AYER'S PILLS

"I would like to add my testimony to that of others who have used Ayer's Pills, and to say that I have taken them for many years, and always derived the best results from their use. For stomach and liver troubles, and for the cure of headache caused by these derangements, Ayer's Pills cannot be equaled.

When my friends ask me what is the best remedy for disorders of the stomach, liver, or bowels, my invariable answer is, Ayer's Pills. Taken in season, they will break up a cold, prevent la grippe, check fever, and regulate the digestive organs. They are easy to take, and are, indeed, the best all-round family medicine I have ever known."—Mrs. Mary Jonesor, 308 Rider Avenue, New York City.

WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.

Square Type.

The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The square type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Used chiefly by the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and practicability. Both of these types belong to the busy man, or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine presents specimens of new ideas, and engravings in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's doings for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and thought. Demorest's Monthly will delight all these with its rich store of literary attractions and beautiful illustrations. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, and Demorest will please in the magnificent oil-plates of roses, 16x24 inches, reproduced from the original paintings by Prang, and other exquisite floral pictures in family and home adornment, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $30.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. The Philosophic Artistic Type indicates entire pictures in miniature in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a delightful of art works of the highest order. The Practical Type gives the thumb of the thinker, who will be deeply interested in those departments which, in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling, in fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's Family Magazine, and the long and crowned Queen of the Monthlies, Send in your subscription with the cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one, a Prang $30 Panorama Masterpiece, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. BUSINESS MEN'S PICNIC.

The Excursion to Leech Lake on Tuesday Was a Great Success.

One of the most pleasant occasions in the memory of the Brainerd people was the excursion to Leech Lake on Tuesday under the direction of the business men. All day Monday a drizzling rain descended much to the discomfiture of the originators of the trip and those who had set their hearts on going, and probably resulted in keeping a hundred or more people from enjoying what was really the most pleasant day's outing of many seasons.

Tuesday morning broke bright and clear with the sun shining, and before the party reached its destination old Sol had dried the rain from the trees and ground, in fact, if the day had been especially ordered, it could not have been more perfect. The time for leaving had been announced for 7 o'clock, but as is invariably the case on such occasions, there was some delay, and it was 8 o'clock when the train left the Brainerd & Northern Minnesota depot. The cars were backed down to Kindred street and First Ave., where the majority of the excursionists got aboard, the street cars being crowded and many walked to the train. There were seven coaches and necessary cars for boats and provisions. The ride through the new section of country opened to civilization and settlement by the building of the B. & N. railroad was enjoyed by the 342 men, women and children who were on board, and as very few had been over the line before, there were constant exclamations of delight as the train bore its load of human freight past the many beautiful lakes which dot the country to the north, on many of which the road runs almost at the water's edge. Along the route here and there are settler's cabins, with a patch of ground neatly cultivated, showing that civilization is closely following the building of the railroad. A short stop was made at Parker's, and also at Barclay's, the latter place being where the road crosses Pine River. At the latter place Geo. Barclay has built a mammoth hotel, and also runs a store and saloon in the same building. Mr. Barclay was there years before the railroad was thought of and carried on his business in log buildings, but keeping up with the times in improvement he has now as fine a building would be expected in a town of 5000 people. He also has a fine farm, although there is no town at the station, the country is fertile and quite well settled in that vicinity. The excursion train pulled into Lothrop a little after 10 o'clock, and here the train stopped for fifteen minutes, the band playing for the edification of the people who had turned out to welcome the excursionists. Lothrop is an original town, probably the only one of its kind in the United States to-day. It is built in the midst of a swamp with business buildings put up of logs here and there where a dry spot could be found, without regard for regularity, and in many instances resting on piling. But the people of Brainerd who did not go have heard all about Lothrop from those who did and we will not attempt a description.

