CLEAN Front street. As a prominent citizen remarked a day or two ago it is the dirtiest main street of a city he every saw.

JOHN LIND got a verdict of $600 against the St. Paul Dispatch. That's a pretty large sum to value the character of most Populists at.

ANNUAL school meetings, commencing in 1898, will be held the last of June, instead of July, a law to that effect having been passed by the legislature.

TOWN supervisors are barred from holding the position of road overseers or road supervisors, the legislature in its wisdom having seen fit to place the law on the statute books.

UNDER provisions made by the legislature just adjourned, a gross earnings tax has been placed on telephone companies, sleeping cars, private freight car companies, and express companies.

ONE day, according to the Minneapolis Times, Jim Hill has a grip on the N. P. and the next day he hasn't. If Jim would only keep in and see the Times, it might come to some definite conclusion on the subject.

THE railroads of the country have not been wrecked, notwithstanding the supreme court declared their pooling association illegal. The explosion of trusts hurts no legitimate business and helps the people.

WHEAT is again ranging close up to 60 cents, but silver declines to rise. That was a nice little story of the free silverites, that the price of silver regulated the price of wheat, but a little experience soon exploded it.

GREECE and Turkey are now in the throes of actual war. The sympathy and admiration of the civilized world is with Greece in her unequal struggle for the benefit of Christendom, even if the politicians look on indifferently.

KENTUCKY went Republican last year, but the Republicans there are in about the same fix the Democrats are when they get in the national government. They are to opposition so much that when they get in power they are unable to do anything.

FOR the information of those bicycle riders who think they are "the whole thing" when riding on the sidewalk, we wish to state there is an ordinance against riding on sidewalks at all, and if they get too gay they will find themselves swindled from the sidewalks altogether.

THE Minneapolis Times on Monday, in a column editorial, arrived at the conclusion that everyone in this world, except the Times editor, was insane. This state of mind clearly indicates that the fourth insane asylum should be built, and in close proximity to the Times office.

THE legislature has adjourned. It gave us a great deal of new legislation, the usefulness of which the future alone will disclose. It was an economical one, the appropriation of money being considerably less than its two predecessors, and a great deal less than the expensive demi-pop legislature of a few years ago.

"THE Recuperative Forces of Spring" is an article in the Sanitarian department of Democrat Magazine for May that every one should read. It gives plain, common sense reasons why certain articles of food are beneficial in spring and why others are not; and if we start right in the spring we are pretty sure to keep right all summer.

Quite True, Bro. Dare.

When the next legislature convenes the Sixth district will be in a position to demand its rights, instead of having to plead for them, as it has had to do at this and past legislatures. The gain of six senators and five representatives is an advantage that will be a very important factor when it comes to another re-apportionment, and when that time comes we predict that there will be a more equitable distribution of representation than ever under this, which was in the nature of a compromise by which the northern part of the state got a part of what it is entitled to rather than its full quota. When the time comes to reapportion the state again, the selfish southern part of the state will be compelled to submit to a reduction of a portion of its representation which it now holds by main force.—Elk River Star-News.

IN A PUNT.

One evening, when I had returned all alone and very weary, painfully pulling my heavy punt, which I used every night, I paused a few seconds to take breath near the edge of some reeds. The weather was glorious, the moon was radiant, the river sparkled, the air was cool and sweet. This tranquillity tempted me, and I thought it would be very pleasant to change my place in this place. The action followed the thought. I seized my anchor and cast it into the river. The punt, which floated with the current, drifted as far as the end of its chain, and then stood still. I seated myself in the stern on my sheepskin comfortably as possible.

I heard nothing, not a sound, only at intervals I imagined I heard a slight, almost inaudible, plash of the water against the shore, and I saw clusters of tall reeds which assumed surprising shapes and seemed at intervals to stir. The river was perfectly quiet, but I felt agitated by the extraordinary stillness which surrounded me. All creatures—the frogs and toads, those nocturnal singers of the marshes—were silent. Suddenly at my right, close to me, a frog croaked. I shuddered, paused, and I heard nothing more and resolved to smoke to divert my mind. Yet, although I was a notorious and confirmed smoker, I could not smoke. With a second puff, I changed my mind and stopped.

