THE law supplements will be published the first week in May.

AMONG the new laws passed was one that requires two witnesses to all chattel mortgages.

THE legislature of Kentucky elected W. J. Bebee, Republican, United States senator on Wednesday.

THE services which the patrons of the electric light are getting at present is at least equal to a dip candle system.

IT must be that these airships have caused a terrible commotion overhead, judging from the amount of wind storms we are getting.

THE list of unused Northern Pacific railroad lands as certified to by the land commissioner, amounts to 165,470 acres in Crow Wing county, and 83,147 in Cass.

WADENA is to have a new telephone system, and this is one of the fact that the recent legislature passed a law imposing a tax on the gross earnings of telephone systems.

ON May 12th the competitive examination for the purpose of deciding an appointment to the United States military academy at West Point will occur at St. Cloud. Here is a chance for some Brainerd boy to distinguish himself.

THE Stearns county school case has been decided at St. Cloud, Judges Searle and Baxter declaring that no sectarian or religious exercises are permissible in the public schools under the law and strictly prohibits the teaching of the catechism.

STAPLES is to have a new paper, the Tribune, which will be a free silver organ. The people of Staples already have a bright, newsy sheet in the World, and the town is not large enough to support, decently, two papers. It will be the survival of the fittest, and the World is very close to the people of our neighbor city.

THE six free silverites who were elected members of the city council of St. Cloud at the recent election, have resigned from the committees to which they were appointed by the president of that body. They are a good deal like the boy who wouldn't play unless he could have his way. They propose to set back and see the other nine members run the machine. Their constituents must be proud of them.

IT has been decided by Judge Orr, of the municipal court at St. Paul, that liquor dealers are not responsible, and says: "A license permitting a person to sell intoxicating liquors for a given time is a personal privilege granted to the individual who has made the application in due form. It is a personal privilege it cannot, therefore, be assigned. It then follows that a transfer of a license is illegal and void and confers no privilege upon the person to whom it is transferred."

THE Detroit Record does not appear to relish the manner in which its present county attorney, J. N. Tyrrell, is running things, judging from the following:

It is several years now since Becker county revenue orders have been recorded and placed on interest "for want of funds," but at the first blush one might easily reach the conclusion that when the next legislature meets it will be necessary to secure authority for an issue of bonds to pay floating indebtedness of the county, and money will be in brisk demand with farmers and business men who will be compelled to give mortgages for the purpose of paying expenses of litigation. It went take many years of the work of a reform county attorney to accomplish all this.

It is optional, according to a law just passed in Minnesota, with the board of aldermen or county commissioners, to purchase voting machines to be used at elections. The cost of these machines range from $200 to $300 each, and with them in use no clerks of election are necessary, and the result is ready to be announced as soon as the polls are closed, the usual judges of election being present with the same as now. These machines are in successful operation in New York, Maine and Massachusetts, but it will probably be some time before they're in general use in this state, for the expense being against their introduction, although the saving of two or three elections would go a long way towards paying for the same.

BEGINNING with 1898 an entirely new system in regard to the payment of taxes on real property will be inaugurated under a new law just passed. The general provisions are that one-half the amount of taxes due may be paid before June 1st, and the balance on or before November 1st. The law provides that 10 per cent penalty for non payment on or before the last day of May of each year accrues on the whole year's taxes, but if half the tax is paid before June 1st, no penalty will accrue until November 1st following, and then if the remaining one-half tax is still unpaid, a 10 per cent penalty on such remaining half shall immediately accrue. An additional 5 per cent penalty also shall accrue on the first Monday in January following, on all unpaid taxes of the preceding year. County auditors are personally liable to their counties for all penalties not charged up. The change in the system is after the Ohio law, and it is expected that it will be a relief to many, and especially to the farmers of Minnesota, as the last payment comes after the crop has been harvested.

CHARLES RUFFEE IN TROUBLE.

Arrested for Falsifying His Naturalization Papers and Taken to Washington, D. C.

A telegram from Washington, D. C., states that Charles A. Ruffee of Crow Wing county, Minn., is confined in the district jail there, the charge against him being that of falsifying his naturalization papers in furtherance of an alleged fraudulent claim brought by him against the United States. Ruffee was delivered into the custody of Marshal Wilson, of this district, tonight by Marshal R. T. O'Connor of Minnesota, and was confined in the station house. He could not furnish $10,000 bail demanded and was committed to jail.

Some time ago, it is said, Ruffee brought a claim against the government for $100,000 for alleged depredations committed by Indians during his term of office as Indian agent at the White Earth agency in Minnesota. The claim was presented to the court of claims, which sent an agent to St. Cloud, Stearns county, to obtain from the clerk of the court all the records in the case and brought them here. They were compared with the records filed by Ruffee and it was found, so it is alleged, that he had dated the copy of his naturalization papers, filed with the claims, back to 1866, in order to bring the claim within the period of his citizenship and make him a legitimate claimant. In 1877, it is alleged, Ruffee took out naturalization papers.

The following telegram from the Minneapolis Journal the day after the above was published seems to indicate that the offense is not as serious as supposed at first, and also brings the news that Mr. Ruffee has secured bail.