Lothrop is six miles from the lake and as the work of ballasting the track has just begun, the train was run very carefully over this piece of road, consuming thirty minutes. Once at the grounds the people swarmed from the train like so many bees from a hive, and soon the point land selected for their reception was occupied by the pleasure-seekers. The two steamers, the Monarch, owned by Frost & Shaw, and N. Dally's boat, were tied up to a dock at the grounds and accommodated many who wished to visit the agency. An arrangement had been made for the Indians to come in force, and agree to the picnic grounds and give canoe races and dancing, but for some reason unexplained the Indians failed to come, and sent couriers to inform the people that exhibitions would be given at the reservation. The committee had also arranged to feed the tribe of red men, and give suitables prizes to winners of games. Probably one-half the excursionists availed themselves of the opportunity to go over to the agency, and they were highly entertained, witnessing the weird dances of the aborigines. Here also took place the game of ball between the grocers and barbers, the former winning out victorious by a score of 12 to 2, the barbers claiming, however, that the grocers took advantage of them by picking up three athletic young bucks who almost knocked the cover off the ball every time they came to bat.

The excursion train left the lake on the homeward trip at 6:30, arriving at Brainerd at 9 o'clock without an accident of any description to mar the pleasure of the day.

A Real Journey.

Perhaps a couple of decades ago it was that Jules Verne, that ingenuous juggler with geographical facts and scientific probabilities (and impossibilities) described in vivid style the supposed voyage of a wonderful submarine vessel driven by electricity. A faint shadow of his gorgeous picture has been given us by some electrically guided torpedo boats, but the story still remains a fancy rather than even a probability. However romantic it might be to voyage "twenty thousand leagues under the sea," were that a possibility, it would be far more profitable and interesting to take a journey of seven thousand miles (and return) through the prosperous and populous states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and Montana, observing people, their variety, their industrious people, their growing cities and towns, studying their resources in crops, timber and mines, and noting what has been done in a generation to transform the wilderness into a cultivated country, the home of nearly fifteen millions of people. The traveler would return with his mind stored with material for a score of books, and could choose history, statistics or poetry as his theme. Such a journey could be made by taking a trip over the lines of the Burlington Route, which traverses or penetrates all the states named above, and reaches nearly all their principal cities. Your home ticket agent can supply you with tickets via this route to Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis, Omaha, Kansas City, Denver, and hundreds of other places East, South and West. For more particular information, address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

HE WAS A MAD BIRD.

The Sparrow Thought a Joke Was Being Played Upon Him.

"You never saw such a mad sparrow in your life as one I saw one spring day," said Van Tope. "This sparrow was building a nest, and he flew down beside a goodly lot on the pavement, where he found what he probably supposed was a beautiful, straight piece of straw. It happened to be a string, however, and the other end of it was caught on a nail in the box.

"But the sparrow wist not that it was so, and he grabbed the end of the string and started gayly away. Of course he soon brought up with a round turn, as the sailors say, and found the piece of string jerked away from him. He lit on the ground and looked around to see what impudent and envious sparrow had tackled him for his string. He looked as though he was ready to lick any sparrow in that block who should set claim to his string. After standing around as if daring the other fellow to knock a chip off his shoulder, and the other fellow not showing up, he grabbed his string and started off. Again he was yanked back by the string, and when he lit he fairly danced around in his wrath. You could just imagine him calling that other sparrow all sorts of names. He hopped around the goods box to find him and lit on the edge to peep in. After waiting a reasonable length of time for his tormentor he started off again, and again was yanked back.

"This seemed to get to him. He was dead sure some other sparrow was putting up a game on him, and no one could imagine him saying that he did not care so much for the dod rotted string, but that he hated to be fooled with in this way by some young bantling of this year's hatch. Then an idea struck him. He flew off and got Mrs. Sparrow. He told her about the matter, and after giving her instructions from a neighboring tree he posted himself on a limb just above the box and sent for Mrs. Sparrow to dally with the string. You could see he wanted the teaser to play his pranks on the old lady. He would be watching him and then would swoop down and just thump the feathers off that sparrow. I could see him chuckling at the thought of the fun he would have.

"The old lady started away with the string, and she, too, was yanked back. Mr. Sparrow was keeping an eye upon her, and when he failed to see the mysterious tormentor appear he was obviously very much surprised. He got down and walked all around the string and scratched his head. Then he got mad and commenced to jaw at Mrs. Sparrow. It was awfully natural. She protested that it was not her fault. Had he not himself been treated the same way? Well, with that they both grabbed hold of the string and started off, but with no better luck than before. Then the sparrow flew at that string and commenced to worry it. He pecked at it and tugged at it and dragged it around while he got red in the face and used every blackguard sparrow language, but he could not get away with it.