I began to recollect scenes. The sound of my voice was painful. Then I stretched myself out in the bottom of the boat and watched the sky. For some time I remained at ease, but soon light movements of the boat disturbed me. It seemed as if it was making gigantic inches, touching alternately the two banks of the river, then I thought that some being or invisible force drew it gently to the bottom of the water, then, raising it, let it fall once more. I was tossed about as though in the midst of a tempest. I heard sounds around me. I saw things. Noises. The water was gleaming. All was quiet.

I saw that my nerves were somewhat shaken, and I determined to be off. I pulled at the chain, the punt began to move; then I felt a resistance. I pulled harder, but the anchor did not move. It had caught on something at the bottom of the river, and I could not lift it. I once more commenced to pull, but in vain. Then with my oars I turned the boat up stream in order to change the position of the anchor. This was useless: it still held fast. I was seized with anger and shook the chain furiously. Nothing moved. I sat down discouraged and began to reflect upon my position.

I could not think of breaking the chain or of separating it from the boat, for it was very heavy and riveted in the bow to a piece of wood thicker than my arm. But as the weather was still very fair, I thought that I should not remain long without encountering some fisherman who would come to my relief. My mishap had calmed me. I sat down, and at last was able to smoke my pipe. I had a bottle of rum. I drank two or three glasses and was compelled to laugh at my situation.

It was very warm, so that I could, if necessary, without any danger, forget, pass the night in the beautiful starlight. Suddenly a soft rap sounded against the side of the boat. I started, and a cold sweat froze me from head to foot. This sound doubtless came from some piece of wood borne by the current, but it was enough, and I was again possessed by a strange nervous agitation. I grasped the chain and steadied myself in desperate effort. The anchor held firm. I sat down exhausted.

Meanwhile the river had gradually become covered by a very thick white mist which hung very low over the water, so that, standing, I could no longer see the river, or my feet, or the boat, but only the tops of the reeds, and in the distance the lowland, white in the moonlight, and from it great black spots, formed by clumps of formerly poplars, arose in the sky. I was wrapped to my waist as if in a muslin sheet of singular whiteness, and fantastic visions came to me.

I fancied that some one whom I could not distinguish was trying to get close to my boat, and that the river, hidden in this opaque mist, must be filled with these strange beings who swam around me. I felt a horrible disquietude; my temples were tightly bound; the beating of my heart almost choked me, and, losing control of myself, I thought of saving myself by swimming, but immediately this idea made me shudder with fear. I could see myself here, wandering at random in that thick fog, in the midst of the grasses and reeds from which I could not free myself, quivering with fear, unable to see the shore or to find my boat, and I imagined I could hear myself drawn by my feet to the very bottom of this black water.

Indeed, as I should have been compelled to struggle against the current for at least 500 yards before reaching a point free from grass and rushes where I might gain a foothold, there were nine chances out of ten that I should not be able to find my way in this obscurity, and that I should be drowned, good swimmer as I was.

I tried to reason with myself. I determined not to be afraid, but there was something in me besides my will, and this other thing was afraid. I asked myself what there was to fear. My brave I jeered at my pulmon I, and never so well as on that day have I understood the conflict of the two beings that exist in us—the one willing, the other resisting, and each in turn prevailing.

This foolish and inexplicable fear continually increased till it became terror. I remained immovable, with wide open eyes and expectant ear. Of what? I knew not in the least, but of something terrible. I believe that if a fish had thought of springing out of water, as often happens, no more would have been needed to make me fall stiff and insensible.

Nevertheless, by a violent effort, I succeeded in gradually recovering my lost reason. I took again my bottle of rum and drank deep draughts. Then the idea occurred to me, and I began to shout with all my strength, turning successively to the four points of the horizon. When my throat was absolutely paralyzed, I heard a dog barking in the distance.

I drank again and stretched myself at full length on the bottom of the boat. I remained thus for perhaps an hour, perhaps two, without sleeping, with eyes wide open, and with terrors around me. I dared not rise, yet I wished intensely to do so. I put it off from minute to minute. I said to myself, "Come, stand up," and I was afraid to make a movement. At last I raised myself with infinite precautions, as if my life depended on the slightest sound I might make, and looked over the side of the boat.

I was dazzled by the most marvelous, the most astonishing sight that could possibly be seen. It was one of those phantasmagoria of fairyland, one of those visions related by voyagers who return from afar, and which we hear without believing.