The message reads:

Charles A. Ruffee of Crow Wing, Minn., who was brought here by Marshal O'Connor under indictment of the United States court, charged with altering a date in his naturalization papers, was arraigned in the criminal court here at 9 o'clock today. Judge Cole did not consider the offense near as serious as did the Minnesota judge and reduced the amount of bail to $1,000. Senator Davis became surety.

MORE IN DETAIL.

The Pioneer Press Washington correspondent has the following account of the matter.

Charles A. Ruffee of Brainerd, Minn., who was brought here last night by Marshal O'Connor of Minnesota and lodged in jail on the charge of uttering a false document to the naturalization papers, which certificate is alleged to have been filed in connection with certain papers on a claim filed by Mr. Ruffee under the Indian depredations act, was released on bail today. Mr. Ruffee was brought here on account of the fact that bail had been fixed by a court commissioner of Minnesota at $10,000, and as bonds were not furnished the United States court at Mankato ordered that he be brought here to answer to an indictment found by the authorities of the government here. Immediately upon his arrival here Mr. Ruffee was taken to the police station and on Sunday morning he was taken to the jail. Today he was released upon bonds of $1,000 only, which were furnished by Senator Davis. Attorney A. A. Lipscomb of this city was engaged to attend to the case, and Mr. Ruffee will depart for his home tomorrow to prepare for his defense.

When seen at the National hotel today Mr. Ruffee declined to discuss the matter more than to say that the reports published in the papers gave an exaggerated account of the case and that some of the statements made were entirely false and without foundation. Mr. Ruffee was canvassed by his attorney and by Senator Davis against saying anything about the case, but the facts as near as they can be ascertained are substantially as follows:

In 1867 Ruffee took a contract from the government to establish a mail route from Fort Abercrombie, Minn., now Breckenridge, and Helena, Mont., a distance of about a thousand miles. He arranged with the Indians for safe passage through the country, purchased the necessary horses, established stations, which could remain and performed all the necessary work in order to get the mails transferred according to the terms of the contract. The route was not long in operation when the Indians broke faith with Ruffee, burned the stations, captured most of the horses and put a stop to carrying out the contract and caused him many losses. Ruffee by the destruction of his property. Mr. Ruffee came to this country from Nova Scotia, several years before, and some time about 1867 he made formal declaration of his intention to become a citizen. During the time which followed the losses by Ruffee on account of the destruction of his mail route he made no call upon the government for the loss he had sustained, because there was no law for it, which he could prosecute, and for five years ago, however, when the Indian depredation bill was passed, he filed a claim for restitution. It appears that under the law as construed a person must be a citizen of this country in order to prosecute a claim for Indian depredations. The allegation is made that among the papers filed in the claim is a certificate of naturalization, with the date of Ruffee's citizenship altered back to 1867, but it is claimed that he declared his intention and eleven years before the naturalization took place. It was on the charge of offering such fraudulent or altered certificate of the following year, then if the remaining one-half tax is still unpaid, a 10 per cent penalty on such remaining half shall immediately accrue. An additional 5 per cent penalty also shall accrue on the first Monday in January following, on all unpaid taxes of the preceding year. County auditors are personally liable to their counties for all penalties not charged up. The change in the system is after the Ohio law, and it is expected that it will be a relief to many, and especially to the farmers of Minnesota, as the last payment comes after the crop has been harvested.

For the New Hat.

The most notable changes this season, as compared with last spring, are confined more particularly to materials. A fine straw woven to look like canvas, called Batavea cloth, and a silky Maline net in all colors, are the real novelties. Taffetas silk, chiffon, and velvet can hardly be called new materials, but they are distinct features among this season's hat trimmings. Velvet appears in large quantities, even on Leghorn hats for midsummer wear. Moire ribbon is very fashionable but it is oftener used four inches wider than narrower. For those who like more fanciful things there are tiny checked ribbons with a half-inch stripe of contrasting color down each edge, besides many others, all beautiful; but on the imported hats more predominates. Steel and Rhinestone ornaments appear on many of these.—From "Spring Millinery," in Demorest's Family Magazine for April.

THE GODS ARE DEAD.

The gods are dead! Perhaps they are! Who knows?
Living at home in Lempriere's undelated,
The Pantheon's empty—we're the poorer.
Are one and all, I like to think, reinstated
In some still land of lilacs and myrrh?

Once high they sat, and high o'er earthly shows
With sacrificial dance and song were greeted;
Once, long ago, but now the story goes,
The gods are dead.

It must be true. The world, a world of prose,
Full crammed with facts, in science swaddled and shotted,
Nods in a shuttered alley dinner dose.
Plagued by no god and, in every wind that blows
Who will may hear the awful words repeated,
The gods are dead.
—W. E. Henley in New York Times.

WARNED IN VAIN.

Aunt Jerusha had never seen nor heard of the above, so she flung up the window and popped out her head with the grace and spring of a mechanical toy.

"Lawa! Mercy sakes! Weal, I never in all my life! If that don't beat the Dutch!"

Aunt Jerusha's vis-a-vis at the table on the window sash had an unenormously flung up was a handsome young man—an artist, in fact—who had come to Seedville to sketch. He took no trouble to explain he could not help it, but dropped as simply as possible into the simplicity of its life.