"Finally Mrs. Sparrow, with female tact, came to the rescue and said that after all she did not believe that was a good string for their business, and they did not want the string anyway. Mr. Sparrow agreed with her and said he believed at first the blamed thing wasn't any good, but he thought he would take it home for her to see anyhow. And with that they flew away. It's my opinion there are lots bigger fools in the world than sparrows."—Washington Star.

The Village Blacksmith.

Progress is seldom picturesque. Science and sentiment disagree. It is, however, with a certain lingering regret that we contrast the walk with all the old time ways and customs swept away one by one. Even the blacksmith's forge, with its glowing embers and its comfortable sense of its huge bellows, will be missed. But it is doomed now—doomed by the success of the electric welding and heating apparatus, which will bring a bar of iron to white heat almost instantaneously. It is one of the peculiarities of the nineteenth, and manifestly one of its advantages, that it is possible to heat a horseshoe or rod of iron without affecting any part of the tongs which hold it. It has been demonstrated in a most definite manner that the work can be done not only more quickly but more economically than by the old fashioned process. This is sufficient. The village blacksmith must follow the rest and become an electrician.—Family Magazine.

Politeness In Company.

"It isn't polite to sleep in company," said a proper aunt to a little boy whose head was bobbing wearily when she called.

"Ain't it?" he said, starting up. "Why, last night when you left me with Mr. Hall and sister she said 'Go, dear, and take a nice nap on the other sofa.' And just as I was dropping off I heard him say, 'What a nice, quiet, healthy boy Bobbie is!'"—Newark Call.

Negro Burial Societies.

The burial societies are numerous. It is the ambition of every colored person to belong to one of these pernicious funeral, and this is got by pooling their interests. The dues of the burial societies are much larger than those of the matrimonial associations, being usually $1, and when a member dies there is a fund of $200 or $300 to be paid out and to furnish flowers and carriages and pay the expenses of a band. It is usual to hold all funerals on Sunday, too, so as to secure a larger attendance.—Savannah Letter in Chicago Record.

Only an Emperor.

William II is not the only German emperor who has dabbled in music. The Emperor Charles VI was congratulated on his skill by the composer Fuchs, who said to him, "What a pity, sire, you are not a conductor!" To this Charles VI replied: "Well, it can't be helped. I am only an emperor and must make the best of it."

PROLOGUE.

Upon a Heap of Stones.

"Josh, I can't go much further, my limbs are giving way under me."

"Rest here a minute, father, on this heap of stones, perhaps you'll feel better presently."

The speakers were a man and a boy who, together with a little girl, were wending their weary way over the bleak, wind swept Wiltshire downs in the direction of London. In all directions the eye wandered over a great undulating track of stubble fields, from which the corn had not long been cleared here and there relieved by a patch of grass land. In summer time, when covered by a luxuriant golden grain, the landscape was a charming one, but on that bleak October evening, with low, heavy, black clouds driven across the sullen gray sky by moaning fitful gusts of wind that chilled the poor pedestrians to the bone, it was as cheerless a prospect as one could imagine.

A long, long way down in the hollow of the road, a few houses could be dimly seen, but they were at least two miles from where they stood, which behind them no habitation was in sight.

They were tramps. The man was a wretched looking object; the most miserable rags that hung about left exposed his chest and arms and his naked toes peeped through the broken uppers of shoes that were tied on to the feet only by means of pieces of string; a beard of a fortnight's growth rendered yet more repulsive the corpse-like face with its hollow cheeks and sunken eyes, the latter over which the wind blew the long, matted hair, was bloodshot, and by a battered and almost crownless hat.

The boy like his father was ragged, shirtless, and also shoeless. A shock of red hair was the only covering of his head; his face was tanned and freckled by exposure to the atmosphere and had the wolfish look of hunger upon it. Had it been washed and the hair arranged, some people would have called it handsome, but it had a sullen, evil expression, that, while it might have fascinated would, at the same time, have repelled. He might have been about nine or ten years of age.

