THE BEST FAMILY MEDICINE

She Has Ever Known. Words of Praise from a New York Lady for

AYER'S PILLS

"I would like to add my testimony to that of others who have used Ayer's Pills, and to say that I have taken them for many years, and always derived the best results from their use. For stomach and liver troubles, and for the cure of headache caused by these derangements, Ayer's Pills cannot be equaled.

When my friends ask me what is the best remedy for disorders of the stomach, liver, or bowels, my invariable answer is, Ayer's Pills. Taken in season, they will break up a cold, prevent la grippe, check fever, and regulate the digestive organs. They are easy to take, and are, indeed, the best all-round family medicine I have ever known."—Mrs. May Johnson, 308 Elder Avenue, New York City.

It is wonderful how opinions differ.

WE are sorry for the Journal and its co-educator, who does not particularly like the political methods of this paper, and there isn't very much doubt but that we will have occasion to feel sorry for them several times before the campaign is over. Congressman Towne does not bother us half as much as it appears to gall the Journal to have us say a good word for him.

Right to the Point.

The trouble with some republicans is that they do their fighting with their mouths, but never get out to the primaries and conventions, because it costs a little time and trouble, and may interfere with their business. They are greatly pleased when someone is nominated under the 16th inc, but they lend mighty little influence or effort during the melee.—Wadena Journal.

Those Shall Have None Other Gods but Me.

HONESTY THE BEST POLICY.

Why President Hayes in 1878 Vetoed the Standard Silver Dollar Coinage Act.

President Hayes believed that our national honor could not be too jealously guarded. In this he differed radically from our 16 to 1 statesmen, who are anxious not only to see our government repudiate one-half of its debts, but to see one-half of all debts repudiated. It might be well for these hasty statesmen to study the veto message of President Hayes on the Bland silver coinage act (passed over his head) which "made legal tender silver dollars worth, in the bullion market, only 90 or 92 cents." He said that "the law required the people to pay duties in silver or in silver certificates, which the depositors will, when they have received a sufficient amount to circulate, present to the treasury for redemption in coin, and thus compel the payment of silver for both the principal and interest of the public debt."

He said that nearly $600,000,000 of the funded debt then outstanding was issued since 1873, "when gold alone was the coin for which the bonds were sold, and gold alone was the coin in which both principal and interest were promised that the bonds would be paid." "These bonds," he continues, "entered into the markets of the world. They were paid for in gold when silver had greatly depreciated, and when no one would have bought them if it had been suspected that they would be paid in silver."

He believed that, in the judgment of mankind, it would be an act of bad faith not to guarantee that pre-existing debts should be paid in the same standard of legal tender when these debts were contracted—in other words, that the government should not legalize the breaking of contracts. "The standard of value," he said, "should not be changed without the consent of both parties to the contract. National promises should be kept with unflinching fidelity. There is no power to compel a nation to pay its debts. Its credit depends on its honor. The nation owes what it has led its creditors to expect. I cannot approve a bill which in my judgment stimulates the violation of sacred obligations. The obligation of the public faith transcends all questions of profit or public advantage. Its unquestionable maintenance is the dictate as well of the highest expediency as of the most necessary duty and should ever be carefully guarded by the executive, by congress and by the people."

He closed his message by saying that "it is my firm conviction that if the country is to be benefited by a silver coinage it can be done only by the issue of silver dollars of full value, which will defraud no man. A currency worth less than it purports to be worth will in the end defraud not only creditors, but all who are engaged in legitimate business, and none more surely than those who are dependent on their daily labor for their daily bread."

LARGER BY SEVENTEEN TOWNS.

The Court Holds that the Annexation of the Cass County Territory is Regular.

At last the vexed question of whether the annexation of the seventeen townships from Cass to Crow Wing county was regular or not has been settled, the court deciding in favor of the latter on Monday. A certified copy of the findings of the court is contained in the following:

STILLSON.

State ex rel. Geo. L. Hardy, Petitione, vs. David M. Clough, R. C. Dunn and Albert Berg, Commissioners. The Supervisors.

The proceedings of the Governor, Secretary of State and State Auditor under Gen'l Laws 1895, Ch. 296, so-titled "An act providing for the enlargement of counties by attaching thereto, and incorporating therein, territory from an adjoining county or counties," are neither judicial nor quasi judicial in their nature and cannot be reviewed on certiorari. Writ quashed.

OPINION.

It is here sought on writ of certiorari to review the proceedings of the Governor, Secretary of State and State Auditor under Gen. Laws 1895, Ch. 296, entitled "An act providing for the enlargement of organized counties by attaching thereto, and incorporating therein, territory from an adjoining unorganized county or counties."