"Mrs. Spearmint," he said mildly, "if you will shut the window my backwheats and sausage will be much warmer."

"Oh, but sakes alive!" she responded. "Do look quick and never mind your backwheats. Ain't that the curiostest thing you ever did see in all your born days!—and there ain't the shadder of a horse to it."

Miss Stanfield grew interested. He tore himself from his backwheats and projected his head from the window, staring down the narrow lane across which Aunt Jerusha lived with the true Seedville stare.

"Queer, ghost!"

"What! Be it a ghost!" asked Aunt Jerusha, yanking in her head and locking keenly at him, as if one or the other of them might be growing crazy.

"I might have known that no one but Miss Waterloo would have ventured into this region with an automobile tilbury. That bridge will never hold her." And seizing his hat, he rushed out of the house and down the narrow elm shaded street after the horseless carriage.

"Whatever has struck that man!" cried Aunt Jerusha, bringing down the window with a bang, now that the show was out of sight. "What did he—is—he—mean, was he was a-goin' to go into—into—Waterloo, or what was it? Well, I'm sure I don't know. I'm sure I'm much obliged to him for his warnin', I'm sure. Mebbe I'd better git a doctor?"

"If somebody would send a telegram for me," said Miss Waterloo, "I would."

"Wait! P'raps Mr. Stanfield will. He's an awful nice young man and as harnsome as a picter." And shoving an old fashioned rocker toward Miss Waterloo, Mrs. Spearmint rushed up stairs to the studio.

"Mr. Stanfield!"

No answer.

"Be you asleep?"

"Yes, sir."

"Waal, there's been an accident to the waterloo, and she's down stairs wantin' to see her telegram."

The studio door flew open. Vilas was past Mrs. Spearmint and down the stairs, three steps at a time, but he did not telegraph. He got the automobile tilbury from the water. He scopped it up and rubbed it and set it till it looked as well as when it left the manufacturer. Then, because Miss Waterloo's arm was so out of order, he got into the horseless carriage beside her and took her to her father's house. Later he took her to his home.—Chicago News.

Curious Surnames.

Among the curious and suggestive surnames in a certain county in north Minnesota are the following: Red, White, Blue, Green, Gray, Brown and Black. There are also Kings, Queens, Earls, Dukes, Marquises and Lords. In animated nature are to be found Wrens, Birds, Cows, Hawks and also Hawkins and Fowlers. Among quadrupeds are Wolfe, Lamb, Lyon, Bull, Stier and Redfield. At one time, in a county in eastern Kansas, there lived Redwine, Sourbeer, Dybread and Pancake.—Chicago Tribune.

WHEN THE SULTAN GOES TO ISPAHAN.

When the Sultan Shah Zaman
Goes to the city Ispahan,
Ere he gets so far
As the place where the clustered palm trees are,
At the head of the thirty palace gates,
By the Tigris' hanging Hall of Dishdom,
Orders a feast in his favorite room,
Where the fragrant air is scented
Sweetened with syrup, tinctured with spice,
Creams and cordials and sugared dates,
Figs, apples, Chinanese quinces,
Limes and citrons and apricots
And wines that are known to eastern princes,
And Nubian slaves and smoking pots
Filled with the hemp that is called bhang.
And all that the curious palate could wish,
Pass in and out of the cedarn doors.
Are served on golden platters.
Are consumed by the parrot-colored apes.
And a musical fountain throws its jets
Of a perfumed color into the air.
The dusk sultanas loosen their hair
Which is stained with a henna dye,
And the tips
Of her pointed nails and bites her lips
Till that bloom again but, alas, that rose
Not for the sultan looks she loves.
Not for the sultan her heart beats,
Not for the sultan she sighs,
Filled with the breath of sandalwood
And Khoten musk and aloes and myrrh,
Bits Rose-in-Bloom on a silk divan,
Dreaming of Ahkmar Ahkman,
And her Arab lover, fair with her
Who is the favorite of Shah Zaman
Close to the city Ispahan.

Now when I see an extra light
Flaming, flickering on the night
From my neighbor's casement opposite
I know as well as I know to pray,
That the innocent Shah Zaman
Has gone to the city Ispahan.
—Francis Bailey Adotch.

THE PASSING OF THE LOCOMOTIVE.

"Ah, well," said the iron horse, bearing a sigh that was followed anon by a tear,
"They've made me do everything else but fly
Since electricity came to here.

"From hitting an hour for every twelve miles
I've come to the fifty-mile limit,
The Yankee rascalities tie toll and smiles
As he rushes my poor self through it.

"When tempers I have bowled, I have gone to the front,
The head of the blizzard to check.
Of countless collisions I've taken the brunt
And been laid to the ruins a wreck.

"Now, like the 'old woman,' they say I must go
And so make a place for the 'new,'
Then send a hack driver to a minnie's tow show
For the Yankee. I know what I'll do—

"I'll go back to England, for over the sea
I was followed anon by a tear,
Though the old things of England are new to me
The new things of England are old.

"There a thousand long years are the same as a day
And a day as a thousand years.
Another old thing has started away
Another old thing appears.