The girl was not more than five. A petticoat and a thin cotton frock were all the clothing that protected her from the keen wind. A white, wan face, blue with cold, and with a pinched look upon it; and you have the third and the last of the group.

The man sat down upon the heap of stones the boy had pointed to, or rather dropped upon them, for he said:

"Josh," he said, faintly, "I am dying!"

"No! no bad as that, father," said the boy; but there was no sympathy in his tone—it was hard and indifferent.

But at those awful words the little girl crept closer to him, with a look of fear in her eyes.

"Is there nowhere you can get any help?" said the man, and his lips seemed scarcely capable of forming the words.

"Where do you think would give us help?" said the boy with a bitter sneer that made him look positively diabolical. "Are there a casual ward or a workhouse in Marlborough, nor a workhouse. Perhaps you think they'd ask us to sit by bed and some port wine at one of the farm houses?"

"Let me go," said the little girl, "I'll run down to the houses and beg 'em to come."

"Yes, little Lucy, go," said Josh, spurning them upon the stones beside his father. "She'll get more than you or I should; they'll be more likely to do something for her. Cut off, Lucy, and be sharp about it. Give 'em plenty of sobs, and say he's the best father on the face of the earth."

Before he had finished speaking the poor little thing was flitting away in the direction of the houses we have before mentioned, and in a few minutes the tiny figure was but a mere speck in the gloaming.

"What a hard young brute you are to let that child go," groaned the dying man.

"If I'm hard and a brute, it's you that's taught me to be so," answered the boy sullenly.

"Don't speak to me like that. I tell you I'm dying," sobbed the man.

The boy made no reply; never even looked up, but began playing with the stones.

"Josh," said the man, again raising himself feebly upon his elbow, "I know I've been harsh and cruel to you, but it was for your good, my only fault I am in this state now, Josh, and I don't know what I have gone through how I have been wronged and driven to made me what I am. Josh, instead of lying here, a dying man—as I am—upon a heap of stones on the roadside, I ought to be riding in my carriage, and you, instead of looking like a young shoeless, and a miserable vagabond, ought to be at Harrow or Eton; but for one man—one man, who robbed me of my birthright—my stepbrother, he turned my father's heart against me with lies. I was distinherited, and he got all that was mine. Josh, I was born a gentleman, Josh, would you like to be reformed upon that man that made you and me beggars?"

The man told the story with many gasps, but quivered with excitement that reanimated for a moment the expiring flame of life.

Gradually the boy's stolid apathy had melted and he had fixed his sunken eyes upon his father.

At the last question, he clenched his small fist and muttered with his clenched teeth:

"I should like to kill him."

"Ha, ha! you're a good boy. I've got his name written down and where he lives; you shall have it; some time or other you may have a chance, you may—you may."

He fumbled among his rags, and after a minute drew forth a dirty scrap of paper, which the boy eagerly clutched, then he fell back with a faint groan and the boy stooped over him thinking that all was over, but for the short, quick breathing told him that his father still lived.

The cold, dreary night was fast closing in, and the low hunting clouds grew darker and darker; the distant uplands mingled with the horizon, and a chilling grayness was falling like a pall upon the earth. Down in the hollow, whither the child had gone, a light or two began to twinkle.

Not a sound was to be heard save the rustle of the wind as it swept over the stubble and through the hedges, bringing with it the first of a sleety rain.

Roused out of his apathy by the story he had heard, the boy began to realize the horror of the situation. He knew his father had been driven away from a low fever and an agnish cold for many weeks, and that he had been growing weaker and weaker from day to day.

"Father, father," he whispered, in a voice that trembled with fear, "how do you feel?"

There was no answer, only a gasp.

The boy lifted his hand; it was cold and clammy and lay in a dead weight in his.

With an irresistible impulse of terror he sprang up and looked wildly up and down the road.

There was not a sound to be heard save now and again the rustling of the wind; there was no creature in sight.

How he wished he had not sent little Lucy away; she would have been some company, and it was horrible to be alone.

For a few moments he stood in the middle of the road, looking up and down in the vain hope of some human creature passing that way, but no one came.

Then fearfully he went back to the heap of stones.

His father was lying shrunk in a heap just as he had left him He stooped down and called:

"Father! father!"

