The republican county convention met at the court house in this city on Saturday afternoon and was called to order at 3 o'clock by Chairman J. T. Frater and the body affected an organization by electing A. E. Pennell chairman and H. T. Skinner secretary. On motion the chair appointed a committee of three on credentials as follows: H. H. Gull River and Ransom precincts were not represented.

While the committee on credentials was making its report, the following resolutions were introduced and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, the people of this county are anxiously awaiting the return of the republican party to the control of the government policy of this nation, firmly believe that its American doctrines best serve the general public good; and whereas, they are asking no pledge from the party except the nomination of candidates as have been publicly tried and found faithful and competent, and who are possessed of thorough Republican principles, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that a better choice could have been made by the national republican convention for its candidate for the most important office within the gift of the people of these United States than Wm. McKinley, the greatest and ablest faithful advocate of the American doctrine of protection, and we most heartily endorse and pledge ourselves to his candidacy.

Resolved, That the recently adopted Republican national platform is to be commended for its direct and positive statement upon the great public questions of the day—protection, reciprocity and sound finance.

The chair appointed three tellers as soon as the committee on credentials reported, as follows: A. T. Kimball, B. S. Mallory and Henry Mahle.

A motion was made to proceed to the election of eleven delegates to the state convention, and the following gentlemen were selected as the choice of the convention:

A. F. Ferris, J. N. Nevers, N. H. Ingersoll, R. R. Wise, Thos. Crawford, Joel Smith, R. H. Paine, C. N. Parker, A. T. Kimball, P. M. Lagerquist, L. Linquist.

Delegates were then elected to the congressional convention at St. Cloud by acclamation, as follows:

John T. Frater, A. E. Pennell, A. J. Halsted, A. K. Bailey, Daniel Poppenberg, J. J. Howe, Ed. Woodbury, L. E. Lum, D. Doran and J. L. Berg.

A resolution was unanimously passed authorizing Hon. A. F. Ferris to name twelve delegates to the legislative convention at Princeton, and the following names were presented and the gentlemen declared elected:

N. H. Ingersoll, S. R. Adair, J. Peterson, R. R. Wise, S. H. Parker, Wm. Erb, John Larson, K. McDonald, A. L. Hoffman, H. Patterson, Wm. Entriken and Wm. Dodd.

The convention then adjourned.

The National Convention

Of the Democratic party will be held July 7th at Chicago. The best, quickest and most comfortable line is the Burlington. Hoffman chair cars, dining cars, and standard and compartment sleepers, make its equipment all that could be asked. A very low rate of fare will be named. Don't forget to see that your ticket is via the Burlington.

Legislative Convention.

A Republican Convention is assembled four candidates for the legislature for the 40th district, will be held at Princeton, on Thursday, July 30th, 1896, at 12 o'clock m. The basis of representation will be based on the vote at the state convention, with the addition of one delegate from Crow Wing county, and one from Kanabec county. The several counties composing the district will have the following number of delegates:

Crow Wing	12
Mille Lacs	6
Morrison	14
Todd	7
Total	47

By order of Committee.
M. M. WILLIAMS, Chairman.
Dated Little Falls, May 30th, 1896.

Notice of Hearing on Adoption.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss.
County of Crow Wing. }

In District Court, 9th Judicial District.

In the matter of the adoption of Cecile William Entriken, an illegitimate child, by Walter H. Bolton and Lena M. Bolton, his wife.

Notice is hereby given, That in District Court Chambers, in the City of Brainerd, Crow Wing County, and State of Minnesota, before Hon. W. Bolland, Judge of the above named Court, on Saturday, the 4th day of July, A. D. 1896, at 10 o'clock a. m., the petition of Walter H. Bolton and Lena M. Bolton, his wife, for leave to adopt the above named Cecile William Dated June 1st, 1896.

C. S. CHIPERFIELD,
Attorney for Petitioners.

The Minneapolis Journal and Times should take a tumble into themselves and cease their villainous fight on Gov. Clough, which was carried to the most extreme extent during the campaign preceding the state convention and beyond the limit of decent journalism. The press of the Twin Cities on both sides of the gubernatorial question have overdone the matter and the general public will now be pleased to see them turn their attention to something else.

Cass County Convention.

At the Cass county Republican convention, which was held at Collins' on Monday afternoon, the following gentlemen were elected delegates to the state convention:

Geo. L. Hardy, L. R. Lothrop, W. S. Maguire, Wm. Bradfuldt, A. J. Collins and E. W. Franklin.

Congressional delegates—W. A. McDonald, Phillip Hunsinger and I. F. Westin.

The convention passed resolutions endorsing the St. Louis platform.

Clough and Gibbs.

At the state convention on Wednesday D. M. Clough was nominated on the first ballot to succeed himself as governor of Minnesota, the vote standing Clough 874, Gibbs 70, Van Sant 174, Clapp 30; on motion the nomination was made unanimous. Hon. John L. Gibbs was nominated for Lieutenant Governor, Albert Berg for secretary of State, and August T. Koerner for state treasurer, the two latter gentlemen receiving the compliment of being nominated by acclamation. The only contest was on attorney general and H. W. Childs received the nomination on the second ballot.

The ticket is a good one and will be elected regardless of the expressions of bitterness from certain sections of the state where personal feelings have been allowed to sway the better judgment of those who were opposed to the renomination of Gov. Clough.

The Legislative Outlook.

It is altogether probable that the Republican legislative convention, when it convenes in Princeton on July 30th, will name the four gentlemen who so ably represented this district in the house during the last session of the legislature as the candidates for re-election. In this county the sentiment is strongly in favor of returning the gentlemen as a recognition of the faithful and effective work performed by them. In Mille Lacs county there is a contest on between Mr. Mallett and Mr. Head for the position, but indications point to the selection of a delegation from that county who will present Mr. Mallett's name, as his friends there appreciate the fact that a new member is not in a position to accomplish as good work as a man who has had experience and is personally acquainted with a majority of the men who will be elected from the various portions of the state to that body at the coming election. Morrison county has the senator, whose term does not expire until after the coming session, and it is understood they will have no candidate for legislative honors. In Todd county Hon. J. D. Jones and Hon. B. F. Harlahorn were allowed to select their own delegates, which shows that the people there are a unit in wishing their re-election. With the return of Messrs. Ferris, Jones, Harlahorn and Mallett, the 45th district will have as able a body of representatives as any district in the state.

Sixth District All Right.

A meeting of the sixth district republicans was held at the Ryan hotel parlors in St. Paul on Wednesday evening after the adjournment of the state convention, at the meeting was in session for over two hours during which time there was a personal expression from those present in regard to who should be selected as the congressional candidate. Judge Page Morris, of Duluth, seemed to be the favorite, and from every section of the district there were encouraging reports for republican success with Judge Morris as a leader. Messrs. Ferris, Smith, Frater and Parker spoke for Crow Wing County at the meeting and the usual republican majority was promised, nearly every county having pronounced upon the subject who pledged the same vote for the republican candidate for congress in 1896 as was given the ticket in 1894. The fact that not one member of the congressional committee, who were all warm personal friends of Mr. Towne, have been affected by his slide into the silver party, but will all work for the success of his nominee, is a straw which shows in what direction the wind blows. Even in Duluth, where the only defection exists, the republicans are alert and will work as hard against the democratic nominee as they did for him in 1894, and if the meeting was an indication of the earnestness with which the republicans will work for the success of their ticket this fall, there is no need of fear. Mr. Towne will be snowed under with his populistic and free silver friends, and his star which shone with such brilliancy for a time will be forever set. He joins the rebels that is in store for him.

Democrats

Went to the National Convention of 1892 at Chicago via the Burlington Route. They elected their candidate. To secure good luck again—and have a comfortable journey—go again by the same line. When buying a ticket, be sure that it reads via the Burlington Route.

Work on the Gull Lake Reservoir.