The act provides that whenever there shall be presented to the Secretary of State a petition signed by not less than fifty-five per cent of the actual residents and legal voters of any unorganized county, as shown by the returns of the last preceding general election, praying that certain territory be attached from an adjoining unorganized county or counties, containing an accurate description of such territory and the boundaries thereof; and also a petition of like import signed by fifty-five per cent of the actual residents and legal voters of the territory proposed to be attached, as said county may appear as shown by the returns of said last preceding general election from all the voting precincts within said territory, which said petitions shall contain specified facts verified by the oaths of the legal voters signing the same; then the Secretary of the State shall at once file the petitions and notify the Governor and State Auditor of the receipt of the same, and they shall immediately meet and consider said petitions, and if they be found to conform to law, they, or a majority of them, shall so certify, and immediately thereupon the Governor shall issue his proclamation, attached by the Secretary of State, describing the facts that such petitions have been so filed and found conformable to law, and declaring the territory so described in the petitions detached from the unorganized county or counties of which it was formerly a part and attached to and incorporated within the organized county as prayed for in the petition. Upon the issuance of such proclamation the said territory shall thereupon become a part of the organized county.

Under the repeated decisions of this court these proceedings are neither judicial nor quasi judicial in their nature and cannot be reviewed on certiorari. We have often stated our views as to the office of the writ of certiorari and the nature of the proceedings that may be reviewed on it that it is wooly unnecessary to repeat them at this time. In Re Wilson 32 Minn. 145; Arnold v. County of Dodge 39 id. 385; Christlieb v. Hennepin County 41 id. 142; Meade v. County of Stearns 43 id. 313.

Neither in their nature, the manner of performing them nor in their effect when performed are the acts of the Governor, Secretary of State and State Auditor under this statute judicial or quasi judicial any more than were the acts of the city council in defining the legal limits of or of the county commissioners in forming a new town or school district which were considered in the cases cited.

The fact that a board or officer has, in the performance of their duty, to ascertain certain facts, as in doing so to determine what the law is, does not of itself render their acts judicial. The law is to be done every day by public bodies and officers in the discharge of purely legislative or executive acts. Neither does it render an act judicial in its nature because it, in a general sense, affects the relator's interests in common with those of other members of the public.

It is difficult to conceive of any legislative or executive act which does not in this way affect the interests of every member of the community. To render the proceedings of special tribunals, commissioners or municipal officers, judicial in their nature, they must affect the rights or property of the citizen in a manner analogous to that in which they are affected by the proceedings of courts acting judicially. Examples of this nature are proceedings in taking private property for public use and assessing the owners compensation, in making assessments for local improvements, and determining questions arising

A year or so since a man found a pocketbook containing $150 in cash on the sidewalk in Portland, Me. A card in the wallet showed that the money belonged to a bookkeeper of a business house in that town. The man returned the money to its owner, and as a reward, a bill of $3 which he owed the house was receipted.

McKwan Bros & Co.'s saw mill narrowly escaped destruction by fire in Bay City, Mich. Fifteen hundred cords of slabs west of the mill were destroyed. Oscar Brinn, a five-year-old boy, living with his parents, Peter Anna, Ill., found a package of what he supposed was morphine administered by his mother. He laid some of the powder on his tongue. The package was properly labeled on the wrapper. A mistake had been made, evidently by the packers, and instead of quinine, the bottle inside contained morphine.

An investigation going forward in New York shows that of the Italian immigrants who have arrived in this country since the beginning of the year, 7,065 admitted that they could not read or write their own language. This is about 25 per cent of the whole number arriving during that period. Such additions to the illiteracy of the United States are highly undesirable, and if they continue will become a political danger.

There are 2,000 miles of trestle structure in the United States, according to an estimate by the Forestry Bureau. This trestle work has to be replaced entirely every nine years, on an average, and every year timber aggregating 200,000,000 feet, board measure, is used for this purpose. Nearly all the timber is cut from the largest and finest trees. The annual expenditure on this work is estimated at about $7,000,000.

Two bold highwaymen held up what appeared to be a timid citizen of Grinnell, Iowa, the other night, and after relieving him of all his valuables, tried to intimidate him with an empty beer bottle. This made the victim angry, and after he had snatched the bottle and smashed it over the heads of both the robbers, disabling them until an officer on the beat, they discovered that they had tackled a college professor of bellas lettres.

With the extension of its system of irrigation California expects to supply the American demand for oranges, lemons, olives, limes, apricots, prunes, figs and grapes. Last year's orange crop in California shipped 203,014 tons of green and dried fruit, and Southern California 196,843 tons, a total of 899,857 tons. These exports, together with the shipments of vegetables, wines and brandy, made 48,571 car loads. Assuming new orchards lately been set out in California that its fruit production will soon be doubled. Already the state horticulturally, is one of the most important regions in the world.

John B. Leone, a Corsican who was found in a cellar in an insane condition was recognized by a traveling man who called him by name and gave him a rake of soap. In a few minutes he was himself and told the story of his life. He is a sculptor in soap, and his most famous work was the designing of Brooklyn bridge at the World's fair. He does not know how he came to be in the city, but thinks he was robbed in Chicago and put on a train for Joliet.