The mist, which for two hours before was floating on the river, had gradually receded and gathered on the river banks. Leaving the stream entirely clear, it had formed on each shore an unbroken bank six or seven yards in height, which gleamed beneath the moon with the superb brilliancy of snow. Thus, not a thing was visible save the river flashing with fiery lights. Between those two white hills of mist, and high overhead hung full and large a majestic, luminous moon in the midst of a black sky dotted with stars.

All the creatures of the water were awake. The frogs were croaking furiously, while at intervals, now at the right, now at the left, I heard the short, sonorous, undulating note which the ringing voices of the toads uttered to the stars. Strangely I was no longer afraid. I was surrounded by a scene so extraordinary that the most striking singularities had no power to astonish me.

How long this lasted I know not, for I had ended by falling asleep. When I opened my eyes, the moon had set, the sky was covered with clouds, the water rippled monotonously, the wind was blowing, it was cold, and the darkness was profound.

I drank what remained of my rum, then I listened, shivering with cold, to the rustling of the reeds and the sinister sound of the river. I tried to see, but I could not distinguish the boat nor even my hands, which I held before my eyes.

Gradually, however, the thick darkness diminished. Suddenly I seemed to feel a shadow gliding very near me. I uttered a cry and a voice answered. It was a fisherman. I called to him. He drew near, and I told him of my mischance. He then pulled his boat alongside mine, and we both strained at the chain. The anchor did not move. Day dawned, sombre, gray, rainy, cold—one of those days which bring one gloom and misfortune.

I perceived another boat. We hailed it. The man who rowed it united his efforts with ours. Then, little by little, the anchor yielded. It came up but slowly and burdened with a considerable weight. At length we saw a dark mass, and we drew it into my boat.

It was the body of an old woman with a stone fastened to the neck.—Guy de Maupassant.

The W. C. T. U. of Battle Creek are fit to quarantine. Adam Arnold, a notorious character, died there the other day and willed this organization his entire law estate which was accumulated by crime and selling liquor. Arnold, a short time before his death had been convicted of murdering his wife son. What do you imagine the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Battle Creek will do about it?

A curious epitaph is to be seen on a tombstone in a cemetery in one of the suburbs of Paris. The slab marks the last resting place of a husband and wife. The husband died first and he wrote the record of his name and age. His wife was paced at his request the line "I am anxiously awaiting you. July 29, 1857." Forty years later his devoted spouse followed him to the grave and the following line completed the record on the stone: "Here I am. Sept. 9, 1897."

While Mr. Ingalls is to the main correct in his statement to the effect that pigilism is not a learned profession, it comes, nevertheless, very close to it. As conducted nowadays pugilism requires a knowledge of anatomy, oratory, pneumatics, journalism, calisthenics, gymnastics, hold-pass-hide, Chesterfieldian etiquette, letter-writing, alimentation, and mastication, and various other accomplishments more or less important. Modern science demands a great deal of versatility on the part of the pug, and, if Yale confers a degree on Mr. Corbett, pugilism may yet claim a place among the learned professions.

In a United States court at Philadelphia, recently, several applicants for naturalization as American citizens were before the bar. Judge Butler questioned each one of them to find out what evidence there might be of his being "attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same." To one applicant he said, "What privilege will you get by becoming a citizen of the United States?" "I would get a license, sir," answered the man. In Philadelphia, it seems, no one can obtain a license to sell intoxicating liquor unless he is a citizen of the United States, and this man had only betrayed the fact that the secret of his "attachment to the principles of the Constitution" was his desire to poison the people with alcoholic liquors! One purpose of our laws relating to naturalization should be to exclude from the privilege men whose motives are of this type. They are altogether too common among the applicants for citizenship.

A Kansas newspaper man has caused much commotion in his town and caused several engagements to be broken on off by the publication of the following observation. "What can a sensible young man think when he observes a strong, fat girl laying around amusing herself with fancy work or quilting or running to every shindig and lecture while her poor, sick, and worn-out mother takes in washing to support the family?" No less than a dozen young ladies have called upon him for a retraction and the village is rent from center to circumference

No wise statesman will care for the New York law that is to forbid carrooning without the consent of the person cartooned. Nothing keeps an ambitious man so well before the public as a cartoon; and if he is not a very bad man, no cartoon is likely to injure him. The fact is that the cartoon cannot be spared to any man who wants to reach all the people.