Not even a gasp this time; and he could hear no sound of breathing.

Tremblingly he laid his hand upon the face. It leaped back again as though he had touched a hot iron, for instinctively he knew that he had touched death.

Then with a cry, he started off and ran down the road towards the village of Marlborough.

Darker and darker grew the night, and the clouds seemed to rest on the earth and all was one blank dim mass, save where a light twinkled here and there in the distance.

Over the heap of stones where the dead man lay the wind swept while periodically, as though trying to rouse the dead, and bandy with it a white sheet that presently began to dip upon him like a shroud.

But the bitter blast could chill him no more; he was beyond the reach of cold, and hunger, and heat, and thirst.

That poor shrunken, heap of mortality that was all that remained of a strong, shrill shuddering from head to foot, fine handsome young fellow, for whom no door upon earth should have been closed, whose hearts and forgot duty, honor and truth.

He had been born and reared in luxury, and been waited upon, smart of life's ease, and he had never known what it was to be hungry, to have a roof over his head, or a five-and-thirty years of age he lay down to die upon a heap of stones of cold and hunger.

The Old, Old Story.

CHAPTER I.

Fourteen years have passed away since that autumn night, and our readers must suppose that Josh Marlborough is reported, on one calm, warm, summer's evening to that cockney's paradise, Hampstead Heath.

Those who know this place only by report know it as a very resort of Bill's ville's on bank holidays, and the rough element that then swarms and revels, have a vague notion that it is a green, rural waste, quite unworthy the appellation of a common.

And yet the lover of the picturesque may travel many miles in search of any other land before he will find a more charming landscape than he may behold from the northern side of the heath, looking toward Highgate and Finchley, with their rising expanses of the handsome and costly villas.

Even the hand of the destroyer, that in time would have made the place a thoroughfare for the world, has left many beauties by creating an undulating surface of valley and hillock, which when covered by the golden broom, the purple heather, and the green bracken, presents a picture of exquisite beauty.

The botanist can be more grateful to the Londoner than to escape from his surroundings of brick, his chess, heavy atmosphere, and, mounting to those heights, forget for a time himself upon the soft, springy turf, or the hillock, while the rich perfume of the wooden seats beneath the shelter of overhanging trees, and the sun-lit expanse of the country, lulls him up to the luxury of sunlight, and the joy of existence.

On the evening we have chosen to conduct the reader to the spot, the air was ringing with the shouts and laughter of children, as they chased each other up and down the hill sides, and among the bramble and the tall fern that grew here and there up people were strolling in all directions, enjoying the sweet, soft atmosphere and the mild sunshine that so declined away.

Among the latter were a youth and a girl, evidently lovers, for they kept close to themselves upon a piece of rising ground, looking northward and commanding one of the finest prospects that the Heath can boast.

The youth had not seemed to bestow much attention upon the landscape beneath him, though immediately on his arrival he had pointed out a few objects to the young lady, but then they were in the conversation that engaged all their energies.

The youth might have been twenty, certainly not more; he was a fine handsome young fellow, with dark eyes and hair, a fine complexion glowing with health and a form and expression of face that would win him friends wherever he went.

His companion looked about eighteen or nineteen, was a fair-haired, blue-eyed girl, extremely pretty, with a slight, soft, spring turf, or the hillock, while figure for her age, well proportioned figure.

Both, by their dress and bearing, were evidently not of the working class of society.

"Godfrey," the girl was saying "even if we were not so absurdly young, there are so many things to ponder before marrying."

"Oh, we needn't get married for a year or so," said the boy, "but I am twenty-one if shall be a rich man."

"Ah! it is not money question," answered the girl quickly. "As if I for a moment cared about that, Rosy!"

"You cannot know your own mind at twenty; a few months more you will see some one you could have loved better, and then we should both be miserable."

"I shall never see any one that I can love as much as you, Rosy, I feel quite sure of that; and if anything were to happen to separate us I should never marry."

An elder who had heard this mere boy with such words would have smiled, yet he could not but have been impressed with the earnestness of the conviction with which they were spoken.

"You forget what I am, my birth, Godfrey; do you suppose that your uncle would ever consent to your marriage with a nameless orphan that his brother had taken from the workhouse?"