Potato Scab.

The Indiana Experiment Station sends out a newspaper bulletin on the prevention of potato scab by means of the corrosive sublimate treatment. The bulletin gives the details of the method of protecting potato seed against scab, but a repetition will not be unnecessary now. It is briefly described the method with sufficient precision to enable any one to comply with.

Put two ounces of corrosive sublimate (a poisonous substance that must be handled with care) dissolved in hot water in a stoneware or glass receptacle. When dissolved put into a wooden tub or barrel and add water enough to make fifteen gallons. Soak the potatoes intended for seed and let them remain for an hour and a half or two hours. After taking out of the bath, cut and plant as usual. The potatoes may be cut and dried some time, but as it is constantly growing weaker, the potatoes should be used in large quantities. Fresh solution should be added. Do not use metal vessels, and do not breathe the vapor nor persons or animals may drink it.

In this connection we note that at the New Jersey Experiment Station a series of experiments prove that flowers of sulphur scattered along the drills and mixed with the seed afford more effective for the prevention of the disease, corrosive sublimate dissolved, however, will be a vast improvement upon the planting of, untried seed, as the loss in dead and merchantable quality from scab is usually severe and the increase even in many cases destructive of the crop.

BOILERS EXPLODE

FATAL ACCIDENT OF A TUG BOAT ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

The Tug Boat Harry Brown of Pittsburg is Wrecked by the Explosion of Her Boilers Near Tiptonville, Tenn.—Pilot Jones and the Crew Are Known to Have Lost Their Lives.

Vicksburg, Miss., May 12.—One of the most terrible river disasters of recent years occurred last night about twenty miles below Island No. 40, by the boat Harry Brown of Pittsburg, steamer Kentucky, New Orleans, and steamer Bee, both of Memphis, were coming up the river together. The Harry Brown was ahead and the Bee was following. Suddenly the boilers of the Harry Brown exploded and a most excellent steamer was blown to pieces. As reported, the bodies of three dead men who were brought here are at Staten's undertaking establishment and have been embalmed and will be sent to Pittsburg. The explosion occurred near the scene where the explosion occurred that her yawl was lowered and the survivors promptly manned and saved many lives that would have been lost if it had not been for their prompt service. Capt. Kline, master of the Brown, although seriously injured, remained on the after part of the cabin roof of the steamer and was thus blown by the explosion. He was seen this morning by a reporter and said:

"The after part of the cabin floated off from the boat and I was on the bottom of the river. I directed the efforts of the men who were at work and succeeded in getting out. Pilot Dan Kane were in the Brown's pilot house when the explosion occurred. It would be impossible for any one to live after the explosion, as the boilers exploded, as the darkness prevented any one seeing anything. It occurred so fast that every thing was lost than a minute. I have no blame to attach to any one, as the cause of the explosion will never be known, as the chief engineer, William Daughenbaugh, was one of the dead men."

The officers and boat crew speak in grateful praise of the kind treatment of the steamer St. Joseph, who picked them up and saved their lives. Capt. Kline expects to send the Brown's crew to their homes by the first boat soon as he receives instructions from Pittsburg. The coroner here held an inquest on the dead bodies and returned a verdict of accidental death.

TWO BOER CAUCUS.

Spaniards Make Another Capture of Insurgents.

Havana, May 12—It was decidedly announced to-day that the week would be one of unusual activity. Admiral Navarro, in conformity with the instructions received from the secretary of the naval tribunal, approved and confirmed the sentences of death passed upon the filibusters. The announcement that, in view of the high state considerations the cases of the filibusters would be referred to Madrid for decision to the supreme tribunal of appeals.

Two alleged filibusters, both citizens of the United States and said to have formed part of the Competitor expedition, have arrived here in custody from Bahia Honda. They were captured by the local guerrillas of Palma Soriano, under Capt. Ochoa. The steamer Teton has brought here a small boat which was found stranded on the coast by the mayor of Bermeza. The boat is believed to have belonged to a small expedition which has landed in the vicinity of the spot where the Competitor was sighted and captured.

Is Mamie Dahlgren Dead?

Washington, April 13.—In the Competitor case it can be authoritatively stated at the present time that the United States or Spanish government will prove execution of the death sentences upon American citizens until the views of the United States relative to the jurisdiction of the courts of the treaty of 1795, and the protocol of 1877, can be presented and considered. The announcement of the postponement of the execution rumored to-day of some weeks at least, and that the matter will be taken up by the diplomatic representatives of the United States and of Spain and be made the subject of such further correspondence on the interpretation to be given the treaty provisions between the two governments. In the effect will be to allay popular excitement both here and in Spain.

Weyler's Complaint!