There are five completed reservoirs: At Lake Winnibigoshish, at Leech lake, at Pokegama Falls, at Pine river, and at Sandy lake. The total capacity of these reservoirs exceeds 90,000,000,000 cubic feet. The survey of 1880 estimated the cost of constructing the reservoir dams in Minnesota and Wisconsin at $1,800,000,000, exclusive of land damages. This fair work has been done only in Minnesota, and the total appropriations to date have been about $960,000. The amount appropriated and available this year is $90,000. This sum will not begin to meet the necessities of the work projected but will enable the engineer to make considerable headway with the proposed new dam at Gull lake. The survey was made in 1894 and at the same time an examination was made to determine the possibility of increasing the water supply by diverting into Gull lake a portion of the freshet discharges from the Crow Wing river. Nineteen lakes are directly tributary to the Gull lake system and the estimated annual capacity of the supply in the reservoir fed by these lakes was placed at 2,700,000,000 cubic feet. By diverting the waters of the Crow Wing river, by constructing a channel several miles long and turning the water of that stream into Gull lake, the annual supply would be increased by 9,180,000,000 cubic feet. This project will belong to the future, however, as there is a question of land damages by the storage of such an immense volume of water, and beside the new channel will cross the Northern Pacific road, and the government will have to construct a bridge for the road when the new channel is made. But work on the Gull lake reservoir is progressing and part of the appropriation available this year will be expended on that work.

"The sum available this year for the reservoir system will enable us to make good headway on the Gull lake system," said Col. Jones to a reporter for the Globe. "But the ultimate diversion of the waters of the Crow Wing river to Gull lake must come later. This improvement involves much expense in the way of land damages, but it is so necessary to the extension of the reservoir system that it will be made and that soon. The watershed of Gull lake is comparatively small, while that of the Crow Wing river is a few miles away, is very large. We need this water, but will have to build a canal several miles in length, thus diverting the Crow Wing to the Gull lake system."

"The break in the Pine River reservoir the other day is an illustration of the effect of the released water on the river streams. The break was not at the dam, as many have supposed. On the contrary it was three miles above. The embankment had not been properly strengthened. The reservoir was full and the crevasse occurred when a lumberman had once built a logging road. The water spilled over into the swampy country south of Cross lake and then found its way into Pine creek and from there into the Mississippi. The water at Brainerd rose about five feet and at St. Paul about one foot. But as the river has been falling at the rate of two inches a day the rise here was not appreciable. I went to Pine lake with a force of men, picked up in the woods, had the crevasse repaired in three days."

"The reservoirs are fuller than they have ever been. The rainfall has been enormous in the upper part of the state this season. Winnibigoshish has more water than in 1887, which was the record breaking year. —Globe.

No experiment about using it again. Ask the ticket agent for a ticket over the Burlington, and you will never regret it.

The city of London is older than that of Edinburgh, the former being in the last one before the invasion of the Romans, while the latter was founded by th Saxons in the eighth century.

The last heads set over Temple Bar were those of Fletcher and Townley, the rebels, in 1746. The last of such trophies or spikes were not removed until the commencement of the present century.

Cycling has become so fashionable among young women in London that it has given rise to a new profession forsooth—but still active women—that of cycling chaperon.

In four European towns Hebrews are most numerous—viz., Hamburg, 1 in 32; Frankfort, 1 in 17; Amsterdam, 1 in 17; Warsaw, 1 in 8. In Jerusalem the Hebrews are 1 in 2 of the other inhabitants.

Lizards, it is well known, are attracted by the notes of music, and the negroes in the island of Madeira, when catching them for food, accompany the chase by whistling some tune which invariably has the effect of drawing great numbers towards them.

A quarrel among women as to the proper costume for the bicycle is one of those artistic indications of surviving femininity that no woman appreciates. Why can't they wear them or not, as suits them individually, just as men would in a similar case?

The etiquette of introduction is that the inferior shall always be presented to the superior. The gentleman is, therefore, introduced to the lady, not the latter to him, because, in all ranks of society, women are accorded the place of honor.

It is an interesting fact, and one showing how little have been the surface changes wrought in agricultural Wales, that a well-defined Roman road exists to this day in the very heart of Llandrindod, and with a few breaks can be traced to the outskirts of Magos, a couple of miles away.

The terrible exposures made by Godet in 1879 of the cruelties practiced in the Egyptian slave caravans aroused all Europe, and compelled the dealers to be more circumspect. Fourth of July Celebrations.

What Our Forefathers Sang in the Days When Liberty Was Young and Patriotism Strong.

In these comfortable times when the celebration of Independence day comes as a matter of course with its outburst of national loyalty, it is hard to realize how differently the Fourth of July was celebrated by the heroes of the revolution. For them there were no picnics, no parades, no fireworks. If the truth must be told they were a somber lot, with their fowling pieces, their old "matchlock guns and go-as-you-please apparel; for then there was no uniform for the militia. There was little joy in the sound of artillery then for no powder to be wasted in mere noise; then were no toy pistols to delight the youngsters of the land and worry the mothers; then were no fireworks displays at night nor money to buy fireworks in a country in the contrast between their Fourth of July and ours was as complete as it could be.

Perhaps the strangest thought of all is that the heroes of the Revolution had neither our national flag—for the various flags of the various states were waved instead—nor our national songs. It was for succeeding generations to enjoy the inspiring strains of the "Star Spangled Banner," "My Country 'Tis of Thee" and "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean." Quite different and very much more prosaic from a poetical standpoint were the songs which they sang in celebrating their successes or consoling themselves in defeat. The declaration, say songs, however, had or good, grave or gay, have a special interest, from the fact that they were composed in the camp by the soldier boys themselves, often on the battlefield, where they were sung in lusty chorus by hundreds of men refused to go with speed. Our country to defend.

There's Carleton, Howe, and Clinton, too,

And many thousand more,
May cross the sea, but all in vain,
Our brave boys never get over.

Husbands must leave their loving wives,
And sprightly youths attend,
Leave their sweethearts and risk their lives
Their country to defend.

May they be heroes in the field,
Have strength to wield the sword;
We pray the Lord to be their shield,
Where thundering cannons roar.

A Famous Victory.

During the same year a number of songs came in vogue upon the battle of Trenton. One of the best of these, the author unfortunately being unknown, is the following, which was sung to stirring music:

On Christmas day, in seventy-six,
Our ragged troops, with bayonets fix'd,
Marched down to Trenton to surprise,
The Delaware see! the boats below!
The night is dark and stormy, too,
But no signs of dismay.
Our object was the Hessian band,
That died invade fair freedom's land,
And quarter in that place.
George Washington led us on,
Whose streaming flag, in storm or sun,
Had never known disgrace.

In storms and snows we gained the night,
Each soldier panting for the fight,
Though quite benumb'd with frost.
Greene, on the left, at six began,
The right was led by Sullivan,
Who sat ere a moment lost.

And so on for several verses more. Gen. Sullivan's song, as it was called, was a complete set of words to the tune sung before Gen. Sullivan and a few companions surprised and captured the in 1777, was another rallying anthem for the soldiers. The first stanza ran thus:

Hark, the loud drums, hark the shrill trumpet call to arms
Comes Sullivan and Stirling, prepare for war's alarms.
Wilkes is army we'll be,
What soldier dare to land.
Sure in Britain slavery is the doom,
A leaden death or a watery tomb;
We, Americans, so brave, o'er the land
All invaders defy; we'll repulse them
We scorn to live as slaves.

One of the best known ballads of this period was the one which has been attributed to a private of Col. Brook's regiment, and which has been variously known as "Song for Burgoyne's Coats," "Gates' Song" and the "North Campaign." Here is a specimen stanza:

Sit houp the battle lasted,
Each heart was true as gold,
The British troops fought the lions,
And we like Yankees bold;
The leaves with blood were crimson,
And then here comes the cry:
"Tis diamond now not diamond!
We'll beat them, boys, or die!"