"He adopted you, reared you as his own daughter, educated you as a lady; what objection can he offer?"

Rosamond shook her head; young as she was, she knew her uncle's regard to human nature than her companion.

"A year hence I shall be my own master, and not accountable to anybody," he replied, impetuously.

"But I shall," she answered gravely. "Godfrey, don't be angry with me, I am twenty-one I shall be a rich man."

"Oh! it is not money question," answered the girl quickly. "As if I for a moment cared about that!"

"Then it is Josh, Rosy."

"You cannot know your own mind at twenty; a few months more you will see some one you could have loved better, and then we should both be miserable."

"I shall never see any one that I can love as much as you, Rosy, I feel quite sure of that; and if anything were to happen to separate us I should never marry."

Good Show Coming.

"The Burglar" drew two big houses at the Academy of Music Sunday, and a better attraction has not graced the stage of that popular theatre this season. A comedy-drama of more than passing interest is the "Burglar" a play that is wholesome. The play was handsomely staged and is presented by an unusually capable company headed by Eugene and Anna Boyle Moore, two artists of unquestioned ability. The comedy work is exceptionally well done. Little Gertie Carlisle captured the audience at once with her wonderful acting and delightful singing.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

C. N. PARKER'S PROPOSITION.

The Council Will Consider the Matter of Calling a Special Election at Their Next Meeting.

The city council met in regular session on Monday evening with a full board present, and after reading the minutes of the last meeting the council adjourned until Wednesday evening, at which time the meeting was called to order with all members present.

Reports of the different city officers were read and accepted.

The clerk was instructed to issue an order for $40 to each of the five fire companies, to pay expenses of delegates to the state fire convention. A motion was made and carried to divide the $233.11 received from the state auditor for state fire appropriation equally among the five companies.

The communication from Mayor Halsted, stating that Patrolman Quinn had resigned and that he had appointed Henry Hurley to fill the vacancy, raised quite a discussion, but Mr. Hurley was finally confirmed. It was the opinion of several of the aldermen that the police force was adequate without appointing another man, and especially so in the point of economy.

The following claims were audited:

City employes pay roll	$724 13
Street pay roll	237 00
Electric light pay roll	240 70
J. A. Sanborn, boarding prisoners	14 41
Tribune, printing	38 18
Oliver Burnett, killing dogs	29 00
G. H. Stratton, sanitary police	41 58
Slipp Bros., supplies	14 70

Several other bills, ranging from one to five dollars, were also allowed.

A motion was made and carried that the street commissioner be instructed not to use his own team on street work.

The superintendent of electric lights made a report to the council, stating that both armatures were now in order. Incorporated in the report was a statement that a number of citizens had asked that the domestic rates on lights be reduced to 25 cents each per month, the consumer to pay for all lamps burned out.

Geo. Keough was granted a liquor license and the bonds approved.

The city clerk was instructed to reply to a communication from the Ashland Co., in regard to a stone crusher, and requested to get prices and terms.

C. N. Parker made the following proposition in writing to the council regarding the purchase of the electric light plant:

To the Honorable, the City Council of the City of Brainerd:

GENTLEMEN:

Referring to the matter of my oral communication to you on the 17th of last month, relative to proposal to purchase the city's electric light plant:

I now desire to place my proposition before you in definite words and in tangible shape, so that there shall not be any misunderstanding as to the scope and details of the proposition.

In case the electric light plant is sold to me, I propose to organize and incorporate a combination of capital under the name of "Brainerd Public Works Company," a Brainerd institution with management and headquarters in this city.

With particular reference to the sale and purchase of the electric light plant, my proposition is as follows:

1. To unite the electric light property with the properties which I now own and control and with the properties on which I now hold an option, including the electric railway, the telephone system, the Brainerd dam and lands and rights therewith connected.

2. To incorporate the Brainerd Public Works Company on a basis of $500,000.00 capital, bonded in that amount; said bonds to be based on the consolidated properties, and for convenience hereinafter designated "consolidated bonds."

3. To set aside $200,000.00 of these consolidated bonds as a reserve fund to be used in the purchase of additional property when necessary to strengthen the original properties.

