gold and silver to the mint to be coined free of charge. The mint charges are now 1 per cent, as was coined to be of the value of 20s in silver, but no legal ratio was fixed between the coins; the public was to receive them at such a rating as it pleased. Guineas, instead of being current at 20s, according to the mint inventures, passed current at 22s. The silver coins became constantly more degraded, until at last they were clipped down to half their weight. After the great recoinage by William III., guineas were successively reduced by proclamation, and a treasury warrant fixed that they should be received at 21s and at 20s 6d at the receipt of the exchequer. But still all the good silver coin disappeared from circulation as soon as it was issued from the mint.

In this perplexity the government referred the whole matter to Newton, who showed that the true value of the guinea was only 20s 8d, according to the market value of the metals, and that in consequence of this all the good silver was at once exported. He recommended that the guinea should be reduced to 21s by way of experiment. This was not considered enough, but the guinea was still overrated by 2d, and the consequence was that gold flourished as well as ever. The guinea is a great favorite with our female sex, and florist does with his plants! The air in a greenhouse is regulated by a thermometer and kept even and pure because a established custom among merchants that all obligations became payable in gold only; so, ever since 1718 England has become a gold monometallic country, and in public estimation the standard was changed from silver to gold, although the obsolete silver piece of 1 lineal inch lingered on the statute book for another hundred years.

At the great recoinage of 1816, that which had become established by merchant usage was enacted by law. Gold was adopted as the sole standard, the silver coins were made tokens for amounts, and made legal tender for only 40s. Ever since then England has enjoyed the purest system of coinage ever devised by the ingenuity of man, and the world has benefited from all coinage trouble.—Nineteenth Century.

THE DARK Secret

By Annette Marie Maillard.

"Welborne," said Basil, when they had consulted a while, "that will not do. I think; but your mustache will betray you; here in this climate it will grow and must be known, even in these few days."

Welborne had his weak point, and this was an immense pride in his long sandy mustache, which he never had been shaved since he joined the —th Hussars, a rare recruit. For one moment he hesitated, and then devoted-ness to his master triumphed. He heaved something like a sigh as he looked sadder than ever, uttered—

"There sir, it must come off!" And he torched his hat this time, probably in honor of the departing ornament.

"It will soon grow again, Welborne," answered Basil, with human feeling for the sacrifice, as he lightly sprang off his own silky one. "But it is now eight o'clock, and by the time it is off, and we have returned, it will be quite nine."

"A good hour, sir," suggested the other.

"It is moonlight, and Mr. Lyon will get off by ten. The house will be all quiet, for, I suppose, no one will sit up for him, or, maybe, one only; at all events night is better than day for this sort of business."

"True, calculated Welborne, as gravely as if a murder were in contemplation.

Scarcely a word passed between the two as they cleared the space of ground between Alice's home and the Arches, and in less than the hour, they had returned, Welborne not recognizable with his shaven face, and Basil had so completely disguised his handsome face by a letter for Lyon, that it seemed impossible anything but the most complete success could crown their efforts.

Alice was in her room Lyon had not dared to place her under restraint but the poor girl's every step was watched by a creature of his who was the master himself was not there.

She had quitted her mother's room, and, as usual, before retiring for the night, entered a little study, fitted up by her mother for reading, writing and prayer—an excellent act, if her other deeds had coincided with the same.

And there, in solitude and grief, she besought for that effect—the help of a stranger to the heart—patience in affliction. Here even Lyon left her in peace; and the silk hour of the night arrived, he had no further fear, for he knew the petrified Lord would not prevent her from taking the desperate measure of flight, and only that day, had she promised her mother to obey her dying father's solemn injunction, and never marry without her consent.

This accomplished, after nightfall Lyon relaxed a little of his vigilance, and Alice's mother scarcely saw her poor, her health was so broken.

Nine o'clock struck, and with the last stroke the hall bell rang.

A tall man stood outside the door. "hearing a letter in all haste for Mr. Hume, to his good friend, Squire Lyon, hoping he would lose no time, but come, as he was terrible bad."

This was vorbally uttered, as the letter, written by a letterwriter, said as much.