Madrid, May 12.—The Liberal premier, Senor Canovas del Castillo, and the United States minister to Spain, Hon. Hannis Taylor, had a conference, the result of which is not known. It is reported that Capt. Gen. Weyler has cabled the Spanish government that it is impossible for him to proceed with the campaign, as the Spanish authorities at every moment are hampered by the writing and sending of America in Cuban affairs." It is understood that the United States government has presented fresh claims for heavy indemnities through the losses sustained by property owners to Americans, which have been burned by the insurgents. It is expected that these demands will lead to further complications.

FOR FREE COINAGE.

Montana Republicans Hold Their State Convention.

Butte, Mont., May 13. — The first in the Republican convention was organized this morning, declaring in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1 independently by the United States. We maintain that the financial policy principles of Republican faith should be the policy of the present congress of the United States and that ample legislation be enacted upon that subject at the earliest practicable moment. We denounce the demonetization of recently measure of equalizing the difference in wages and cost of living.

We denounce the Democratic and anti-seaboard combination of the state of Montana, which has no confidence of Republican traditions, rushed to the support of the Democratic administration and a Democratic majority in congress in securing the unconstitutional repeal of the 10 per cent tax, and we assert that the repeal of that law has entirely failed to accomplish a single beneficent result predicted by the enemies of silver."

Charles J. Johnson of Silver Bow offered a substitution that the delegates to St. Louis be left free to intervention if nothing is done for silver. The resolution was voted down and lost.

Senators Carter and Mantle and Congressman Hartman were nominated by acclamation as delegates at large. Thomas G. Marshall, J. W. Stivrelle and Alexander Ewart were chosen as the other three delegates. Marshall was a Dnocrat until a year ago.

Charged With Forgery.

San Claire, Wis., May 13. — A well dressed man, giving the name of J. F. Nimenich and claiming St. Paul as his home, was arraigned to-day on the charge of forgery. He waived examination and was remanded to jail. He had passed two forged checks, one for $20 and the other for $50, on two dry goods stores here. The checks were drawn on a Chippewa Falls bank. Nimonich says that he has a wife and child in St. Paul, but the authorities do not believe it. He weighs about 200 pounds, is six feet tall and wears gold spectacles. His real name is not known. It is believed he is wanted for forgery in Oshkosh also.

His Good Name Restored.

Dickinson, N. D., May 13.—Perhaps the most important criminal case tried in the district for years, which resulted to-day in the acquittal of Horace F. Merrill, a well-to-do sheep man, who was charged with killing cattle. Two large cattle companies were interested in the prosecution. The state's witnesses proved to be worthless characters, one of whom is now in jail at Fort Buford for stealing government property. Mr. Merrill leaves a good reputation and the jury's verdict is universally satisfactory.

Loyalty Shot.

Antioch, T. T., Special.—Chas. Homes, a full blood Indian, was executed by shot at the Pushmataha court grounds, thirty miles west of here, for the murder of Jackson Homes, his father-in-law. At 10:30 Homes was led out to the place of execution, religious services had been held, and placed on a pine box, which served for a coffin, from the door. A blindfold was placed over his eyes, and two deputy sheriffs stepped forward and fired simultaneously with bullets from their Winchesters, both deputy Sheriff Bob Jack and Deputy Sheriff Jackson Jones, side the court house door. Jackson missed Homes, but the ball struck the lower heart, striking two inches beneath. The murderer lived for some minutes after falling. Jackson Homes' wife was present, but did not seem to be affected to any great extent.

Rubber Mills Will Resume Work.

Woonsocket, R. I., Special—Superintendent Cumnock ordered today to start the rubber mill, employing 1,200 hands, on Monday. The Millville mill, employing 500 hands, will be started a week later. These mills of the Woonsocket Rubber company have been closed since Jan. 13, and many of the operatives have been reduced to the verge of starvation.

Frightful Crime Confessed.

Washington, Special.—All doubt concerning the murder of Elsie Kreyle, the sixteen-year-old daughter of a tenant farmer in the suburbs of the city, was set at rest by Lucy Hilliard, while defending her honor Monday, has been removed. Lucy Hilliard, a negress, whom the police captured yesterday at Herndon, Fairfax county, Va., confessed to the detectives.

The London Times correspondent at Pretoria in a dispatch published this morning gives some further details, whose term of four years expires on Aug. 6 of the present year.

A Brother's Devotion

And as he replaced his goods in his pack, Abraham chirped in blander, "So long, my friend, I was quite sure that some day we should both drink out of the same glass," and then he left his way with his pack to the back part of Sir Loghlen's mansion, and telling the baronet's servants that he could afford none to be generous, since the young master had just purchased freely and paid him generously, found ready customers in the domestics for one of whom, to his great praise be it spoken, the charge more than three times the value of the articles which he sold to them.

CHAPTER VI.

A Deep Plot.