The Battle of the Kegs.

The song entitled "The Battle of the Kegs," one of the most successful of the Revolution ditties, was composed by Francis Hopkinson, and enabled the men of Washington's army to pass many a merry hour around the evening camp fire. It contains no less than twenty-one stanzas, all of which were reared forth with great gusto. The idea of the song is the first song of the celebrations of thirty-five years' experience that the unfortunate men have met the same fate that befell the twenty-six miners who perished in the flames of the Susquehanna Coal company in December, 1883.

These men were caught in a "rush" of culm and water from the breaker, which ran in close proximity to the mine. Their bodies, covered with a mountain of coal refuse. Three hundred men labored for more than two weeks to clear away the debris before the bodies could be reached. From this point down to the bottom of the slope the men and women were precious to the fall 280 feet of rock. So long as this remained in fact there was perhaps more leakage than there was from the mine that fell in mines which were not so close to the surface of water. When the fall occurred the 280 feet of rock mentioned must have been shattered, allowing the water to pour into the mine in such quantities until the open space below was filled. The natural consequence of this is that if the men did not lose their lives by the fall of rock they must have died by drowning. If this be the case it will be impossible to rescue those from the mine, and the story will be a repetition of the Nanticoke disaster.

All the Men in the Pittston Shaft Are Dead.

Not only is every opportunity to their dark tomb frustrated by numerous falls of rock and debris, but it is known that in the mine there is a large quantity of water which is increasing in volume every minute. The three chances of recovering their bodies are now practically gone. Prominent officials say that weeks or months must be consumed in clearing away the fallen coal in order to reach the bodies, and of the hundreds of superintendent of thirty-five years' experience thinks the unfortunate men have met the same fate that befell the twenty-six miners who perished in the flames of the Susquehanna Coal company in December, 1883.

These men were caught in a "rush" of culm and water from the breaker, which ran in close proximity to the mine. Their bodies, covered with a mountain of coal refuse. Three hundred men labored for more than two weeks to clear away the debris before the bodies could be reached. From this point down to the bottom of the slope the men and women were precious to the fall 280 feet of rock. So long as this remained in fact there was perhaps more leakage than there was from the mine that fell in mines which were not so close to the surface of water. When the fall occurred the 280 feet of rock mentioned must have been shattered, allowing the water to pour into the mine in such quantities until the open space below was filled. The natural consequence of this is that if the men did not lose their lives by the fall of rock they must have died by drowning. If this be the case it will be impossible to rescue those from the mine, and the story will be a repetition of the Nanticoke disaster.

A Famous Victory.

During the same year a number of songs came in vogue upon the battle of Trenton. One of the best of these, the author unfortunately being unknown, is the following, which was sung to stirring music:

On Christmas day, in seventy-six,
Our ragged troops, with bayonets fix'd,
Marched down to Trenton to surprise,
The Delaware see! the boats below!
The night is dark and stormy, too,
But no signs of dismay.
Our object was the Hessian band,
That died invade fair freedom's land,
And quarter in that place.
George Washington led us on,
Whose streaming flag, in storm or sun,
Had never known disgrace.

In storms and snows we gained the night,
Each soldier panting for the fight,
Though quite benumb'd with frost.
Greene, on the left, at six began,
The right was led by Sullivan,
Who sat ere a moment lost.

And so on for several verses more. Gen. Sullivan's song, as it was called, was a complete set of words to the tune sung before Gen. Sullivan and a few companions surprised and captured the in 1777, was another rallying anthem for the soldiers. The first stanza ran thus:

Hark, the loud drums, hark the shrill trumpet call to arms
Comes Sullivan and Stirling, prepare for war's alarms.
Wilkes is army we'll be,
What soldier dare to land.
Sure in Britain slavery is the doom,
A leaden death or a watery tomb;
We, Americans, so brave, o'er the land
All invaders defy; we'll repulse them
We scorn to live as slaves.

One of the best known ballads of this period was the one which has been attributed to a private of Col. Brook's regiment, and which has been variously known as "Song for Burgoyne's Coats," "Gates' Song" and the "North Campaign." Here is a specimen stanza:

Sit houp the battle lasted,
Each heart was true as gold,
The British troops fought the lions,
And we like Yankees bold;
The leaves with blood were crimson,
And then here comes the cry:
"Tis diamond now not diamond!
We'll beat them, boys, or die!"

The Battle of the Kegs.

The song entitled "The Battle of the Kegs," one of the most successful of the Revolution ditties, was composed by Francis Hopkinson, and enabled the men of Washington's army to pass many a merry hour around the evening camp fire. It contains no less than twenty-one stanzas, all of which were reared forth with great gusto. The idea of the song is the first song of the celebrations of thirty-five years' experience that the unfortunate men have met the same fate that befell the twenty-six miners who perished in the flames of the Susquehanna Coal company in December, 1883.

These men were caught in a "rush" of culm and water from the breaker, which ran in close proximity to the mine. Their bodies, covered with a mountain of coal refuse. A Brother's Devotion

"You will soon know what I mean," Mrs. Willoughby grandly said.

And then, drawing her grandsons closer to her side, continued, "but you mustn't mind me, boys; for when anybody is so happy as I am at this present moment, it is apt to turn one's head a little, especially such a poor, crazed, old bed of as mine. In my present condition, nothing seems impossible; indeed, it appears to me just now that the most glowing fairy tale may have been nothing more than a mere dry matter of fact."

Tony was staring harder than ever. "Something wonderful has happened, or is going to happen, that's certain, grandmother, or you wouldn't be going on so. I never knew you to break out in that way at all before."

"Ah, my dear boy!" cried Mrs. Willoughby.

"Yes, grandmother," said Tony.

"Not you—I mean Sydney," resumed Mrs. Willoughby. And fondly patting that young gentleman's cheeks, "All your troubles and sorrows are at an end; only wait a bit—not many minutes now"—and she glanced towards the clock—"and then you will have something to say, I fancy."

Tony was puzzling his brain to no purpose, and was saying to himself that he could not arrive at the slightest notion as to what his grandmother was going on about.

And seeing her youngest grandson looking dubious, as she believed, Mrs. Willoughby laughed and said, "Perhaps you have some thought of being jealous, Master Tony?"

"What a likely idea!" Tony said, with great heartiness. "Haven't you as much right to be fond of Sydney as I have?"

After a pause, and with a very solemn look, Tony inquired, "Your grandmother, 'Grandma, I am very uneasy.'"

Mrs. Willoughby looked greatly anxious.

"Poor, dear boy!" she cried; "what, then, is the matter with you?"

And Tony, laughing, said that he wished his dinner, for he was nearly starved to death.

Mrs. Willoughby, half-angry, and half-smiling, told him that she expected, indeed, he would have to wait a bit.

"Company coming to dinner?" asked Tony.

Mrs. Willoughby replied with a dignified nod.

"Anybody I know, grandma?"

This time a shake of the head from the old lady.

"Some one of great importance?"

Mrs. Willoughby nodded again.

"Then I be so mysterious, grandmother!" shouted Tony. "If it's the emperor of China that's coming, my son"

"Who knows but you have guessed it," laughed Mrs. Willoughby.

And presently a carriage was heard to stop before their door.

"Now," said the old lady triumphantly, "your curiosity, Tony, is about to be satisfied as to the persons whom I have been expecting."

"Mind your manners, Sydney," Tony cried to his brother. "Grandma's visitors are not common people who arrive in a tippery bus—certainly not; they hire a cab all to themselves!"

Sydney, usually ready with his own unhappy thoughts, had scarcely even heard a word of all that Mrs. Willoughby had been saying, so occupying the visitors whom she expected, but was resumed to terrible uneasiness as he beheld Sir Loghlen O'Meara enter the room leading Frances by the hand.

Sydney shrank away, asking himself what it all could mean. What had brought there Sir Loghlen and the lady whom he had believed that he should never more behold?