There was ad readful roar of ten minutes' duration in Lyon's heart, for this neighbor who wrote, was a "sneaking fellow," he said, "ever ready to creep into poor old Hume's pocket"—the old history of seeing the unseen with other eyes, but not the beams in our own.

Then spake cowardice, the coward was lonely, the night advanced, for the country. The messenger spoke of the disasters around the hall, of the fever summoned, and this vision of harpies conquered all the rest, though he could not be much dangerous in the carriage; he had forgotten that at first; and his crony ass spy, his own man should accompany him.

The messenger was thanked and offered "a lift," but he declined, alleging that he had to call at the apothecary's for some "stuff" for his master's man.

This done, he retired, and joined his master, they soon had the satisfaction of seeing the broughum drive rapidly off, with Lyon inside, and his servant on the best beside the groom.

Scarcely had they time to clear the village when Welborne returned—for of course our readers recognize the messenger—to Mrs. Lyon, in a state of breathless haste; and he had stopped Mr. Lyon to tell him that a letter of mercury had not all the "stuff" required and Mr. Lyon told him to return for his medicine chest, which he was to take directly.

Lyon's medicine chest was as well known in the village as Seas, for when she would have been useless, he called upon the wife of the latter to take use of its contents.

Basil knew that all the men servants were absent now, and close behind Welborne, he stood in the shade of the shade. The woman who answered the door ran away to tell her mistress, and in an instant Basil passed the hall man and was ensconced behind a cloakstand in the hall.

The ponderous medicine chest was brought down, and Welborne—but not without much apparent grumbling—took it, and departed.

In half an hour afterwards the house had sunk into silence. One by one Basil counted the women-servants' steps creeping up to their beds to bed, and his heart rejoiced, for he heard Mrs. Lyon's "Alice" spoken of, so he knew she was there. His heart felt light, boy-like he laughed at the good trick which had so well succeeded, and wondered, in the midst of his mirth, what Welborne would do with the chest.

He strange, to it, that in the moments most sublime or painful, of our existence, some ludicrous thought will intrude.

The house was not quiet enough for him to venture abash, behind the place for an hour, and just as he was doing so, the rapid rolling of carriage wheels startled him. They stopped. It could only be Lyon returning. With one bound he gained the garden door and entered by the first door at hand, found himself in what was termed a housemaid's closet, amidst brooms and brushes of every description.

To lelt the door open the work of a moment, and then he stopped h's breath to listen. At the hall door he heard a stumbling heavy footfall known the style, a cry, then voices; then, after a pause, a key in the door, and the entry of Lyon, and his man, speaking in loud tones. He could not resist the temptation of opening the door an inch to listen. He heard enough to convince him that the medicine chest had been left at the door by Welborne, and then Lyon stumbled over it, it had rolled down the steps.

Lyon was one of those perfectly selfish men who care for none but themselves; and not thinking of his invalid wife, he spoke before the servants of her ailment, the events of the evening; and to Basil's delight, he found that Mr. Hume's medical attendant was blamed for the whole, and the question was for who object? The medicine chest spoke volumes. All the contents were forthwith condemned to be burnt as having been tampered with; but in what manner was the question, for they were as yet in ignorance of how it could have been placed on the steps.

Forthwith the maid-servants were awakened and questioned, and poor Basil nearly betrayed his close.

"Fiorelad," he muttered to himself, "the housemaid does not get the happiness thought into her head of requiring a broom at this untoward moment."

Another hour passed in all the examinations, and Basil heard the voice of Mrs. Lyon beseeching her husband not to make so much noise. "Sr agitated her, and would inevitably awake her boy," but not a word of Alice.

"Good Heavens," said the lover, growing impatient, "am I to pass my night in this closet? Being in the house is one thing—with Alice, another. The douce takes the man!

However there must be an end of everything in existence. Finally, servants, master, all had sunk to rest, and the hall clock struck the hour of eleven.

Basil's excitement and nervous hilarity had passed away, and he trembled when he thought that in all this commotion he had heard nothing of Alice. A stern resolution took possession of him—at all risk he was to enter Lyon's room and forced him to tell—not to leave without knowing what had become of her.