"Adieu to the land of the setting sun.
Adieu to the land of the free.
I'll just jog along to the end of my run.
You just go your way, and I'll go mine."
—Cy Warman in New York Sun.

Culture Alone Not Sufficient.

In our days culture has been proposed as a substitute for religion and poetry offered as a better guide for our lives than the loving word of God. "More and more," says Matthew Arnold, "men will discover that we have to turn to poetry to interpret life for us, to console us, to sustain us. Without poetry our science will appear incomplete, and most of what now passes with us for religion and philosophy will be replaced by poetry." I doubt if it were well to offer moonlight instead of warm sunlight, for poetry and culture are but a reflection of religion, and history shows us that they cannot long survive its absence. Men of a vaguely speculative bent and a more than ordinary share of refinement, like Matthew Arnold and Emerson, are not hard to be found, who think they find in culture all that they need to direct and purify their lives. Academic movements and Brook Farm experiments may, when they are successful, beget an elevating atmosphere for a time, but in the end culture, left to itself, will become the culture of Nero and Petronius Arbiter rather than that of Socrates and Saint Pompeii.—American Quarterly Review.

A St. Louis Experiment.

The advanced or advancing women of St. Louis are to have a billiard room of their own, a new departure in the fashionable pastime of a bowling alley, a place in which to read the papers and a mysterious something or somethings rather vaguely described as "other features." All this is to be provided as a strictly private club, run by a man who has hitherto sought only the patronage of masculine players of the scientific game, and who now establishes the new purpose to admit any woman, whether alone or accompanied by a husband, influence or sweetheart. Nothing is said about friends or mere acquaintances, but it is probable that they, too, will be allowed to enter when properly introduced and professing an inclination to assume in proper time one or the other of the nearer and dearer relationships. The experiment has as yet been tried in only one place—Vienna. There it is said to have worked well, and St. Louis is watching with interest to see what the developments will be on American soil. —St. Louis Correspondence.

Many of them are engaged in wheeling most of the time, but they enjoy the privilege of trundling a baby perambulator to gliding swiftly along on the silent street, and the new movement is having a great run.

The word "tip," so much in use at the present time, had, it is said, its origin in an old custom in English taverns where a "servant's box," or receptacle for small coin, was often seen. To this box the guests of the inn were all supposed to contribute their mite, and at regular intervals the box was opened and the contents distributed among the servants. Upon the box was inscribed this legend: "To insure promptness. The initials of this sentence form the word "tip," and thus we have the word.

A Washington dispatch says that Americans bound for Turkey should have their passports vised by a Turkish consul. Minister Terrell, at Constantinople, sends the state department a note verbale which he has received from the sublime porte calling attention to the fact that foreigners sometimes arrive without passports, or with passports without the Ottoman consul's vise. This state of things says the sublime porte, being contrary to the provisions of the regulations on passports, it advises that Americans have their passports acted upon by consuls before leaving home.

Among the conspicuous imported nuisances must be counted the Venetsuela water hyacinth. If it has a chance it may rank second to the English sparrow. It has been in this country only a few years and its field has been largely yet it has spread so as to practically closing perhaps two hundred navigable miles of Florida's great river, the St. John's. It grows in streams from the seed and from runners. A field of it completely covers the water, and no steamer can force its trate it beyond a short distance. The federal government has been asked for an appropriation with which to fight the Venezuelan hyacinth.

The chimes of St. Saviour's, Southwark, London, the church in which John Harvard was baptized, have been long silent. The full restoration of the chimes will not be complete until the bells ring again. The chimes represent centuries of peals and chords, with their message summounting to worship and to exultations and lamentings. An authority on the subject says that the tenor and tone of the seven bells date back to 1735, being recast in that year from an older peal made in 1424 out of the metal of seven bells of which the remote history nothing is known except that they bore respectively the names of "Mary," "Stephen," "Anne," "Lawrence," "Vincent," "Nicholas," and "Augustine." The voices of these bells have sounded through age of human history. They symbolize the divine call to prayer and praise that never ceases its appeals to the generations of men as they pass on to learn its full meaning in the realities of another world.

It is not to be wondered that there is a protest against the use of cigarettes and cigars by women in England. While women have the same right as men to have habits, it is certain that a woman with a cigar or a cigarette in her mouth looks sweet! And ought not every woman to look sweet?

ITS WORK IS OVER.

THE MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE ADJOURNS SINE DIE.

A Brief Sketch of the Legislation Enacted—Last Day Proceedings—The Same, and the Appropriations Are Smaller—An Inheritance Tax Provided for—Banking Legislation—Constitutional Amendments.

The legislature of 1897 has wound up its affairs and adjourned sine die. Appropriations and taxes are undoubtedly of the greatest interest to the people at large who pay the bills. In the matter of appropriations the legislature has made a record for economy that will commend itself to the approval of all fair minded men, political bias. The total for the session of 1897 is $1,365,336.75, as against that of the session for a number of years. The one bill carried $1,365,336.75. This total is slightly in excess of that of 1895 and 1893, but the bill can safely be said to be the smallest bill that has been allowed to remain at the figure of the last two years, $1.5 mills. It might have been somewhat reduced, perhaps, to 3.5 mills, or even 3 mills, but the legislature could not have wiped out the surplus and would almost certainly have increased the levy. The levies of the levy two years from now, sometime during the people would have a very great deal more than they would have paid under the appropriations of 1897. In addition to this levy the school levy has been increased from .6 mill to .8 mill, and the university a larger income.