Stanley Claremont, to forward an especial purpose which he had in view, insinuated to his uncle a proposal to the effect that their guest was not deriving any very great amount of gratification from his present residence at the mansion.

Into very frequent fits of abstraction had Sydney fallen since he had been Sir Loghlen's guest; the cause of which will be readily surmised by the reader; and his general absence of mind of late had been more than once observed by the baronet.

And as Sir Loghlen was very easily brought to believe that time was none in reality being rather slowly and drearily with Sydney Drummond.

And could be done for his young guest's enlivenment.

Stanley was ready with his answer to that question.

A few young friends of his own, he suggested, but before he could say who if his advice were adopted he could safely promise that Mr. Drummond would soon be cured of the ennui with which he was now so evidently troubled.

Sir Loghlen had conceived a particular liking for his present guest, and so readily consented to that which would make the young man's time pass more pleasantly while beneath his entertainer's roof.

Stanley, then, lost not a moment in sending out invitations to five or six of the most reckless young men of all his acquaintance; and by the following morning all whom he had invited had arrived.

And Stanley took good care that neither his uncle's guest nor himself should again approach Sir Loghlen until all the invitations had been fulfilled to their way and entirely beyond recall.

And recalled, if that had been possible, they evidently would have been when the lovers—we now may safely term them so—had been told by the baronet of that which his nephew had said, and of that which, under permission, he had done.

Frances was furious against her cousin for the justly termed his wily, underhand conduct; and Sydney protested with a shudder that the baronet could not doubt, that in all his life before he had known any one so perfectly happy moments as had been many of those which he had already enjoyed at Sir Loghlen's guest.

And as so he said, Sydney, perhaps unconsciously to himself, glanced toward Frances, whose eyes sank beneath the gaze, and whose cheek was suffused with a rosy blush.

But the mischief had been done, the friends whom Stanley had invited had arrived, and few and far between became the opportunities for those conversations, in which indeed but little had been said, and those rambles together—back-forgetting, for the time, how impossible, in the future, appeared the realization of the dream in which they were indulging—made this greatly-abused world to them a paradise.

Boisterous, "fast" young men were those friends of Stanley's who destroyed all peace and comfort within the house; and as much as the lovers, though from far different causes, did the baronet detest their presence in his mansion.

In the dusk of evening, four days before that one on which the baronet had fixed for his departure toward London with Sydney, and his nephew and niece, Stanley Claremont and Abraham Natter were together, and in earnest and apparently whispered conversation, in a thick plantation which belonged to Sir Loghlen of Kilbrody, and which was but a few hundred yards from his mansion.

The peddler was now well muffled up and without his pack.

He had received the instructions which he had received from Stanley, and had taken good care not to be seen but in a neighborhood which it was generally believed he had quitted several days before.

After many words had been exchanged between these two men—so different in station, but so perfectly equal in sagacity—the peddler, interlingly shaking his head, grumbled forth, "Ting! It will be a very hard job!"

"Not to a man of your genius, Abraham," flatteringly said Stanley. And continued: "So how many days will a good fellow, and then I shall be the best to my friend the baronet in Sydney Drummond the man whom you were seeking?"

Whatever might be the secret which united the baronet to Sydney Drummond's friend, and which he had no fear of the world, should be dishonored.

"But how am I to make my way to his room?" asked Abraham.

"I will contrive all that for you," was the reply.

It was perfectly dark that night when these two men quitted the plantation. Stanley proceeding toward the mansion, followed at some little distance by the accomplice.

Three evenings afterward, and again when it was nearly dark, Stanley and the peddler were once more together, and earnestly conversing in the plantation.

"And tis, then, for to-night?" Abraham had asked.

"Of what are you talking?" cried Stanley. "You don't mean that to-night it must be, or not at all."

"And just the sum which you have named?"

"Precisely that sum," Stanley replied; "neither more nor less."

"And that sum I am able to retain as an instinct of the document which you have promised me?"

That was already arranged," said Stanley.

"But will you be able to manage so exactly, then?" the peddler asked.

And, interrupting—"That is not your affair, you know," Abraham," Stanley unwillingly said.

"And at what time to-night am I to quietly my share in all this little business?" the peddler demanded.

That Stanley was not yet prepared to tell his associate, but said that if Abraham would meet him at a spot he specified after they then were, he would find in the hollow of a tree to which Stanley pointed a letter for him, on which the hour would be written.

And the peddler then reproached Stanley for still withholding from him for writing, which had all along possessed him, and cunningly suggested that therefore a very sufficient watch might be made to serve at once and the same time as an indication of the hour which had been fixed on, and as a well-earned recompense to his faithful servant.

"When you have settled the hour," pursued Abraham, "just bring to it the hands of your watch; then a boor turn with to her, and the engagement is broken, and the watch once no longer; then place it to the hollow of the tree that I shall find it, and put the possibility of mistaking one hour for another."