At last he stole from his hiding place. The servants' party passed at the back by window; all the rest of the passage was dark.

"Stop," he cried, looking around. "I must find out where I am. "What! he soliloquized mentally, "I almost was my own girl's room, where we were so often set together, well I know it, even in the dark."

He crept a few paces towards it. All glory to the bootmaker who makes lovers' boots which never creak! He tried the door softly, and opened it the moment. A low breathing was perceptible to the ear. He struck a lighter, and gently tapped, whilst his heart beat with a wild throb of hope defiance. Still all was breathless around, and he felt grieved that she should sleep so soundly. Loudly he knocked —a sort of desperation possessed him. He felt as if the moment had arrived for ever for discovery. The breathing ceased, and there was a pause, during which Basil's heart seemed to stand directly.

"Hello!" exclaimed Lyon's voice. "What's the matter? Who's there?"

Basil heard the bed creak, as if Lyon were rising, and he felt a moment he was in his cupboard again. We will not record the energetic word he used as he closed the door.

"Am I dreaming here all night?" was the conclusion; with "Confound that Lyon! he's taken possession of Alice's room."

Lyon had a horror of midnight thieves, and across his door was the chain.

Basil heard him unlock the door, and open it to the extent of one inch, and he peeped out, and asked—

"Who is there?"

Again he repeated the question, and then grumbling, retired to bed.

"Curse the coward!" said Basil, bitterly. "It is always the most worthless who are the most afraid of themselves."

Another quarter of an hour elapsed, and he again stepped forth. Stopping at another door, he felt unnerved enough to have almost rapped at woman. Alice's room, occupied by her mother, perplexed him. Where could she be?

At all risks he would know. He paused at another. A child's faint cry arose. He thought of Lora, and her name fell from—

"If the child is there, the mother must be also," he said.

And he passed on to the next. Here all gently rapped—rapped—rapped, and the door opened, and Alice's maid, husky and terrified—exclaimed—

"Good Lord, sir, what—"

Then another was heard—Mrs. Lyon's loudly calling. The door opened. Nyo stood there, and Basil spoke.

From his hiding place he saw the sick-nurse, with him on his arm, some paraphernalia on her head peep forth, a lamp in her hand; and she attempted to put half awake, Lyon, who came forth when he heard a woman's voice in the passage—but the light in the lamp in the servant, and this vision of harpies conquered all the rest, though he could not be much dangerous in the carriage; he had forgotten that at first; and his crony ass spy, his own man should accompany him.

The messenger was thanked and offered "a lift," but he declined, alleging that he had to call at the apothecary's for some "stuff" for his master's man.

This done, he retired, and joined his master, they soon had the satisfaction of seeing the broughum drive rapidly off, with Lyon inside, and his servant on the best beside the groom.

Scarcely had they time to clear the village when Welborne returned—for of course our readers recognize the messenger—to Mrs. Lyon, in a state of breathless haste; and he had stopped Mr. Lyon to tell him that a letter of mercury had not all the "stuff" required and Mr. Lyon told him to return for his medicine chest, which he was to take directly.

Lyon's medicine chest was as well known in the village as Seas, for when she would have been useless, he called upon the wife of the latter to take use of its contents.

Basil knew that all the men servants were absent now, and close behind Welborne, he stood in the shade of the shade. The woman who answered the door ran away to tell her mistress, and in an instant Basil passed the hall man and was ensconced behind a cloakstand in the hall.

The ponderous medicine chest was brought down, and Welborne—but not without much apparent grumbling—took it, and departed.

In half an hour afterwards the house had sunk into silence. One by one Basil counted the women-servants' steps creeping up to their beds to bed, and his heart rejoiced, for he heard Mrs. Lyon's "Alice" spoken of, so he knew she was there. His heart felt light, boy-like he laughed at the good trick which had so well succeeded, and wondered, in the midst of his mirth, what Welborne would do with the chest.

He strange, to it, that in the moments most sublime or painful, of our existence, some ludicrous thought will intrude.

The house was not quiet enough for him to venture abash, behind the place for an hour, and just as he was doing so, the rapid rolling of carriage wheels startled him. They stopped. It could only be Lyon returning. With one bound he gained the garden door and entered by the first door at hand, found himself in what was termed a housemaid's closet, amidst brooms and brushes of every description.