Another of the Balak'ava 600 has just died in Pennsylvania. From the number of these daring horsemen who have died peacefully in the midst of every part of the old countries and the new, it is reasonable to suppose that there was a missing link in the enumeration of the Light Brigade. It must have been, instead of a light brigade, a heavy army corps.

BOON TO UNSOPHISTICATED.

Gas Burner That Can Be Blown Out Without Danger of Asphyxiation.

A safety gas burner—one which will automatically and surely close itself in the event of extinguishment of the flame—has recently been invented by Arbon Mitchell. It consists of a small spring gas valve with a rubber column inserted, having a long opening, with a valve operating by a peculiar spring, which, obeying the law of expansion by heat and contraction by cold, opens in proportion to the amount of heat evolved. In naturally cold air a small flame is used, which is sorbed by an increased current of cold gas, it proportionately closes the valve, thereby regulating the consumption, and permitting only sufficient gas to pass through to keep the flame burning, and effectually closing the burner. As soon as the flame is blown up, takes up a greater amount of oxygen from heavenward, and the valve produces a more perfect combustion, thereby reducing the heat, and thus the spring contracting and giving a more brilliant illumination with less gas.—Indianapolis Journal.

MISTLETOE IN HER HAT

Latest Scheme of the Unpleasable Girl to Secure Kisses From Friends.

The up-to-date Chicago girl is not losing any chances, and her ingenuity is being employed to the utmost in the mistletoe superstition. Everybody knows that according to the fable the mistletoe grows down from the tree of the Druids, a man is at perfect liberty to kiss a girl who happens to be under a sprig of mistletoe—that is, if the girl is willing. It is a fine practice to hang a sprig of mistletoe to the chandelier of a room near Christmas time, and sometimes the sprig or the bough so rooted is very big. Some girls are so desirous of keeping down the movement for the liberty of crete and of securing kisses that they actually have in novice earned the confidence of some fellow and have given suggestions which rightfully belong to the Cretans."

LEVEE GIVES WAY

BREAK ON THE LOUISIANA SIDE BELOW NATCHEZ.

Waters Rushing Through Two Crevasses as Big as Rivers and Madison Parish Is Fast Becoming Inundated —Great Loss and Suffering on the Lower Red River — Many Farms Under Water at St. Vincent.

Memphis, April 20. — Another break in the levee on the Louisiana side is reported from a point twenty miles below Natchez, Miss. The details at this writing are meager and the extent of the break cannot be learned. The situation at Biggs, where the water is rushing through the crevasse in torrents, is growing worse. Madison parish is fast becoming inundated and the river will extend to other parishes, destroying thousands of acres of newly planted crops. Vicksburg, Natchez and other cities are being inundated with refugees and everything possible is being done to alleviate the suffering of the unfortunates. Calls for aid have been sent out from sections of the overflowed Mississippi delta, and, while the waters are slowly receding, the suffering and destitution increases. The situation throughout the delta is reported as very serious. The people are flocking in the flood stricken section, and the planters hope that the waters will soon recede so that they can make a good crop. At Memphis the river is slowly falling and at Cairo a decided fall is reported. At Memphis and Cairo the weather bureau has issued the following: "The executive committee of the flood sufferers relief committee of Memphis after returning from a trip to the crevasse in Madison parish, Louisiana, and other points in the overflowed district, has issued the following appeal: Realizing that the judgment of the executive committee, the funds now in hand will be all probability, be sufficient for demands, and the contributions to the relief fund should cease. If any future emergency should arise the public will be duly notified."

THE TERRIBLE FLOOD.

Great Loss and Suffering on the Lower Red River.

Pembina, N. D., April 20.—The water here is now higher than ever before in high water mark of 1882, and the highest known for 20 years. The storm Sunday from the north made it fall six inches, but did great damage. A house floated down the river from St. Vincent to South Pembina. The water is still rising and many stacks and crossing in the city has been washed and blown away. Over 1,000 of all around is covered with water for miles. Many are suffering and much damage has been done by this terrible flood.

Grand Forks — Drayton has wired that two houses there were swept away during the night. Help is asked for the steamer Grand Forks to come to the relief of the sufferers in the country near there.

Winnipeg, April 20. — Cold with a high wind and snow greatly aggravates the flood situation. The river is slightly higher, and looks like a lake with high waves and whitecaps. Many of the people have left their establishments. Section men cannot face the storm to the sufferings of families driven out of homes were greatly increased by cold.