That Abraham considered more simple than writing, and that watch could neither deceive nor betray.

But Stanley hesitated. The watch was as we have just said, of considerable value; a work of art, with diamonds about it, and with some rare and costly enamel, and had scarce color attached to the bronzed.

And seeing Claremont's hesitation, the peddler said, "I will be able to buy another, you know. I could sell you one; I have a dozen or so in my pack."

Stanley reflected. Very unpalatable was to him the necessity of purchasing a present; but then, to destroy a rival—to remove forever the danger to his wife and his fortune—that was to say, his future husband's fortune—he would have would be worth a whole warehouse of watches!

And so Abraham was told that it should be as he desired; and as Stanley Claremont returned toward the mansion, he was saying to himself that the Loghlen's entire fortune would not pretty compensate him for all the degradation, the base humiliation, the foul dishonor which he had undergone in the service of the contemptible, almost able peddler.

Two hours later, as he had been directed, Abraham Natter was again in the plantation; and, thrusting his hand into the hollow of the tree before him bidden to, drew from it Stanley's watch. It was by the moon-beams of the night see its face. "One o'clock," he said to himself. "I don't make a mistake, and being out of bed so late; but it can't be helped."

In the last night that the guests then assembled there were to remain at Sir Loghlen's, a splendid banquet was a grand and final carousal of the friends of Stanley Claremont.

Of that party, Sydney Drummond tried every means, save that of rude refusal to avoid becoming one.

It was about half-past eleven when his uncle, considerably the worse for the wine he had taken, and which his friends were growing dull, proposed cards.

The proposal was received with boisterous approval by every one, except only Sydney, who, when solicited, declined to play.

But after all attempts to urge him thereto was Sydney firm, until Stanley had said pleadingly to his friends, that Drummond, "whom he loved as a brother," would be ill-luck rendered it unnecessary that Claremont should resort to any trickery to attain the object in hid in view.

In about a quarter past twelve o'clock Sydney's losses amounted to upwards of forty pounds; and he wished then to withdraw from the game, but was persuaded by Stanley and his friends that his fortune would change, and so continued and played on.

Stanley, having frequently cast his eyes toward the ormolu clock upon the chimney-piece at last suddenly started to his feet, and then looked the cards together, hurled them towards the fire-place, and, yielding to a mock fit of passion, declared that he would play no more play that night; that he was very sorry that it had been at all proposed, and that his uncle, when he should come to know what had been the result of the night's play at the last party, would be excessively angry.

And then he muttered, at the very top of his voice: "Perhaps you are not aware, gentlemen, that Sydney Drummond has but a hundred and twenty-five pounds!"

And hardly were those words uttered when the clock upon the mantle-piece struck "One!"

No one, but even Sydney Drummond himself, was at all pleased that play had been so suddenly addressed unanimously terminated.

Stanley's friends made a great outcry; and Sydney, having said, haughtily, that for his losses there was no occasion that Mr. Claremont should be under the least concern, quitted the room for the purpose of retiring to rest himself for the weakness he had displayed, proceeded to his own bed chamber.

When there he went to his portmanteau and gave from it a roll of bank notes; and, counting them over, murmured to himself while quivering his and trembling voice: "For grandmother, poor Tony!"

Having returned to the gambling party and paid his debts, amounting, Stanley knew, as just been stated, to a hundred and twenty-five pounds; He was about to retire, but was not allowed to do so.

He was compelled to remain until there was a general breaking up, and it was considerably past 2 o'clock before Sydney, utterly wretched and full of remorse for the folly he had been guilty of, had to done and dream painful dreams, to awaken suddenly in great terror ,and then to done and dream again.

Worn and haggard on the following day looked Sydney, and very sorrowful indeed the remarks which his quivering and trembling voice: "Perhaps you are not aware, gentlemen, that Sydney Drummond has but a hundred and twenty-five pounds!"

Stanley's friends made a great outcry; and Sydney, having said, haughtily, that for his losses there was no occasion that Mr. Claremont should be under the least concern, quitted the room for the purpose of retiring to rest himself for the weakness he had displayed, proceeded to his own bed chamber.

Hicks, the weather prophet, predicts may to be the wettest month of the year—that too much water will fall during this month for many low lands, and enough to thoroughly moisten nearly all sections of the country. The Solstice rains in June will not be excessive, but sufficient in most parts to flourish well cultivated crops. In localities here and there some heavy down pours will occur. The last of August and into September will bring another period of rains to central and northerly portions of the country.

A Week of Entertainment.