Mrs. Willoughby, although in some agitation, as will readily be believed, yet behaved with apparent calmness and with all the dignity of good old-fashioned ceremony, curtseying profoundly to the baronet and Frances, and saying, "Sir Loghlen O'Meara, these are my grandsons, who thank you for the honor which, by your present visit, you have conferred upon them!"

"Sydney's lady love and her uncle!" thought Tony; and he, too, was struck with wonder and amazement concerning what could have brought them there.

Sir Loghlen's eye had fallen only on Tony, and then he looked doubtingly and inquiringly toward Mrs. Willoughby, who understood, and replied by a smile and a significant shake of the head.

"Allow me, Sir Loghlen, first to present to you the eldest of my grandsons; he of whom we have been speaking," Mrs. Willoughby said very pointedly to the baronet, and believing that Sydney was at her elbow, but, on turning around, she saw him out.

Tony had observed his brother hurry towards the recess of a window, where now, behind one of its heavy curtains, he was hidden from all in the room; but Tony said not a word.

Nor was there any occasion that he should; for Mrs. Willoughby, either guessing or catching some glimpse of Sydney, walked straight to him, and exclaiming, rather angrily, "Whatever were you doing there, boy?" drew him forth, saying, with pride, and very expressively, "This, Baronet, is Sydney Drummond, my eldest grandson!"

And both Sir Loghlen and his niece, so unexpectedly again beholding the disgraced banker's clerk, fairly reeled, so overpowered were they at the astonishment of both, so sharp and bitter the disappointment to one of them.

While Sydney stood trembling and confused, his eyes fixed keenly on Frances O'Meara's drooping face, although endeavoring to read if in her thoughts he was indeed the thief that all had made him to appear.

Tony, observing every moment, was wondering what could have brought the baronet and his niece to Mrs. Willoughby's house.

"Ho! Yes, it is really he!" almost groaned forth the baronet.

And Frances, uttering not a word, sought to draw her uncle away.

"That young man is really your grandson—your eldest grandson?" the baronet falteringly demanded of Mrs. Willoughby; who, of course, answered to the affirmative, and, at the same time, requesting to be informed of the cause of that strange surprise which Sir Loghlen had evinced and of that expression of pain which even then was on his features.

And then, with the most profound grief, the baronet, addressing the greatly wondering Mrs. Willoughby, said, "Forget all that I have said to you—my hopes, the intentions which I had expressed to you; all; never be realised. Oh, never, never!"

"What mean your words?" anxiously demanded Mrs. Willoughby.

"Ah! you know not, then, that began the lowered when Tony, darting to Frances him, exclaimed sharply and somewhat threateningly, "She knows nothing, and I would advise you not to tell her anything."

And Sir Loghlen and his niece, about to quit the room, Mrs. Willoughby, for a second time, detaining them, said to him, "But if you leave me, sir, from whom, then, shall I learn this mystery?"

Pressing Mrs. Willoughby's hand, the baronet responded, "The grief that I experience, you alone can comprehend. Those hopes which I had expected to rest—the projects which I had entertained for you, since I regarded them, must it not be that there exists an insurmountable obstacle to their fulfilment?"

"It is that which I would know, sir," cried Mrs. Willoughby. "It is the explanation of all this which I demand!"

"You must receive it from others," exclaimed the baronet. "I dare not give it you; when you shall know all, you will better comprehend how great my present agony."

And then, with his niece, Sir Loghlen hurried from the house; and the next moment those on whom the baronet's presence had fled, lived in a crushing calamity, heard his carriage driven furiously away from their door.

"What was the purpose which had brought the baronet to his grandmother's house?" Tony was asking himself.

But Sydney's mental exclamation, which brought with it a fearful torture, was, "Before he—always before her."

And at the same moment, Frances, seated in the carriage, her head averted from her uncle, to conceal from him her tears, was thinking thought, "And he uttered not a word—not a word."

And the baronet, too, was suffering deeply, and repeating bitterly, "Frances!" A step by himself, incredible fatality—great had been his crime, and heavily had heaven dealt to him its punishment.

CHAPTER XIII.

Poor Old Grandmother.

Recovering from the stupor into which she had been thrown by all that which had been so strangely proceeding around her, Mrs. Willoughby cast her searching looks from one to the other of her grandsons.

"The baronet has refused me all explanation," she said severely; "but from both of you I have a right to demand it. Tell me, at once, the meaning of this strange mystery!"

"Yes—yes—grandma," stuttered Tony, "I suppose we—we must tell you—or—or you will be fancying all sorts of things—and—"

"Quick, then," cried Mrs. Willoughby. "Tell me why this baronet—who comes here with happy smiles upon his face—tell me why his manner so suddenly changed—why, turning away from her eldest grandson, "He knew you, then, whom I have seen you before, that is clear;" she said.

"Yes, grand mother, yes," Sydney faltered out in what was little more than a whisper, and was unable to look the old lady full in the face, as, if, indeed, he had been as guilty as his accusers believed him.

Mrs. Willoughby, half-angry, and half-smiling, told him that she expected, indeed, he would have to say more.

"Company coming to dinner?" asked Tony.

Mrs. Willoughby replied with a dignified nod.

"Anybody I know, grandma?"

Tony had observed his brother hurry towards the recess of a window, where now, behind one of its heavy curtains, he was hidden from all in the room; but Tony said not a word.

Nor was there any occasion that he should; for Mrs. Willoughby, either guessing or catching some glimpse of Sydney, walked straight to him, and exclaiming, rather angrily, "Whatever were you doing there, boy?" drew him forth, saying, with pride, and very expressively, "This, Baronet, is Sydney Drummond, my eldest grandson!"

And both Sir Loghlen and his niece, so unexpectedly again beholding the disgraced banker's clerk, fairly reeled, so overpowered were they at the astonishment of both, so sharp and bitter the disappointment to one of them.

While Sydney stood trembling and confused, his eyes fixed keenly on Frances O'Meara's drooping face, although endeavoring to read if in her thoughts he was indeed the thief that all had made him to appear.

Tony, observing every moment, was wondering what could have brought the baronet and his niece to Mrs. Willoughby's house.

"Ho! Yes, it is really he!" almost groaned forth the baronet.

And Frances, uttering not a word, sought to draw her uncle away.

"That young man is really your grandson—your eldest grandson?" the baronet falteringly demanded of Mrs. Willoughby; who, of course, answered to the affirmative, and, at the same time, requesting to be informed of the cause of that strange surprise which Sir Loghlen had evinced and of that expression of pain which even then was on his features.

And then, with the most profound grief, the baronet, addressing the greatly wondering Mrs. Willoughby, said, "Forget all that I have said to you—my hopes, the intentions which I had expressed to you; all; never be realised. Oh, never, never!"

"What mean your words?" anxiously demanded Mrs. Willoughby.

"Ah! you know not, then," began the lowered when Tony, darting to Frances him, exclaimed sharply and somewhat threateningly, "She knows nothing, and I would advise you not to tell her anything."

And Sir Loghlen and his niece, about to quit the room, Mrs. Willoughby, for a second time, detaining them, said to him, "But if you leave me, sir, from whom, then, shall I learn this mystery?"

Pressing Mrs. Willoughby's hand, the baronet responded, "The grief that I experience, you alone can comprehend. Those hopes which I had expected to rest—the projects which I had entertained for you, since I regarded them, must it not be that there exists an insurmountable obstacle to their fulfilment?"

"It is that which I would know, sir," cried Mrs. Willoughby. "It is the explanation of all this which I demand!"

"You must receive it from others," exclaimed the baronet. "I dare not give it you; when you shall know all, you will better comprehend how great my present agony."

And then, with his niece, Sir Loghlen hurried from the house; and the next moment those on whom the baronet's presence had fled, lived in a crushing calamity, heard his carriage driven furiously away from their door.

"What was the purpose which had brought the baronet to his grandmother's house?" Tony was asking himself.