In addition to the direct taxation the legislature has embarked on a series of experiments in the taxation of railroad corporations under the constitutional amendment adopted in 1896. The effect of the house levying a gross earnings tax upon the gross earnings of railroads, sleeping car companies and telephone companies and a tonnage tax upon the freight line and equipment companies and a mileage tax upon the sleeping line and the sleeping car bills were passed by the house and senate. The other two are still in his possession. It is understood that Governor Clough is in the house that they would produce an aggregate revenue of about $2,000,000. The senate cut down the tax upon the express companies from 3 to 2 per cent, and made a similar reduction in the telegraph companies' tax. The senate also limited the operations of the express tax, so that it does not apply to property, whether it will produce more than a million dollars less revenue than the house bill, which provided for a double tax upon the gross earnings of express companies, and a valuation tax upon the property of the same. The most important feature of this legislation leaves these properties still subject to general taxation, and it is but fair to the legislature to say that it is the belief of a large number of competent judges of this subject are of the opinion that under the present law the valuation of the railroads will be increased by the board of equalization to such an extent as to provide for a tax of as much as the house bill, which provided for a double tax upon the gross earnings

THE ROBIN'S NEST.

(Cathrine Young Glen in Leslie's Popular Monthly.)

HE apple tree, nestling against the old white house, had put on its new spring gown. Never before did the leaves come out so early. The pink buds blush so deep a pink; never before the bees hum so loudly, or the wind carry the fragrance so far. On one of the greatest mornings in all the May came two birds to the tree —two robins, in their honeymoon, who were out in search of a home. They put their heads first on this side, then on that; wished, perhaps, it had been a cherry tree; calculated the probable number of small boys in the neighborhood who were making collections of eggs; the angle-worm crop in the fields below; in short, all those minute bits of house-hunting lore interesting to an outsider than to those concerned.

Robin Red Breast shut his head very near his wife, and, they talked it all over with a great deal of twittering and many a tender glance!

"So sweet a spot, dear!" cried Shall it be here?" Nobody heard what the little bride said. If she spoke at all it was very low, and there was need that but one should hear—perhaps it was only a look. Be that as it may, the mate stretched his brown wings twice, thrice for the joy of it, and darted off and away, down over the meadow, his red breast twinkling above the green. "Home! home!" he sang. Oh, the bride's heart, for reason why! His heart was overflowing, and he could not keep it to himself.

All the while the little bride was taking account of her surroundings. She hopped on one twig, then on another, cocked her head, to one side, her bright eyes, until one might justly conclude she had viewed the matter from every side. She ate a worm, too, that neither had noticed before. Through the open window, framed in with apple boughs, the mate was watching them—a child with great dark eyes and a halo of golden hair. So sweet a face—how like the bird and white! If the little bird had been on the ground just above she might have seen that the child sat in a large wheelchair—sat without moving, her hands clasped in her lap, and hardly daring to breathe for fear of frightening the robins away.

The little bride-bird stood still, too, looked her all over, and waited. By the time her mate had finished his tour of the house, the single room grown to be known to herself, she was ready to begin.

Should it be the crotch at the corner, or the one right under the window between the two big boughs? The branch in the corner was safer, but the breezy locality, but the other was so sheltered, no one could possibly peep from without. Some foolish people, you know, always will take to "love in a cottage." They wasted very few words over the matter—there is little argument when both argue on one side —it was all taken out in hopping and chirping.

"Mamma, mamma!" whispered the child girl at the window; "mamma, only! I think they are building a nest!" She turned her head by inches in her fear of making a "fuss," and, lo! a light step, a rustle of silken skirts, and a lady stood by the chair—a lady who had eyes like the child's, and wavy hair in which the love almost covered the pain—quite hiding it when the little girl raised hers to look, and pushed her hands plazed as by habit with the pretty hair. Her face, too, looked out, not at the birds, but way beyond through the apple-boughs. "They!" she asked, faintly, "who, dear love?" and she used the very name, though she knew it not, that the little mate had just called his bride, for love is always the same.

"The robins," answered the child. "You see two high, mamma. Be soft! Right here, do you see? The dearest husband and wife, and he has the reddest breast, and they have been talking so! Listen, mamma, just hear!" In her excitement she spoke so fast that the mate-robin heard, and stopped short, with a long straw in his bill, which was to serve as a foundation for the house. He rolled it around eyes awhile, then turned and looked at his wife, who was hopping about with the utmost unconcern; so after some reflection, he, too, went to work. Oh!" breathed the little girl, with a long sigh of relief, "he is going to stay, after all. I thought I had scared him away."

The robins did not go, however, and in some mysterious way it came to be an understood affair that they should build their nest below the window, and that the little girl, and often the sweet lady, too, should watch. The shy wife might have told you that some of the shreds woven into the long home had been fragrant hanging conveniently on the twigs, as though they had fallen from the window, this, to mention an ever-ready supply of crumbs, only waiting to be gathered when one was not looked. In the bird world, as in ours, fortune distributes her favors unevenly.