On Monday evening May 18th the Billy Marble Theatre Co., one of the best repertoire companies on the road, will open a week's engagement at the opera house in this city. The Duluth Herald, of a recent date says:

The Billy Marble Co. opened an engagement of three nights at the opera house last night in the grand old English Comedy "Our Boys." The company is well balanced this season with ladies and gentlemen of excellent dramatic gifts, and the fact that the Marbles always stage and dress their plays with correctness, it is a pleasure to have them with us once more, where we know we are going to see something good. Billy Marble is as pleasing as ever and has lost none of his former vivaciousness. He succeeded in gaining many rounds of applause last night and kept the audience in good humor throughout. Ella Marble is the most delightful actress that visits our city. She plays her parts to a most perfect degree of the character she assumes. She is natural, graceful and a model of fashion in dress. The supporting company are all good.

To-night the company plays a strong comedy drama, besprinkled with a large amount of military life, entitled, "Comrades" it is entirely new to our people and will please upon thoroughly. To-morrow night, and last, will be "North Carolina Folks," which needs no introduction.

First Congregational Church.

During the summer months special efforts will be made to render the evening service attractive and interesting. The double quartette is furnishing the best of music. A popular song service in which all take part will be an important feature. The "Best Hymns" will be used. Bring your copy if you have one, so that strangers can use the church copies. The pastor will give a series of character studies. The services will be only one hour in length. Remember the services begin at eight. Come and bring your friend. Subject next Sunday evening: "The good fellow" that God hated, the mean sneak that God loved. Morning topic: How to get along with disagreeable people.

In Memory.

John Commans, whose death was announced in these columns last week was born in Sauk City, Wis., and at the time of his death was 19 years, 3 months and 2 days of age. When about 5 years of age he came with his parents to Brainerd, where he lived 13 years, and received a good common school education. About two years ago they moved to Staples. Last December he went to Brainerd and was engaged by F. J. Closterman as night clerk at the Gity hotel, which position he held until a week before his death. Wherever employed he proved himself competent and obliging. The funeral services were held at the Catholic church Friday morning, and the remains taken to Brainerd for burial.—Staples World.

We are ORDERED out of the building May 1st, and until that date will offer shoes at prices that they cannot be made for. Call and see for yourselves.

The High Water.

The water in the Mississippi at this point is higher to-day than at any time for a number of years past; in fact since the dam was built. While there is no immediate danger at the dam, a force of men are stationed there, and considerable work has been done to strengthen the dam. The most serious aspect is with the city water supply, as at this writing the water has raised to such a heighth in the pump house on the flats that less than a two inch raise will put out the fires, and although the rain has ceased the river will continue to rise for a time at least. A mammoth log jam between the city and Little Falls is also backing the water up. The Water Co. have done everything in their power and the old Northern Pacific pumping station near the railroad bridge has been overhauled and put in running order and in readiness for operation today in case it is needed. Mr. Elder is of the opinion that in case the pumping station on the flats is rendered useless that water for all purposes can be furnished through this medium, and that even a fair fire pressure could be given. The gentleman does not think, however, that the water will reach the street, but if the rains continues during the next 24 hours in the same proportion as in the past, the city will have to depend on the N. P. pump house for its water supply.

The board of education held a special session on Saturday evening, at which time the bill of the water company for $140 was allowed in full to July 1st, 1896, the board reserving the right to discontinue service at any time. The matter of replacing trees on the school grounds was left in the hands of Messrs. Hurley and Preston.

Decoration Day will be fittingly observed in this city, and Mrs. H. Thwing, president of the W. R. C., desires all who are willing to furnish potted plants, to leave the same with her a few days in advance and to notify her at once. BLACKSERRYING.

Where I now walk a mere shy boy,
Where I now walk a man, my boy,
Where I now walk a father, with
My boy and girl beside me,
Where I now walk a grandsire, with
My grandchild on my knee,
Where I now walk a great-grandsire,
With my great-grandchild,
Where I now walk a ghost, I know
Some other ghost will wander
Where I now walk a ghost, and there
Will be no change elsewhere.
The world will not miss me,
The world will not miss you,
The world will not miss anybody
That the world ever knew.
The world will not miss anybody
That the world ever knew,
Though it may miss a little while
Some one it knew.

EARTHQUAKE SCIENCE.

The Interesting Views of Harris and the Greek Philosophers.

It has long been the popular belief that volcanoes were the cause of earthquakes, but scientific theorists have held to this theory, but Professor John Milne, F. R. S., who has recently been investigating the causes of earthquakes in Japan, in connection with the University of Tokyo, made the statement in a lecture that most of these shakings, probably 95 per cent, were caused by the settling of the earth's crust.

He explained that the earth's crust was in perpetual motion, and the tremor was either so slight as to be imperceptible or so great that it might plainly be felt. Fissures, he said, penetrated down to Japan or South America to study earthquakes, for an earthquake in one part of the world can be registered by proper instruments, easily be recorded in another.