But Sydney's mental exclamation, which brought with it a fearful torture, was, "Before he—always before her."

And at the same moment, Frances, seated in the carriage, her head averted from her uncle, to conceal from him her tears, was thinking thought, "And he uttered not a word—not a word."

And the baronet, too, was suffering deeply, and repeating bitterly, "Frances!" A step by himself, incredible fatality—great had been his crime, and heavily had heaven dealt to him its punishment.

CHAPTER XIII.

Poor Old Grandmother.

Recovering from the stupor into which she had been thrown by all that which had been so strangely proceeding around her, Mrs. Willoughby cast her searching looks from one to the other of her grandsons.

"The baronet has refused me all explanation," she said severely; "but from both of you I have a right to demand it. Tell me, at once, the meaning of this strange mystery!"

"Yes—yes—grandma," stuttered Tony, "I suppose we—we must tell you—or—or you will be fancying all sorts of things—and—"

"Quick, then," cried Mrs. Willoughby. "Tell me why this baronet—who comes here with happy smiles upon his face—tell me why his manner so suddenly changed—why, turning away from her eldest grandson, "He knew you, then, whom I have seen you before, that is clear;" she said.

"Yes, grand mother, yes," Sydney faltered out in what was little more than a whisper, and was unable to look the old lady full in the face, as, if, indeed, he had been as guilty as his accusers believed him.

And, eagerly urged by Mrs. Willoughby to the explanation which he could not refuse, Tony was compelled to relate the circumstances of his brother's and Frances O'Meara's going on board the steamboat; of the invitation to Sir Loghlen's mansion; and finally how Sydney, having been tempted to play at cards, had lost his own and his brother's money.

And when Tony had proceeded thus far, "Enough," said Mrs. Willoughby; seeing that her grandson had come to a full stop, "enough, Tony; you have said nothing yet to account for the Baronet's strange conduct to us all this morning."

"Oh, yes, I have, grandma," stammered out Tony. "For you see, Sir Loghlen has a great horror of gambling; and believing that Sydney was a confirmed gambler, he—Now you understand, grandma—that's all!"

"And that is all!" demanded Mrs. Willoughby.

"Yes," stammered Tony; "I can't think of anything else."

Mrs. Willoughby fixed on him a stern and angry look, which Tony well understood.

"That is—I mean—I" and Tony was stuttering harder than ever. "I can't see—I am sure that we—we have said any nonsense, now, and that I must go and dress for dinner."

"Yes, everything!" said Mrs. Willoughby. "Speak quickly—what have yet to learn?"

And then Tony said, that the story of his grandmother's having, in account for Sydney's leaving the bank, had been communicated to Frances by her how, and under what condemning circumstances Sydney, a clerk, had been dismissed from his employment, branded as a thief.

And when she had heard all the terrible story, Mrs. Willoughby stood for several moments trembling beneath an agitation which had rendered her incapable of uttering even a cry.

Her grandsons, in great alarm, hurried to, and supported her; and presently a flood of tears relieved her nervously-stricken heart.

And soon she spoke; and looking pityingly through her tears from one to the other of her grandsons, exclaimed, "Poor, dear boys! how greatly both of you must have suffered!" and she drew them around them, and drew them to her bosom.

And the brothers, they, too wept—thankful, grateful tears.

"I was certain, grandmother," sobbed Sydney, "you would not believe that I could be a thief."

"If you had been guilty, Sydney, you would not have dared ever again to appear before me."

"That's it, grandmother! You have hit it!" shouted Tony; and with first one and then the other of his coat-sleeves trying to reach his eyes.

When all had grown a little calmer, "And so, Sydney," said Mrs. Willoughby, "this baronet was at the bank when—"

"Yes, yes, grandmother!" Sydney answered, when his grandmother had stopped abruptly. "And she, too, grandmother—she was there!"

"She!" exclaimed Mrs. Willoughby not clearly understanding who was the particular she.

"Yes, my grandmother," interposed Tony; "no need to mention names," and he pointed significantly, but with the door of the room and then toward the street. "You know very well that the steamboat—that Sydney has fallen in love with!"

Tony had not very clearly explained himself; but, of course, his grandmother had easily comprehended that it was not the steamboat which had been "the object of Sydney's affection" and she said to him, "You loved that young girl?"

"I love her still!" Sydney sadly replied.

And remembering what the baronet had proposed, "That marriage had then, been arranged by you?" Mrs. Willoughby exclaimed.

And her grandsons were amazed at her words, and asked her to explain their meaning.

Mrs. Willoughby, seeing that she had gone too far, desired that she might be no further questioned.

"Only one word—a single word, grandmother," pleaded Tony, "that I may mean to say that Sydney might have married Miss Frances O'Meara?"

"Yes," replied Mrs. Willoughby.

And that one little word drove Sydney almost insane; for now, he could hope that she could ere be his was entirely forever lost to him.

"Yes," said his grandmother, mournfully, "even had the baronet"

"To be sure he did!" cried Tony, breaking out all at once; "and you may take my word for it, you have lost all hope, you two, I haven't! What could the baronet wanted with you, grandmother, and what he said to you, I don't know, but I don't you two know. I only want what I mean to see done" and then, taking his brother's hand, Tony continued, "Sydney's a fellow, you might have married—Frances O'Meara; her own self, you know, from you; and I will give her back to you!"

Sydney shook his head.

"But I will, I will!" exclaimed Tony. "We've been real sailors! A man feels at his heart that he is downright honest, and he lets the world say what it likes about him—all wrong; and I mean to go home and be a tailor's and jewelers' shops, for I'll rummage out every corner of the world, but I'll found the skulking thief that dares not show his nose to me!"

"To discover the real thief would be impossible," Sydney said.

And Tony's reply was that it did not matter to him how impossible it was, provided he should be able to do it.

And he was determined that Sydney should soon marry Frances, if only he himself might be married to his cousin Nancy Smart; and Sydney was to be a member of parliament—Tony had said so; and so it should be, since all that was needed for that was the discovery and capture of a certain thief that at present he knew nothing about. It was a different matter, Tony knew, but he would do it, for all that.

"Grandmother," said Tony very earnestly, "you said a word or two a while ago which I should like to hear you say again."

And then, taking Sydney's hand, he stood with him before Mrs. Willoughby. "Here we are, grandma," continued Tony, half-laughing, half-crying;

SNAKE HAD DOWN HER ARM.

She Was Reaching Toward a Bird Cage. Am ong Chanbeliers Vines.

Sammy Wood, a fiddler, was furnishing the music for a gathering at the home of a well known family for near Callicoon, N. Y. It was a party in honor of a young woman from New York. The night was warm and the window was open. The young woman, tired of dancing, noticed a bird cage hanging among the vines which grew over the veranda, the inmate of which was roused to its sweetest strains of song by Sammy's playing.

Tapping with her finger lightly upon the cage, the girl felt what she thought "And he uttered not a word—not a word."

"Heavens!" cried one of the dancers, as he looked toward the girl. "Look here!" A shriek followed, the fiddle fell to the floor. A huge snake was circling down her arm from the cage across her shoulders, and as she lay prostrate it coiled itself upon the floor near her.

The moment was one of intense excitement. The male portion of the guests were open and its fangs set. The ominous rattle was heard. Then out upon the fiddle gave forth one of its loveliest airs, and the reptile gracefully coiled toward the music and out of the house. Snakes are seduced away by music, and Sammy's skill undoubtedly saved the girl's life. The snake was followed and killed. It measured five feet in length.—New York Press.

Street Noises.