To lelt the door open the work of a moment, and then he stopped h's breath to listen. At the hall door he heard a stumbling heavy footfall known the style, a cry, then voices; then, after a pause, a key in the door, and the entry of Lyon, and his man, speaking in loud tones. He could not resist the temptation of opening the door an inch to listen. He heard enough to convince him that the medicine chest had been left at the door by Welborne, and then Lyon stumbled over it, it had rolled down the steps.

Lyon was one of those perfectly selfish men who care for none but themselves; and not thinking of his invalid wife, he spoke before the servants of her ailment, the events of the evening; and to Basil's delight, he found that Mr. Hume's medical attendant was blamed for the whole, and the question was for who object? The medicine chest spoke volumes. All the contents were forthwith condemned to be burnt as having been tampered with; but in what manner was the question, for they were as yet in ignorance of how it could have been placed on the steps.

Forthwith the maid-servants were awakened and questioned, and poor Basil nearly betrayed his close.

"Fiorelad," he muttered to himself, "the housemaid does not get the happiness thought into her head of requiring a broom at this untoward moment."

Another hour passed in all the examinations, and Basil heard the voice of Mrs. Lyon beseeching her husband not to make so much noise. "Sr agitated her, and would inevitably awake her boy," but not a word of Alice.

"Good Heavens," said the lover, growing impatient, "am I to pass my night in this closet? Being in the house is one thing—with Alice, another. The douce takes the man!

However there must be an end of everything in existence. Finally, servants, master, all had sunk to rest, and the hall clock struck the hour of eleven.

Basil's excitement and nervous hilarity had passed away, and he trembled when he thought that in all this commotion he had heard nothing of Alice. A stern resolution took possession of him—at all risks he was to enter Lyon's room and forced him to tell—not to leave without knowing what had become of her.

At last he stole from his hiding place. The servants' party passed at the back by window; all the rest of the passage was dark.

"Stop," he cried, looking around. "I must find out where I am. "What! he soliloquized mentally, "I almost was my own girl's room, where we were so often set together, well I know it, even in the dark."

He crept a few paces towards it. All glory to the bootmaker who makes lovers' boots which never creak! He tried the door softly, and opened it the moment. A low breathing was perceptible to the ear. He struck a lighter, and gently tapped, whilst his heart beat with a wild throb of hope defiance. Still all was breathless around, and he felt grieved that she should sleep so soundly. Loudly he knocked —a sort of desperation possessed him. He felt as if the moment had arrived for ever for discovery. The breathing ceased, and there was a pause, during which Basil's heart seemed to stand directly.

"Hello!" exclaimed Lyon's voice. "What's the matter? Who's there?"

Basil heard the bed creak, as if Lyon were rising, and he felt a moment he was in his cupboard again. We will not record the energetic word he used as he closed the door.

"Am I dreaming here all night?" was the conclusion; with "Confound that Lyon! he's taken possession of Alice's room."

Lyon had a horror of midnight thieves, and across his door was the chain.

Basil heard him unlock the door, and open it to the extent of one inch, and he peeped out, and asked—

"Who is there?"

Again he repeated the question, and then grumbling, retired to bed.

"Curse the coward!" said Basil, bitterly. "It is always the most worthless who are the most afraid of themselves."

Another quarter of an hour elapsed, and he again stepped forth. Stopping at another door, he felt unnerved enough to have almost rapped at woman. Alice's room, occupied by her mother, perplexed him. Where could she be?

"Good Lord, sir, what—"

Then another was heard—Mrs. Lyon's loudly calling. The door opened. Nyo stood there, and Basil spoke.

We had an item last week in regard to Coroner Dean being called to Deerwood to hold an inquest. It was a wild goose chase it seems. The poverty social at Mrs. M. McFadden's on Wednesday evening was a very amusing occasion. Some of the rigs that were worn to escape a fine were unique to say the least. S. F. Alderman took the prize for the most appropriate costume. Some of those attending however, were proud and wore all their frills and furbelows hence they compelled to contribute. Refreshments consisting of doughnuts and butternilk and ginger bread and coffee were served. A most enjoyable evening is reported by all attending.