4. To use $300,000.00 of these consolidated bonds in the purchase of the original properties above mentioned, and in making immediate improvements.

5. In buying the electric light plant, I would pay as the purchase therefor the sum of $60,000.00, in manner following, namely:

I would place in the hands of a trustee the first $40,000.00 of bonds out of said $300,000.00 consolidated bonds, to provide for the payment of the $40,000.00 bonded indebtedness now existing against the plant and a first lien thereon. The remaining $20,000.00 electric bonds, so called, are not a lien on the plant; and I would require the city to give me the option of paying into the city treasury, as soon as the consolidated bonds are negotiated, a sum of money equal to said $20,000.00 electric light bonds, so called, and accrued interest, thus paying one-third of the purchase price.

If it is decided that the electric light plant shall be sold to me, it will be necessary, of course, for the city and myself to enter into a contract for such sale and purchase, the form of which contract can be hereafter determined.

6. If the electric light plant is agreed to be sold to me, on the conditions above set forth, I propose to build a new flume, new gates and to erect a new, substantial and suitable fireproof power house, and also to make other improvements involving an almost entire reconstruction of the plant, to increase its capacity and place it in first-class condition; and will guarantee that arc street lights and 16 candle power incandescent lights used by the city in public buildings will be furnished at prices not exceeding $8.00 per month for such arc street lights and twenty-five cents per month for such incandescent lights; and that the price of commercial and domestic lights will not be increased.

7. My whole proposition, however, is made with the proviso that for the next three (3) years, beginning with the year 1895 the assessed valuation of the water-power property and franchise for purposes of taxation shall not exceed $15,000.00, the electric street railway $10,000.00, the electric light plant $10,000.00 and the telephone system $2,000.00; and that the taxes now standing against the water-power property and franchise for the years 1892, 1891, 1892 and 1893, be settled on the basis of an assessed valuation of $15,000.00 per year. I am aware that this council does not have the authority to regulate the assessments or abate a portion of the back taxes, but the city council can recommend the proper steps to the board of county commissioners and use its best endeavors towards the accomplishments of these ends.

8. A further proviso affecting my whole proposition above outlined is the condition that the city council shall pass an ordinance granting me the authority to erect and maintain a gas plant, with the usual privileges connected therewith, for the purpose of supplying gas to consumers in the city for a period of twenty years.

9. I am aware of the legal provision that the city's electric light plant can not be sold until after a favorable vote by the legal voters of the city. This will necessitate the holding of a special election for that purpose. The expense of holding such special election need not deter the city council from considering my proposition, as I am willing to meet the entire expense thereof, and I hereby include that condition in my proposition, that is to say, I will pay the cost of all necessary printing and the fees of the judges and clerks of election for the day's work necessary to be performed by them.

C. N. PARKER.

Brainerd, Aug. 5th, 1895.

Messrs. Lum and Fleming were selected to act as attorneys for the city, with Ald. Lanson, Smith, Geo. Gardner, Adair and Rienthal, to confer with Mr. Parker in regard to drawing up contract and agreement and to report at next meeting.

The police committee were instructed to investigate condition of city jail.

The matter of closing up the old Crow Wing road was referred to the street committee.

Council adjourned.

Frary and Quinn led at the bat for Brainerd with four hits, each making two singles and two doubles, closely followed by Hill with a single and two doubles. ABSOLUTELY PURE

Sleeper Opera House August 12.

A good all around company presented Augustus Thomas' comedy-drama, "The Burglar," at the Queen's last night to a splendid house. Mr. Eugene Moore portrays the principal role, that of Wm. Lewis, the burglar, and he gave a fine interpretation of the character, his depiction of mental agony in the first act, and the sorrowful quiet death scene in the last, being good examples of histrionic ability. Mrs. Anna Boyle Moore, in the role of Alice, put all that silent sorrow that is characteristic of a blighted life, and was the recipient at the close of the second act of a number of bouquets from over the footlights. Little Gertie Carlisle gave a beautiful and natural embodiment of "Elzina" and completely won the audience by her artless acting and clever singing. The humorous portions were well handled, and without doubt the production is one of the most delightful of the season and is deserving of standing room audiences throughout the week.—Montreal Gazette.