A step in the right direction has been taken in England in the organization of an association for the Suppression of Street Noises. This body has put forward many undeniable facts concerning the physical and mental sufferings caused by the numerous noisy noises of the streets, and there is reason to hope some steps will be taken toward a reform. It is proposed to compel all carmen to carefully carry a badge and obtain a certificate, which would be forfeited if they refused to go to a reasonable distance when required. It is suggested that hotel proprietors should publish in the house a virtually complete immunity from unnecessary noise on the part of a fee, renewable from time to time, to a privilege of which many hundreds of sandgoners would forthwith avail themselves. This, in itself, is a significant testimony as to the severity of the grievance. A similar crusade is being inaugurated in this country. A New York medical journal recently made a strong protest against the disordered rattle of street vehicles, on the ground that they largely increase the sufferings of nervous and sick people, and that in a city of New York's size the nervous and sick form a large class. The statistics of the Motor Vendor License Bureau show that 50,000 more man has passed this year than far this season who was not the victim of a severe cerebro-laryngitis. This one is recorded as having origin an aggravated cleft palate. It is not much consolation to those who have suffered from the discordance of street cries to know that six weeks of such business is the average time for a boy to lose his voice entirely. The "of" sex are more merciful, apparently, as their voices never seem to give the least indication of the existence of the strain. It is found that many knife grinders who lose lost the use of their vocal chords have developed musical lungs that are by no means objectionable.—

The Summer Hall.

The hall in the summer house should be next in its inviting apparance to the broad piazza, which is in reality the most important part of the house, if there is one room and a corridor or large hall combined the two in one, as the living room; it will be found much more enjoyable; it has more elements of spaciousness, better air and lending itself readily to picturesque effects in furnishing. The multitude of small details, collections of various sorts, rare bric-a-brac, choice porcelains, etc., which in a recent year have found town houses into museums, should be studiously avoided; for not only is it a weariness to the flesh to take care of these things, but it is actually a strain upon mind and nerves to be confronted at every turn with a multiplicity of objects.

Therefore, a wise restraint should be exercised in the selection and placing of a purely decorative character. Every piece of furniture should be for use and comfort; even the tall and spindle-legged chairs, which invite one only to perch, lest they be beneath one's weight; nor stiff, upholstered chairs in the form of thrones, which proclaim their ceremonious purpose.

The great, roomy hall should invite to restful cosy, and there should be couches, divans and lounging chairs, with plenty of soft cushions wherever they can be placed, as well as low willow chairs for work and tables.

If there can be but one open grate in the house, it it be by all means in the hall, where a cheery fire on cool evenings and mornings is the most enjoyed, and whence the genial warmth will most readily pervade the whole house and dispe. its dampness. —Demorest's Magazine.

The Fine-Tooth Comb in Crop Cultivation.

The contest is still on between the old-fashioned and the new-fashioned cultivation of coarse crops. The old fashion says: "You can't make me believe that your new-fangled weeders and smoothing harrows can tell the difference between a corn plant and a weed." The new fashion retorts: "Your dull hoe and soddy corn rows drove the boys out of the farm." It is a sort of guerilla warfare upon the outposts of the two systems. The sober sense of the truth would like to see the real issues joined, for he is tetcher both of his back and of his pocket-book. The impartial student of the question will find that the new cultivation seems to see that it was properly done. Then after cutting out a corner of our cornfield, I carefully went to the other new treasure, and Bostwick, the color expert, held it to view. Upon this was done Burleigh formed the company and three sides of a square, and Bostwick and Coggswell, the tramp, advanced to the center with the flag. The bullys were fixed in its honor, and then three times three cheers and a tiger were given for the home in the northland that most of these boys were never to see again. They were a gallant company, I know; they never before fought as under this banner, and when we were attacked as we were making a night march, and one new school can be made a great improvement on the old, by any farmer.—E. G. Birge in Orange Judd Farmer.

The contested seat in Conso county is very exciting. The race has been extremely interesting from the way in which Mr. Fastenough has covered the ground, and judging from the way in which all interested hold on, it is difficult to tell the outcome unless there should be a split.

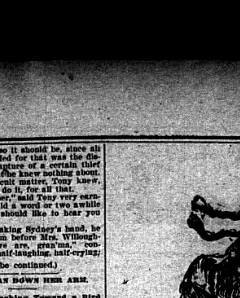
"Is it true that everything was cold at De Smith's swell dinner?"

"Everything but the ices."—Detroit Free Press.



The captain knocked the ashes from his pipe and tilted his chair backward, that he might put his feet on the desk. In the next instant there was a resounding thump of the presses came up from the basement as their gaping maws took in the long rolls of white paper and delivered the first edition, ready for the mail, a moment later. In the composing room the machines clicked steadily away as the operators got the later scores of the night into shining lines of type; and in the editorial department a few belated writers were grinding out their last copy.

"The Fourth of July is half an hour old," said the captain, as the last ashes fell from the pipe, "and it Patterson, here," (turning toward the police reporter, who had just come in) "has got time to listen awhile, I'll spin you the yarn of one Independence Day that we spent in Guatemala."

Having refilled and lighted the pipe to his liking, while the boys gathered around, he continued: "It was the July, '94, and we were camped on the Rio Grucios a Dios. Our company was mostly American, and we hadn't seen Old Glory since we left Cuba, over two months before, and the boys felt blue about it. The Guatemalan flag is a pretty one, for it has all the colors of the rainbow in it, and some that are not in the low, but it isn't the thing for a Yankee to have around about the Fourth, and wishing that we had a flag that we could run up and salute, but it had got around to the third, and we seemed no nearer to our desire than we were two weeks before.

"On the morning of the third I took Paterson and five other men, and went on a scout on the south side of the river. It was more than likely that we had fourteen hours in the saddle, so it was after dark when we came in. The sun had just set when we 'spied a fire gleaming through the trees, a tent Pat to look it, and he crawled off through the bushes. Pretty soon he came back with the word that it was only a beach-comber, as they call tramps down there, so we rode in and surrounded him. A more dirty, ragged specimen of the genus tramp I have rarely seen. He told us his story. He had tramped all over the United States and in Mexico, and joined a fruiter trading to Bocas del Toro. He had deserted there and was beach-combing it back to civilization. We proposed that he go with us to camp, and he was only too delighted to accept the proposition.

"We took him with us to camp, and after Burleigh and questioned him a bit we fed him up. We were not living on Delmonico fare ourselves, but it would have done you good to see that fellow eat. After he got through he pulled a handkerchief out of his pocket, and the next thing I heard was a howl from Pat, and in a minute he was waving the handkerchief over his head and half the boys in camp were yelling like mad. It was neither more nor less than a little American ag. I reckon the tramp thought we had all gone crazy, for we shouted and sang and laughed and cried, and ragged and dirty as that old handkerchief was, there were many of the boys that "Take a Pull, and Pull Heartily," Hissed It. As for the owners, he was right in clover—there was nothing in camp that was too good for him, and one of the boys, that had never been known to share anything with any one, astonished the crowd by producing a bottle from some secret place and inviting his trampship to take a pull, and pull hearty." Before he slept our new comrade had had a bath in the river, and was rigged out in the company uniform.

"The next morning the handkerchief was carefully washed, and the whole company assembled itself a committee to see that it was properly done. Then after cutting out a corner of our contest prize, carefully cut out the color bearer, and Bostwick and Coggswell, the tramp, advanced to the center with the flag. The bullys were fixed in its honor, and then three times three cheers and a tiger were given for the home in the northland that most of these boys were never to see again. They were a gallant company, I know; they never before fought as under this banner, and when we were attacked as we were making a night march, and one new school can be made a great improvement on the old, by any farmer.—E. A GENTLEMAN OF '76.

He eat a gallant figure
In leather boot and hose;
A goodly sight his buckles bright
And pointy powdered queue!
A more courageous gourmet
Ne'er served salmi of game;
Than my brave ancestor,
My great-great-grandpaps!

And then in his elation
Did my forefather gay
Spank one Miss Britannia
For fear she'd say him "Nay!"
And when her pout was tender
Within her eyes the light,
He cried: "I'm off to London
I rend—we win the fight!"