City Attorney McClenahan returned on Tuesday evening from a business trip to St. Paul, Duluth, and other points. While in St. Paul Mr. McClenahan had a conference with Ambrose Tighe with reference to the rental of power for the electric light plant. As is well known the power company has declared its contract with the city by which the city gets 500 horse power for $6,500 a year void on the ground that the council had no rigt to make a contract extending beyond its term of office. An agreement was reached, and there can be none satisfactory to Brainerd citizens except the fulfilment of the contract as it stands. Mr. McClenahan says there are no precedents exactly covering this case, but it seems very strange that a council can make contracts giving away franchises for any period, but cannot make a contract advantageous to the city extending beyond its life. Is a poor rule that won't work both ways.

P. F. Mauer, the well known clothing man will move his office from No. 16 front street to room 4 up stairs in the Sleeper Block March 1.

A Social Event.

They were assisted by Mrs. Potter, the grooms sister, and Mrs. George Forsyth. The room was decorated with American Beauty and LaFrance Roses and, smilax, and presented a very handsome appearance. Light refreshments were served. A continous stream of guests thronged the parlors and reception room from seven until eleven p. m. It was in every way a very elegant and enjoyable occasion.

Arrested for Gambling.

Eleven persons in all were arrested on Wednesday night at Kinkili's and Parson & Swanson's saloon for gambling. They were arraigned in the municipal court yesterday morning and their cases were continued until Saturday morning. The men all claim that they were not gambling, but were only playing cards for the treats, and the proprietors of the places, where they were arrested, are indignant. Of course, if this is true it is to be regretted that the arrests were made, but innocent men often are arrested in the enforcement of all laws, and it seems it can't be helped. We hardly think, however, that there is any spite work in it on the part of the mayor, as has been intimated.

Brainerd Had A Strike.

The men on the landing at the Northern Mill struck last Friday for shorter hours. The men have been working 12 hours a day and then in addition would have to get out and unload all logs brought in after those hours. They wanted the company to put on a night crew of 9 or 10 men to do the extra work, but the company did not see it that way and refused to accede to their demands, hence the men numbering about 50 quit in a body. The company took the men that did repair shop to fill their places temporarily until they could get other men. They brought a large number up from Minneapolis to fill the strikers places, some of whom stayed with them but others worked only a short time and quit, but work is scarce and men wanting places are numerous, hence the company in a day or two was able to fill the strikers place. No violence or intimidation was attempted, and everything passed off as smoothly as if there had been no difficulty.

March.

Our calender year has, in passing through the formative process, seen as many changes perhaps as any of the other institutions by which we live. In the Roman (ecclesiastical) calender, until the year 1752, March was the first month, and the legal year began March 25. In France March was reckoned the first month of the year until 1564, when, by an edict of Charles IX, January was declared the commencing month. Scotland followed France in 1599, but the English delayed the change nearly a century, making the 25th of March as the commencement of the year was not so inappropriate as it might now seem to us, for in that month, in the temperate zone, nature really begins to live again; the trees send forth buds, wild animals come out of their white dens, and the fowl commence their northward journeys. It is, too, the time when the year's outdoor business begins; when the "farmer" is looking for a new country and cheaper land; the business man for a branch. If you want to travel anywhere this spring, for business, pleasure, or visiting, send the Burlington Route as your railroad line if possible. For information concerning the many places accessible by its trains, call on your local ticket agent for maps and time tables, or for more complete information write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul Minn.

DEATHS.

Mrs. Anna Capistrant, wife of Remi Capistrant, of Crow Wing county, died of cosumption at St. Gabriel's hospital on Thursday, aged 23 years. She leaves a child two years old that is seriously ill.—Little Falls Transcript.

Dorothy M., infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Mantor, died on Wednesday, Feb. 27th, of heart failure, and was buried on the 28th.

E. R. Bell received information last Monday of the death of his father, Dr. James K. Bell, who resided in Brainerd about four years, but left here about eighteen months ago. His death took places at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Frank L. Sutton, 1350 Avon street, LaCrosse, Wis., on Sunday last. The deceased was 68 years of age, and was an old soldier, having been captain of Co. C, 192nd Ohio Vols., during the war. He was well known and much respected in this city. The funeral took place Tuesday afternoon.—Journal.