A SEA OF WATER.

Many of the Finest Farms Around Grand Forks Under Water.

St. Vincent, Minn., April 20.—The rise in the past twenty-four hours has been five inches. This morning the river became stationary and later it began to fall. The water is now seven miles across North Dakota is a sea of water. Farmers are now living in the upper stories of their houses, granaries and stables on the highest knolls have been converted into cow stables, and it is impossible to lean out their grain, and a further rise will ruin the crop. Many fine forest farms are several feet under water. Stock is driven to high spots upon which the water is still rising. Furniture, supposed to be stowed safely away in second stories, is floating around them by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be forever destroyed; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

We will give one Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Horrid Torture.

This is often felt in every joint and muscle of the body by those in people who, experiencing the earliest twinges of rheumatism, proceed to subject the disease to dry, as they may easily do, with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a professionally authenticated remedy for the agonizing complaint. Recollect that rheumatism unchecked often lasts a lifetime, or absolutely incapacitates it when the stomach attacks the heart. The Bitters also remedies chills and fever, dyspepsia and liver complaint.

A change of time of morning trains will occur on the N. P. next Sunday. No. 1 will leave St. Paul at 4:15 instead of 7 o'clock as at present, and the train from Duluth will change so as to connect at Staples with No 1. This would bring the Duluth train in here at about 8 p. m. instead of 10:30.

The saloon of Ed. Cullen, in East Brainerd, was broken into on Sunday night last, and goods to the amount of nearly $100 was stolen. The burglars effected an entrance by breaking in the front door. No money was left in the building for them to steal, but the miscreants took as near as Mr. Cullen can estimate about $50 worth of cigars and a large quantity of bottled goods, as much as they could carry. As there is no police protection in that part of the city the thieves pursued their calling at will, and had they had a team they could have emptied the store without being stopped. It would seem that the East Brainerd people are entitled to an officer at night.

The Staples World says that J. M. Glunt was at Brainerd Saturday evening in consultation with the citizens and Pap Thomas post committee appointed to make arrangements for the G. A. R. encampment to be held in this city June 22, 23, and 24. He says both committees are putting forth every effort to make the encampment a complete success, the citizens' committee being, if possible, the more enthusiastic than the G. A. R. boys themselves.

This afternoon a mass convention is being held at Sylvan Lake, the object being to nominate the candidates for county commissioners for the newly organized county of Cass and also to name a set of county officers which will be submitted to Gov. Clough and he will be asked to abide by the action of this meeting and make his appointments accordingly, but itis dollars to doughnuts that this convention will not name a majority of the winners.

The Mill Begins.

The Brainerd Lumber Co's mill began operations Tuesday morning, and the loud blasts of the whistle were joyous sounds to a great many men who have been waiting for the mill to resume operations to get work. It is reported there were enough men there looking for jobs to run three mills of that size. Everything ran as smoothly as when the mill closed down last season, and lumber is being turned out to as good advantage as during the middle of the season. Night work will commence next Monday, when as many men more will be needed.

The Jewish Passover.

The Jewish Passover began last Friday the 16th, and continues until tomorrow night, a period of eight days. The period is observed by the Jewish people both orthodox and liberal as a period when only unleavened bread is eaten. The first, second and last days are the principal ones of the Passover. The significance of the eating of unleavened bread is found in the tradition that the Jewish people in their exodus from Egypt had no time to leaven the dough already in their troughs. An earlier basis is found in the religious feasts that occurred at the opening of the harvest season.

The preliminary examination was held on Wednesday, and Mr. LaFond was discharged by Judge Hoffman, who presided in the absence of Judge Alderman.

Wm. Staley and Ola Boss, whose arrest was mentioned last week, had their preliminary examination before Judge Alderman in the municipal court on Monday. Witnesses for the state were examined showing the probable guilt of Staley, and also implicating Mr. Boss. No testimony was offered by the defense, but a motion was made by attorney Warner for the defense, asking for the discharge of the prisoners on the ground that the alleged offense was committed in Cass county, and said county had by the present legislature been detached from Crow Wing, consequently this court had no jurisdiction. The motion was denied and Staley was bound over to await the action of the grand jury in the sum of $250. Ola Boss was released on his own recognizance, to appear before the grand jury. When finished it will probably be the finest market in the northwest.