And when the freedom-peace
Swept, surgelike, through the dells—
A mighty clang whose echoes rang
From Philadelphia bells—
Loud from a stern old steeple
He lauded the proud hearts,
The joy-peal to the people,
My great-great-grandpaps.
He held the brutal Briton
A "thing" beneath his scorn
A fop he considered
To be the basest caitiff born;
And not a neighbor wandered
He looked upon them so.
Forsooth, that was one hundred
And nineteen years ago!

How true the happy presage!
In faith, how real and true
My pedigree of love and strife,
Thou saint in buff and blue!
Beyond all touch of travail,
While nations, commonwealths,
Now flounder, slips by in rhyme
For great-great-grandpaps!

WARDED OFF PARALYSIS.

JOHN McLEAN'S REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE.

For Years Feels the Approach of Paralysis and Suffers All Torments That Mind Can Endure Without Hope.

From the Free Press, Beloit, Wis. Having heard of the most remarkable results from the use of Pink Pills, the Fifth street, Beloit, Wis., stage manager at that place, was interviewed from the use of Pink Pills for Pale People, and the result was that Mr. John McLean to learn from his own lips what his experience had been.

"Yes, I have used those wonderful Pink Pills, and they have indeed received beneficial results from them."

"In what way, sir?"

"In many ways. Where I was almost a hopeless invalid now I am permitted to enjoy something of life. Not I assure you, as well as a well man, but when you compare my condition with that before I began taking Pink Pills you will see there is nothing for me to complain about now."

"You have been a soldier and ever since I came into the state you have been impaired, and I grew steadily worse, slowly but surely, in fact my entire left side, began to show evidences of paralysis. Sometimes I was so weak I could scarcely walk. I tell you, sir, no one will ever know the agony of those years that I watched the advance of that enemy, paralysis."

"I am not a boaster, but I have seen a column of men charge, and watched a battery unlimber and fire in the midst of deadly fusillade into the ranks of my command, but the terrors of those hours was nothing like as terrible to endure as to feel the advance of that foe, for we we found encouragement in fighting a man, in the open, but had no chances of victory, but there is no such combating paralysis. Never, no never, I thought three years ago. I went to physicians for relief, and they all prescribed for me without avail. Day by day I felt that I was growing more useless and a nuisance coming upon me, and I thought of all of the remedy I could hear of. As a drowning man grasps at straws, I tried one after another, I found that I began to feel better.

"A stomach trouble of long standing had also troubled me, and with the appetite improved, my spirits were benefited, and my whole side began to get improving. I was happier than I had been in years, and I am convinced to take Pink Pills and I am as you see me, before me for relief, and able to perform considerable work, and am feeling that I am a man."

"Yes, I attribute my improved condition all to Pink Pills. Other children have also been benefited from their use."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they never sold in bulk or by the 100), address Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. WILD WEST CONVENTION.

White-Haired Chairman Showed the Boys How to Waste Time.

A story comes from the west coast to the effect that a meeting of the Washington lumbermen was held the other day at Tacoma. After the crowd had all assembled in the convention hall and it was time for the gathering to come to order, Frank C. Moore, the white haired chairman of the meeting, a motion which was duly seconded and carried was all present. Emory took the chair with all the dignity of a Thomas B. Reed, and the ball opened. Motions came thick and fast. Everybody tried to talk at once, Beckman and Cole not being the quietest people at the meeting, until finally Emory was on his feet, but that some old-timer who was not accustomed to such things reminded him so as to be heard, that "no thought it was time to put a stop to such boy's play."

"Well, if maybe you think because my hair is white I'm a kid and can't keep order," shouted Emory as he jumped upon the speaker's table, grabbed his chair and began pounding it with force as though he would get it. Cole, Beckman and a few others silently withdrew from the gathering, and left Emory and Moore White had no more trouble after that.—Minneapolis Tribune.

The Perfection of Ability.

"What?" cried the small man with yellow shoes and complexion. "He holds a government position? Why, I understood that he was a man of great ability?"

The man with light mustache and overcoat nodded affirmative.

"He is a man of immense ability. He has had the same place for ten years."

"But that proves—" began the small man.

"That he has ability enough to contest his ability."

Married at Rockford.

The Rockford, Ill., Register contains the following account of the wedding of Rev. F. M. Eckman, of this city to Miss Marie Pauline Hawkinson, which occurred in that city on June 24:

The evening in the First Lutheran church will be celebrated the nuptial ceremony of Rev. F. M. Eckman, of this city to Miss Marie Pauline Hawkinson. The announcement of the wedding has aroused a feeling of pleasurable interest in the popular young couple and the wide circle of friends of both will have but one regret, the removal of the bride from Rockford. The story of their acquaintance and ultimate deeper feeling for each other is well known. It began several years ago when the groom was a theological student at Augustana college and during his summer vacation was assigned to Rockford to assist in the ministerial work of the first Lutheran church of this city. The bride at that time was a member of the church choir and their work brought them together frequently. An acquaintance mutually pleasant to the two sprung up between them which has in the months since ripened into a stronger attachment. To-night, mid numerous friends and most happy surroundings they will be joined in the bonds of wedlock, and it is the wish of every friend that the romance so prettily begun may last through life for the happy pair.

Rev. Mr. Eckman has, since his work in Rockford, been ordained and is now installed as pastor of a prosperous Swedish Lutheran church at Brainerd, Minn. He is a young man of much ability, with scholarly inclinations, and has a bright future before him in his life calling. The bride has spent her life in this city and has grown into the hearts and affections of every acquaintance with advancing young womanhood. She is a devoted member of the first Lutheran church and has been constant in the benevolences and good works of the church. Miss Hawkinson is a young lady of refinement and many accomplishments, with which are most happily combined grace of feature and disposition.

Mr. and Mrs. Eckman will visit with Rockford friends to-morrow, leaving Friday for St. James, Minn. At that place they will spend about a week with relatives and friends. From there they will go to Brainerd and begin their life work at once, taking with them the sincerest regards of hosts of Rockford friends.

Richard & Pringle's Famous Georgia Minstrels.

The above named great minstrel show will appear at Sleeper Opera house next Thursday evening, July 9th. This is one of the very finest attractions in the line of minstrelsy that the people of Brainerd are likely to see this year. It consists of forty people, among whom are Billy Kersands, who has amused the whole country; Gauze, the great impersonator; Craig, the boneless wonder; Neil Moore, the comedian; Jalvap, the Hindoo juggler; Eugene Hillman, punster; and more than twenty other strong specialty people. The Pickaninny Quartette and the famous Crescent City Quartette are also worthy of special mention.

This great show travels in its own cars, and is equipped with all the accessories necessary for giving a first-class minstrel entertainment.

All who attend are specially requested to come early, as the time required to present the full program makes an early start necessary.

The prices have been fixed very low for so fine an attraction, 50 and 75 cents for reserved seats, 35 cents for general admission, and 25 cents for gallery. Reserved seat sale will open on Monday morning at the McFadden Drug Co's store. Look out for the street parade at 11.30 a. m.

The Picnic.

The railroad picnic was a decided success, it taking twenty eight coaches from Brainerd and Staples alone, and even then the platforms were crowded with people unable to get a seat. The match game of ball between the Brainerd Browns and the Detroits was won by the latter after eleven hotly contested innings, by a score of 9 to 7. Brainerd lost the game in the first inning. They had two men out and two strikes, and when at the third strike the ball was batted to second the fumble was made and then a wild throw to first. Later in the day the Brainerd "kid" team beat the Detroits bad. John Schmelz won the half mile bicycle race, the prize for which was a handsome silk umbrella. With riding on the steamer, launches, rowing and sailing, with two dances going on in full blast, everybody and his neighbor seemed to enjoy themselves. The band boys acquitted themselves admirably, and deserve credit for the music rendered. —Staples World.

Stayed Another Week.

The Paul T. Wilkes Stock Company are playing at the Sleeper opera house this week and tonight (Friday) will present "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Saturday evening's announcement being "Under Two Flags." The prices are 10, 15 and 20 cents, and the company are giving satisfaction. The opera house management is attending to ventilation and furnishing iced spring water for the patrons which makes the heretofore uncomfortable task of attending entertainments in hot weather in this city one of pleasure.