Mr. John Stearns died on Sunday, Feb. 24th, of paralysis, at the residence of his son, J. J. Stearns, in Oak Lawn township, aged 90 years and 6 months. Deceased has been a resident of the city for many years, and had the respect of all who knew him because of his manly qualities and noble Christian character. He has been a member of the Methodist church for years, but for the past few years has been a member of the Congregational church in East Brainerd, because of its nearness to his home. His funeral services were conducted there on Thursday, the 26th, by Rev. G. F. Morton, assisted by Rev. West, of the M. E. church, and Rev. Stapf, of the German church. L. W. Stearns, of East Brainerd, and J. J. Stearns, of Oak Lawn, are sons of the deceased.

Committed Suicide.

Corner I. T. Dean was called to Staples last Sunday night to investigate the death of Pat. Rogers, a Cass county settler living about five miles from Staples on Sec. 20, town 134, range 32. No inquest was deemed necessary by Coroner Dean, as it was a clear case of suicide, judging from the mass surroundings when he was found. Deceased had lived there for the past ten years all alone, having no family. His neighbors say that he seemed despondent lately. He ended his life by shooting himself twice through the body with a No. 32 self acting revolver, and when he was found the revolver lay by his side close to his outstretched hand. He is known to have relatives living in Stillwater, Minn., and the address of John Mangan, 305 Williams street, Stillwater was found on his person. He is supposed to be the uncle of the deceased.

Municipal Court Proceedings.

John Sherring, Robert Monk and I. McKinnon were arrested the latter part of the week for selling whiskey without a license at Lothrop. They were arraigned in the municipal court here on Monday and were discharged on a technicality, but were immediately arrested and held to the grand jury after waiving a preliminary examination. County Attorney Chipperfield conducted the prosecution and Judge Fleming appeared for the defendants.

Jasper Waldrop was arrested on Tuesday on a charge of petit larceny on complaint of Ed. Grundhagen. D. M. Clark & Co.'s tinsmith. Mr. Grundhagen claimed that a $20 gold piece was extracted from his pocket book in the Palace Hotel, and he accused Waldrop who was a fellow boarder of purloining the same. The case was placed on trial in the municipal court on Wednesday before a jury, but was dismissed on motion of to defendants attorney after the state rested. County Attorney Chipperfield conducted the prosecution and Messrs Fleming and Warner appeared for the defense.

Staples Items.

From the World.

Mrs. W. J. Lewis visited relatives at Brainerd the first of the week.

Miss Laura Leek, who has been teaching school in the vicinity of Wadena, has been visiting relatives in Staples. She departed yesterday for Brainerd.

A Tale of Woe.

Monday a wohan called at the police station and recited a tale of woe. She gave her name as May Smith, and arrived in the city from Grand Forks over the N. P. She was on her way to Brained, and stopped off here for the purpose of visiting the Salvation Army. She stopped at the Northern hotel and about 8 o'clock went to the barracks to attend services. As she stepped from the building after the exercises she claims that a young man told her that she was going to be held up and robbed. She started to the hotel by way of Fourth and Broadway. When near the corner of these two streets she was met by two young men who demanded her money. She was badly frightened, and produced all the money she had—$7.30. Her description of her assailants would be met on the streets. Chief Gonyea will investigate the matter thoroughly.—Crookston Tribune.

More About Uncle Josh.

All the Aitkin papers last week spoke in the highest terms of the presentation there of "Uncle Josh" by the Jefferson Dramatic Club, of this city, but the Independent man must have been smitten by the charms of the ladies, judging from his very complimentary references. After speaking of the merits of the entertainment as a whole, the Independent says:

Taking it as a whole, the play was admirably presented, and passed off smoothly, with credit distributed where it properly belonged, but it was Mrs. Nellie Hazen, in the role of "Letty Reynolds," that made the hit of the evening. Bewitchingly beautiful, handsomely attired, and lithe and graceful, moving about the stage with ease and grace, taking her cue promptly and rendering her lines with just the proper pitch of voice the occasion required, her very action, look and gesture being symbolical of her role, and when she left the stage the audience felt that there was a vacuum there until she returned. The solos by S. F. Alderman were well received, and Verne Anderson's selections on the piano won for him much applause. We understand the Jefferson Club intend visiting Aitkin again in about a month, at which time they will present a light opera. We predict for them a packed house.