"The inside of the earth is hot," said the lecturer, "and the crust is constantly breaking downward, and as it accommodates itself to what is underneath, the surface of the earth's crust becomes puckered up, and mountains and hills are formed. When any interruption takes place in the process of the internal crumbling of the crust of the earth, there is an incidence producing a violent shaking, which is called an earthquake. If a big shaking takes place in any part of the world, the motion is sufficient to be propagated over the whole surface of the earth.

"In countries where there are volcanoes earthquakes are most frequent, but they are not all directly attributable to the volcanoes. When the ground opening upward is near the ocean or other great body of water, volcanoes are found there, for volcanic action is due to steam from water in heated rocks, the water having soaked through from the surface.

"In Japan earthquakes, great or small, are of such frequent occurrence that people there do not talk about the weather, as they do almost everywhere else in the world, but you are asked what you thought of the last earthquake, and there is much guessing and boasting as to the earthquakes that are to come.

A Boy's Appearance.

Ruth Ashmore, addressing herself to "That Boy of Mine" in Ladies' Home Journal, has a few personal appearance "should be good. You owe that to yourself. And whether it is at the office or when you are out visiting you should be a clean, wholesome looking young man. Cleanliness does much to make one handsome, and a clean body aids a clean soul. It may not be in your power to possess a dress suit, but if you should not don't borrow one and don't hire one. Brush up the best clothes you have, keep them immaculate and then enjoy yourself and forget your clothes. Your linen can always be fresh and clean, and your tie can be in good style and properly knotted. Never wear a loud scarf and never wear imitation jewelry. Select plain gold buttons, and simple gold links, and scarf pins of the most modest pattern. If you can afford dress clothes, remember never to appear in them until after 6 o'clock. You may wear, if you like best, either a lawn tie or a black satin one, but the stiff little bow should be bought by yourself and not bought ready made."

A New Version of an Old Story.

Poor M. Floquet is hardly cold in his grave before a posterity has set about stripping him of his chief claims to glory. Everybody remembers that the fondest posthumous reputation was built upon an incident which occurred in 1867, The Czar Alexander II, then on a visit to Paris, had been shown over the Palais de Justice, and was passing through the prisoners' cells, when kindly provided by his host, when somebody in the crowd shouted, "Vive la Pologne, monsieur!" Floquet got the credit of this audacious bit of impertinence, and on the strength of it secured a seat in the chamber. M. Jules Claretie declares that he heard from Floquet himself that the real author of the cry was Gambetta, who generously allowed his friend to profit by it. On the other hand, M. Arthur Arnoux asserts that he invented the Gambetta legend to amuse the readers of a provincial paper, and that he did so at Floquet's expense.

But another curious piece of evidence has been brought forward. The case never heard the words at all, but he noticed the tumult to which they gave rise and saw the mob gather round a figure in black mitre. "What on earth," he exclaimed, "does that old priest want?" Now neither Gambetta nor Floquet could possibly have looked like a disbevoled ecclesiastic, but a man who was a close spectator of the scene pos-itively affirms M. Delattre, a barrister of very advanced views, to have been the real citizen prince. The case's description would apply to him, and the language resembled his utterances in the tribune. Perhaps we must leave the question, which affords, at all events, one more proof of the uncertainty of history.—St. James Gazette.

The Best Thing College Does For a Man.

Whatever may be in store for the American college as the predecessor of the American university, it can never cease to be an agency for the training of a man in the great business of living. It enriches his life; it deepens and broadens his view of truth; it ennobles his aims; it strengthens his choice of friends; it clarifies his vision of, and his love of, the beautiful. The college pours oil into the lamp of character that it may burn more radiant and more lasting. When these functions are lost, if they ever be lost, they must be recovered by some other power. For, so long as the race continues, so long are its members to be trained to think, to feel, to reason, to act with independence and with justice, to work laboriously and to be large and true and noble men. These qualities represent the best thing which a college can do for its students.—Forum.

A Question of Physics.

The cautious was about half full when the master got in and took a seat next the pretty girl.

He had placed himself superfluously close to her, and she edged away, but finding little by little he crowded up to her until she was jammed into the corner.

The situation was painful, and was complicated by the glare of the women on the other side. She wondered if they thought she liked it.

Then the girl turned on her pursuer. "If you want my place, sir," she said, "I shall be happy to rise and give it to you, but please don't try to occupy it while I am in it."

And the master pulled the strap and got out.—New York Journal.

From the Omaha Bee.

"A well known saying is, all things improve with age." That is true of Billy and Ella Marble. Always popular as fun makers their latter days on the stage are crowned with artistic success that would be highly flattering to the kings and queens of merry makers. This is particularly true of them in the refined society comedies, such as "Our Boys," and "North American Folks." Omitting the scenes from the Carmelite Folks, a more pleasant or instructive evening can hardly be passed than witnessing the interpretations by the Marbles and their company. In the Paris Saloon there is refined comedy, and Mrs. Marble, as Mora Desmond is just full of humor. She was always now she is even more. That "Our Boys"