WOULD INSURE ALL.

Chairman Faulkner Says Free Coinage Would Mean Ruin.

Before the Republican party at St. Louis speaks for free coinage it must speak Democracy. Chairman Charles W. Fairbanks said in his opening speech:

The Republican party has not been unfriendly to the use of silver. It has always favored and favors today the use of silver as a part of our circulating medium. But it favors that use under such provisions and safeguards as shall best support our present national standard. The policy of the Republican party is to retain both gold and silver as a part of the existing condition, while the policy of free coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 when the commercial ratio in all the great markets is 32 to 1, and at the same time and drive every dollar of gold out of circulation, but deceive themselves.

Great and powerful as our government is, it cannot accomplish the impossible. It cannot create value. It has not the power to exhibit as of transmuting unlimited silver into gold. Our coinage of silver dollars has been for years with 100 cents. As well undertake by a resolution of congress to make 50 cents worth of silver equal to 100 cents worth 100 cents. As well undertake by a resolution of congress to make the law of gravitation as attempt to compel an unlimited number of 50 cent dollars to circulate with 100 cent dollars at a parity with each other. An attempt to compel unlimited dollars of such unequal value to circulate at a parity is bad in morals and is vicious in policy.

Upon opening our mints to the independent free coinage of silver foreign credits would be withdrawn and domestic credits would be greatly curtailed. More than this there would be certain and sudden contraction of our currency by the suspension of the use of gold, and our paper and silver currency would instantly and greatly depreciate in purchasing power. But one result would follow this—enterprise would be further checked, business demoralization would be increased and still further and serious injury would be inflicted upon the laboring people. The merchants and all those whose welfare depends upon a wide some commerce.

A change from the present standard to the low silver standard would cut down the recompense of labor; reduce the total of the savings in banks and building and loan associations; salaries and pensions would shrink; pensions would be cut in two; the emoluments of life insurance would suffer; in short, the injury would be universal and far reaching that a radical change can be contemplated only with the severest apprehension.

A sound currency defrauds no one. It is good alike in the hands of the employee and the employer, the laborer and the capitalist. Upon faith in its worth, its stability, we go forward planning for the future. The capitalist erects his factories, acquires his materials, employs his artisans, purchases and laborers. He is confident that his margin will not be swept away by fluctuations in the currency. The laborer knows that no money earned by his toil is so honest as his labor, and that is it of unquestioned purchasing power.

He Seeks Votes Will Win.

The idea of saying that the 16 to 1 ratio is not material, which appeared as an afterthought shortly before Algeld made his Chicago speech, will not go. The 16 to 1 formula is in all the silver platform ever since or the word means nonsense, and now it will not down at the bidding of any silverite conjurer.

The plan of leaving the question of ratio to congress will not deceive any honest money man nor will it satisfy any silverite who is in dead earnest. To drop the 16 to 1 formula would offend the silverite rank and file and send them over to a body to the appeals all over party or the Populists, while it would not satisfy any sound money man. A platform demanding free coinage at 50 to 1 or any other ratio would not satisfy any honest money man.

The Chicago convention must say either 16 to 1 or gold standard. There is no middle ground, for neither free silverites nor sound money men can by any possibility be induced to stand on such unsound ground.

This money question has been vexing the business public, holding all enterprises in terror and suppressing all enterprise altogether too long. It is high time to have it settled and settled with such a profound thud that no demagogue will think of bringing it out again with a fanfare to be heard and beheld the people for a whole half century to come. It is time for this generation to have done with this disturbing factor and settle down to solid business.—Chicago Chronicle.

Where the Germans Stand.

Out of 608 German newspapers to which circulars were sent by the German-American Sound Money league a short time ago, 381 are in favor of a gold standard, and only 81 in favor of the free coinage of silver. Over 90 per cent of the 608 German papers have thus far failed to make any reply to the committee's circulars.

The party that overlooks the German vote need not worry itself about official responsibility. The Germans constitute but a small percentage of our politicians, but are an important class on election days.

Not Certain That Five Will Down.

In 1890 silver inflation was anathematized. As a result, in 1892 there was a financial collapse. The country has not yet been able to right itself, but the crazy advocates of cheap money insist upon a renewal of their wild experiment.

Why Minnesota Is For Gold.

Minnesota Democrats declared unalterably for the gold standard. They did so unexpectedly. The big delegations from Minneapolis and Duluth were instructed for 16 to 1, and it was taken for granted that the country delegations would favor silver. Why did they vote for gold?

Several reasons have been suggested. The one most often met with is that the state has invested largely of homes and intelligent Scandinavians and Germans who cannot be caught with free silver sophistry. As over 75 per cent of Minnesota's population is foreign born, this reason may be partly true. A more reasonable explanation, however, is found in the reported statement that a majority of the farm mortgages in Minnesota are made payable in "gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness." Being compelled to pay their debts in gold the farmers wish to receive as good money when they sell their products.

The fact that a far larger portion of mortgages will contain the gold clause next November than now may spoil many votes for the 16 to 1 scheme.

A Good Simile.

The discussion about silver and gold reminds one much of a discussion about the relation of the earth and sun. The gold men maintain that the earth goes round the sun; the silver men that the sun goes round the earth, except when defeated by the efforts of the bankers and "goldbugs."—New York Evening Post.

Square Fight Will Settle It.

The money standard of the United States should be settled beyond disturbance. A square contest between the friends and foes of sound money will settle it.—Utica Herald (Rep.).

Gold Clause Becoming Popular.

There were two interviews printed in the News yesterday which ought to set people thinking. It was shown in one of these interviews that the banks are already beginning to call in their paper, even paper which at other times they would have been glad to renew. This tendency on the part of banks of money will grow stronger as the standard grows more uncertain. Men who lend money on a gold basis will take no chances of being repaid in cheap silver. This is shown by the practice of the building associations, as described in the other interview. The secretary of these associations said yesterday that they had been hardly a building association mortgage made in the past year in which it did not contain a gold clause. We quote his words:

"I do not believe it is generally known that nearly every building and loan association in this city and in the state, I suppose, has put in every mortgage it has taken for the last three years a clause to the effect that the loan shall be paid in gold, if demanded by the association. The association of which I am secretary has out $470,000, and that clause is in every mortgage."—Indianapolis News, June 11.

The Inconsistent Silverite.

"I believe in a man living up to his principles," said Uncle Allen Sparks. "Now, I have a neighbor who is a howling silverite and is always talking about the crime of 1873, but whenever he finds that somebody has passed a Canadian 10 cent piece on him he saves it to throw in the contribution box at church."—Chicago Tribune.

The Democratic Situation.

If the family of seeing facts and the ability to reason upon them have not departed from the free silver Democrats, they will not attempt to commit the national convention to their theory.

The facts of the political situation briefly are:

First.—That the Democratic party has been defeated in every presidential election since the war of 1861 by reason of financial unsoundness and has been successful in every contest in which it has declared for honest money.

Second.—That it cannot carry a single northern state or one-half the border states for free silver and consequently would be beaten disastrously in the election upon that issue.

Third.—That it cannot hope to carry the house of representatives upon that issue. The majority against free coinage has increased from 18 in the Fifty-second congress to 125 in the present house. There are no signs of gains for silver anywhere this year.

Fourth.—Being unable to elect either a president or a house upon this issue, do its supporters hope to throw the election of a president into the house? In that case the choice of the Republican candidate is absolutely certain.

Consider these facts. The free silver Democrats will be able to write their ideas into the platform, what can it profit them? What earthly reason for if not to improve the conditions of success or to put the party in the way of a triumph in the near future? Is the free silver fad all there is of Democracy for our friends at the west and south? "Only common sense is necessary" to show them the utter futility of their present course.—New York World.