Teachers' Examination.

Teachers' public examination will be held at the Court House, in Brainerd, on March 5th, 6th, 8th, 9th, 12th and 13th. No private examinations will be granted before April 1st.

NEW YORK CITY CONTRASTS.

The Busiest Quarters In the Daytime Are the Quietest at Night.

It is by very force of contrast that the quietest places in New York at night are those which are noisiest by day—to wit, the great shipping and warehouse quarters. From the foot of Forty-second street, on the east, clear around the island to the New York Central railroad slips at the foot of Sixtieth street, on the west, there are during the day the rush of traffic, the clatter of hoggies, the rumble of trucks, the classic apostrophes of the truckmen, the building up and demolition of pyramids of merchandise on the wharves and the quick moving streams of men loading and unloading craft from here, there and everywhere.

But at night all this great belt of activity is quiet and deserted save in an occasional spot where there is an extra rush on some piece of work. The streets are filled with empty trucks and carts. There is the erratic glimmer of lanterns and the faint sound of horses feeding in unoccupied stables. The shadowy figures of watchmen move slowly about, the ship lanterns rise and fall with the tide, and square patches of light mark the ships' companionways and the seattle holes of the canalboats. Across the street the restaurants and saloons are open and sometimes noisy, but along the waterside it is as quiet as the river itself.

The contrast is even greater in the great business blocks along Greenwich street on the one side and those abutting on Water street on the East river, those wonderful sections of the city where the products of the world are not only dealt in, but actually handled; where offices are few and the warehouses bursting with riches. During the daylight hours there is no cease to the movement here—not the movement of people, but the movement of goods. It is not the prestissimo movement either that one sees over the crowded thoroughfares of travel, but the open, largo movement of cargoes on wheels drawn by ponderous beasts of burden. It is the extent, not the rapidity, of the business that is bewildering. It is as though all the world had turned merchant and was trading here. And then, when the dusk comes on, a strange loneliness comes down on everything. The roaring trucks go off, and their absence almost changes the whole character of the locality. Great iron doors are banged to, specks of light show where the shipping clerks are laying out their plans for next morning's first job, the narrow streets take on unaccustomed airs of quiet and are seen to be oven narrower and dirtier than they were thought to be when filled from house to house with moving loads of clean packages, and when the last clerk locks the door and scurries away to the lighted and lively streets it is as though the very spirit of loneliness had taken possession of the place.—New York Sun.

Beware of the Street Car Strap.

A Pittsburger went to his physician a few days ago complaining of a dull ache in his left forearm. He had never had rheumatism, but thought his pain must come from that malady. After describing it the doctor said, "You have been using your office in the cable car, don't you?" "Yes." "You seldom get a seat?" "True enough." "You have formed the habit of holding to the strap with your left hand?" "Since you mention it, I know that is so, though I had not thought of it." "That is the cause of the pain you feel. For an hour a day, more or less, your left arm is held in an unnatural upraised position, and it has begun to tell upon you. You can relieve the ache with this ointment which I shall give you, but a cure can only be effected by ceasing to support yourself by hanging to a strap."

Answers from Eminent Men of History.

"I made an interesting discovery when I was at Niagara Falls," said a tourist. "It was that the hackmen there have a strong sense of humor. One afternoon, when I was returning to my hotel with an empty purse and tired out by the importunities of the thousand and one sharks who infest the village, I stopped to buy a cigar. Thoughtlessly I struck a match against the wheel of a cab. Immediately the driver came ringing up to me and yelled:

"'Hi, there, that'll cost you half a dollar.' I was so nervous that for a moment I thought he was in earnest and stared blankly at him. 'Well,' he added indulgently, 'I'll let you off this time.'

"Then he and the other johns standing around burst into laughter. They appreciated their reputation."