When the bright-eyed husband remembered how many of his friends had to support their families from the sub-barnels, there was a puffed feeling in his heart which he did not try to suppress.

In time went on, and by and by by the bird's nest hung complete. The little girl had waited as patiently as the builders had worked, and their joy was one. "They also serve who only stand and wait," sang Milton and—they, too, perhaps, who only love and wait.

"Mamma, mamma, there will be nestlings now, and the old birds will teach them to fly. I have longed to see it all my life. I could not tell you them, you know, and so they have come to me."

The mother noted the faint tinge on the cheek, the bright look in the eye, and blessed the robins in her heart.

"Yes, dear, they have come to you, bird—like to like—and you shall see them fly."

But birdlings do not grow in a day, and the child watched from the great wheel-chair with patience born of suffering, and a life of pain—watched until five round eggs lay in the nest, tated with heaven's own blue.

At last—oh, the joy of it!—the blue shells broke, and five strange, sad things, with frogs' eyes and yellow bills, nestled under the mother-wings nestled and cuddled until the wings would hardly cover them, and the nest seemed all too small. The brown mother's heart was bursting with joy so, for that matter, was the father's, and the two hung over the nest and it warmed the birdlings, while his ran over in one continual song from the top of the tree, the child, who looked like a guardian spirit from above.

"My birds, my birds!" she whispered, over her clasped hands; "my very, very own!"

The color that had come with the robins slowly faded from cheek and eyes, and the birdlings in the nest grew stronger, the ones in the home grew weaker, and still the days went by. The mother-robin sobered down with five wide mouths to feed, the mother had to stretch her wings a little further every night to keep the nestlings in. The apple buds had long since swelled into blossoms, the blossoms had blown off on the wind in scented showers, leaving the small green balls that were to be apples in the fall, and the leaves had turned to a darker hue. The little girl rested on pillows now, in the wheelchair by the window. A little girl but very still within the curtained bed.

"I must not miss it," she whispered, morning and night, "for then I shall be the mate stretched his brown wings mamma, dear, will you not, and wake me—when—the birdlings—fly?"

The answer was always the same; "I am watching, I am watching! Lie

THEY SHOULD WATCH.

still for a while and rest!"

The times for resting grew longer and the times for waking short.

The sun, sending his last shafts of light through the leaves one late afternoon, touched the eyes so often closed, and they opened at his kiss.

"Is it sunset?" she asked. "Take me up, mamma. I have not said good-night to the robins in so very long."

Tenderly the mother lifted her, while the sweet breath of the tender came up on the breeze, and the leaves were quivering in the golden light. The dear-breasted robin was winging his way home; the brown mother was preening her feathers for the last nest. The child stretched out her hand, the radiance glorifying face and hair. "Good-night, good-night, my birdlings! Mamma, see how the sun goes down! Twill be so beautiful—to-morrow—I think they will not stay!" The head drooped wearily on the pillow that night. "You will wake me—so early —mamma, dear?"

The stars shone and paled, the gray light stole slowly back again, and the first faint blue to the sky. And to the early morning One, long-awaited came, and two went out into the sunrise, but only two came back—one day—leaving a void in the old white house that nothing on earth could fill.

The one who was left stood by still at the window, and looked through the apple boughs with eyes that saw them not. They have been taking so! Listen, mamma, just hear!" In her excitement she spoke so fast that the mate-robin heard, and stopped short, with a long straw in his bill, which was to serve as a foundation for the house. IN WHALE'S STOMACH.

CAPT. DAVIS VISITED THE INTERIOR OF FIVE.

How His Call Differed from Jonah's—All of the Huge Animals Were Dead When He Got In—Their Habits Is Told by a Victim.

APT. S. A. SWINTON, who recently retired the sea for many years, is now keeping a boarding house in Noank, Conn. During his life Capt. Swinnerton was a whaler, says the New York Herald. Naturally he knows other whalers, and when he read Dr. Talmage's recent sermon on Jonah and the whale he bethought himself of Capt. James R. Davis of Noank, a retired whaling captain, 75 years old, who has been "five times a Jonah," which is Capt. Davis' own way of saying that he lived in the bellies of five different whales. Unfortunately for the strictest possible application of Capt. Davis' experiences to the scriptural story, but no doubt fortunately for Capt. Davis himself, his whales were dead. But he was in them—in fact there is no doubt—and he had to resort to smoke a pipe and tell about it, and Capt. Swinnerton has the story of his friend's experience thus:

"I dined yesterday with a man, now 75 years of age, who has lived in the bellies of five different whales. He is Capt. James R. Davis of Noank, Conn., and this was done when he was a young man of 23 years of age. He was one of the crew of the whaling ship Tiger, Capt. William Brewster, of Stonington, Conn., which left that place in 1846, sailing direct around the Horn to the whaling grounds of the Pacific. Afterward the ship sailed to Magdalena Bay, on the Lower California coast. The grayback whales use it as a breeding ground and are found here in large numbers. The cow whales float up on the sandy shore or the still waters and when the tides fall the young whales are born on the beach. The calf when born has its flukes bent up like a hook, and it is several days before this hook straightens out enough for it to use it to swim. The mother whale will sport about the bays until her baby gets the crook out of its tail and then teaches it to swim. The cow whale when about to calve is very fat and valuable and yields about forty barrels of oil from the blubber and seven barrels from the inside heart fat. Some fine milk is also taken from the calf and one strip of blubber and fish. This is called a blanket piece. Then the rifles are cut at the backbone and the blanket piece and the rifles are hauled up from the carcass, leaving a hole in the upper part of the body just back of the head. A man enters this hole and cuts out the fatty substance from about the head, which is shaped like a chicken's gizzard, but is from five feet to seven inches in diameter. Capt. Davis told me he was in a different whale each day for five days, being hauled up in the whale's stomach. Capt. Davis has been a Jonah on five different occasions. The strangest experience of 23 years can live in a whale's stomach, even though the whale be dead, why should not a man live in the belly of the fish three days and as many nights in that famed whale of scripture? Capt. Davis' five whales had not been dead very long when he was in them."

BICYCLE CURVES.

The Feet of the Rider Never Moves Backward.

Almost every bicycler believes that as he rides along his feet move backward with the pedal. He thinks his feet describe a series of circles, following the pedals around and that they move backward and forward just as much as they move up and down, says the New York Journal. This, it has now been found by careful measurement, is quite a mistake. From the time you mount your wheel until you dismount your feet never move backward. They are constantly moving forward, not in circles, but in a series of curves. The reason for this is that as your foot swings under the crank shaft the bicycle moves forward much more rapidly than the pedal swings back. The result is a constant forward movement. While your foot moves through the lowest part of the body, yet it moves more rapidly forward in relation to the ground. It has been found by tracing a bicycle with ordinary gear that the wheels make two and one-quarter revolutions to one revolution of the pedals. Starting your machine when the pedals lie in a horizontal line it will be found that the wheels make one and one-quarter revolution before the pedals again come to a horizontal position, or half-way from the circle they describe. For every inch shaft the latter moves forward more than two inches over the ground. The feet are constantly moving forward, not in circles, but in a series of curves. The reason for this is that as your foot swings under the crank shaft the bicycle moves forward much more rapidly than part of the cycle. If the bicycle were suspended in the air your foot would move backward just as much as it moved forward and upward to just the extent that it moved forward and upward during a series of perfect circles, but in relation to the ground or to any fixed point neither foot ever moves backward or forward from the time you start your bicycle until you stop.

Good Words for Washington.

Gen. H. V. Boynton, the veteran Washington correspondent, has been more than fifty years collecting news and writing letters. Few men know so thoroughly as he the inside history of Congress, the White house, and the departments. Being asked what he considered the most important characteristic in the conference at Washington, he answered,

The marvelous improvement in the moral atmosphere, and the general tone and honesty of the government. We, the people of the United States, have the most honest government in the world. It is and has been for many years more honest than ever before, and is to-day more honestly and efficiently administered than any private business that I am aware of. I mean that there is less waste and less defalcation.

Look at the gross postal service, for instance. Where in the world will you find any private agency which does so much and does it so well, and at so little cost? And change of party makes no difference. Thorough honesty is the rule.

The atmosphere of the white house is pure beyond that of any royal residence, and this is the most economical peaceable city in the United States, if not in the world. It makes me laugh when those good people come from New York and Cincinnati and sway out west to help reform Washington.

The total value of gold in the world at the present time is about $3,000,000,000.

SUGGESTIONS FOR A MODEL KITCHEN.

(Copyrighted, 1897, by The Co-Operative Building Plan Association.)

Very little attention is given to the furnishing of the kitchen, even in the most particular households. If a new house is being built the careful housewife may charge the architect with certain requirements, but these are generally the matter is left wholly to his directions; unless he is a tyro he is not apt to consider modern ideas. Modern improvements in plumbing and in ranges provide the most complete sanitary conditions, and it is scarcely necessary to warn one against the old style of shut in plumbing, that is so important a factor in the health of the rest of the house. Pine is generically chosen, and is as good as any other wood; it should be oiled and given several coats of hard varnish, or else painted in yellow or buff.

Particular attention should be given to the use of thoroughly seasoned wood, for the dampness and stain are trying, at best, and joins should be open as little as possible. All closets and cupboards should be built from the floor to the ceiling without the aid of open shelves or below. The doors should cover just as much of the front as possible, leaving only the very narrow jamb and a shallow sill to open with them when they are opened the entire exterior shelving is exposed to view. Earthenware tubs are cheaper in the long run than wooden ones, although their initial cost is considerably greater. But if wooden ones must be used, be sure they are put in most carefully, as under the feet of careless tractors they give more trouble than any other kitchen fitment.

The drain pipe that traps below should clear the floor so that one may easily clean around them. The coping should go close to the wall, and apart from it should be a high splash board, while a quarter round beading should cover the joint between the two. The hot water boiler should not be jammed tightly into the corner, but should stand a few inches from the wall. This will permit it to be cleaned on all sides, an important consideration if the boiler be of copper. Many things of this sort stint money in laying the kitchen floor; this must be carefully scrubbed, and if the wood checks and splinters the task is heart breaking. Only the highest grades of hard pine flooring can be used, in narrow strips, and it should have frequent dressing. It is no economy to lay a floor in which the use of depending upon a covering of oil cloth or other similar material.

A very common mistake is made in putting in a sink that is too small and in providing no place for the draining of dishes, from the sink may be large, even for the smallest family, and it space will permit it it is well to put in one that is larger than ordinarily seems needed; at both ends should be wide draining shelves, an admirable feature, if a movable one, is a panel of tilting adjoining the sink. This should be capped with a strip of wood to catch the knobs, from the sink may be hung basting spoons, colander, measures, etc. As to furnishing proper, this is a very simple matter, although many people seem to think that it is sufficient to tramp into the kitchen the dilapidated and broken down furniture from other parts of the house. When this is done it is unreasonable to expect that the servants will take any pride in the room or make the most of its possibilities. As there really no excuse for this course, as the cost of excellent new kitchen furniture is merely nominal. There should be in the kitchen a substantial table, a large one and a small one, the latter just about the height of the sink or stove, that will be found extremely convenient in cooking if drawn close to the range, to hold utensils. The chairs should be of the kind that have solid wooden seats, but there should also be at least one comfortable rocking chair, anything that is in the nature of an ornament and that has no utilitarian use is wholly out of place and should be banished from the kitchen. The design presented has a kitchen arranged in accord with the above requirements contained in article.

Hints to Young Authors.

There is but one way for one author to get his wares before the editors, and that is to send his manuscript to the periodical to which he desires it to be best suited. If he deals with the principal publications he can always feel certain of courteous treatment and honest dealings. Prices vary and depend entirely on the value of the material to the publication. Authors always glad to examine manuscripts sent to them, and, all talk to the contrary notwithstanding, are anxious to discover unknown talent.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Had Her Fixed.

Dobkins—You don't seem to be in any hurry about getting married, old boy. Fogg—No; the fact is that I find my wife in angelic temper, no matter how late it is. She is a treasure of a fortune-teller this afternoon. Dobkins—Yes? Fogg—Don't you see? I went there before I came home and had a tune-teller a fiver. Of course Mrs. F. will ask about me and of course I shall get my $75 worth. See?—Boston Transcript.

THE SHEEP OF LEBANON.

They Are Fattened Like the Famous Geese of Strasburg.

Harry Fenn, the artist, has written for the St. Nicholas an account of his visit to the famous cedars of Lebanon, which place is also noted for its silk. Mr. Fenn says: Wherever a handful of earth can be made to rest upon a ledge, there a mulberry plant grows. It is a picturesque and thrilling sight to see a peasant climbing over the precipice, carrying a big basket of earth and cuttings of mulberry twigs to plant in the narrow, sloping beds. The crop of leaves, fodder for the worms, is gathered in the same way. By such patient and dangerous industry have these hardy mountaineers been able to make their wilderness of rock blossom into brightly colored silks. But a single leaf is left on the trees by the time the voracious worms get ready to spin their cocoons, but a second crop comes on later, and a curious use is made of that. The tree-owner purchases one of these big-tailed Syrian sheep, the tail of which weighs twenty pounds when at the full maturity of its fatness; and then a strange stuffing process begins, not unlike the fattening of the Strasburg geese. When the sheep can eat no more the women of the house feed it; and it is not uncommon to see a woman going out to make an afternoon call, leading her sheep by a string, and carrying a big basket of mulberries on her arm. Having arrived at her friend's house, she squats on the ground, sets the basket of mulberries in her right hand, and slips it into the sheep's mouth, then works the sheep's jaw up and down, and as soon as she is sure that the mouthful has been chewed enough, when she thrusts it down into the throat of the unwilling animal. The funny part of the business is that probably half-a-dozen gossips of the village are seated around the yard, all engaged in the same operation. Of course the sheep get immensely fat, and that is the object; for at the killing time the fat is tried out and put into jars, as meat for the winter.

MORAVIAN VIEW OF DEATH.

A Beautiful and Impressive Custom of the Sect.

Clifford Howard contributes to the Ladies' Home Journal an interesting article upon the Moravians of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and their religious customs: "Upon the death of one of the congregation," he writes, "the event is announced, not by the monotonous, mournful tolling of the bell, but by the deep-breathing, melodious sound of the trombone, played by an expert, open-belfry steeple of the church by the trombone choir; and as the deep, solemn notes of the familiar tune are borne to the people below they reverently drop their work to listen. Belief in a Saviour, to be followed by blowing: 'some one has gone home!' 'Gone home!'—perhaps nothing more beautifully expresses the perfect, unquestioning faith of these devout people than that expressive utterance, the serenity of which is ever demonstrated by the lack of the mourning at the passing away of a member of the household. Sorrow for dearly beloved, true and heartfelt is the Moravian belief that death is but the entrance to a brighter, happier world. The coffin bones are also used at the touching funeral services held at the grave; and when they are filled with earth a simple, unadorned stone is laid to his eternal rest. On all occasions, whether of joy or sorrow, the trombone sends forth sweet solemnity in fitting breath. From the steeple they herald the festival day or Sunday, and when the dead in all operation their mellifluous tones are ever present."

A New Botanical Discovery.

The Wonderful Kava-Kava Shrub —Nature's Cure for Diseases of the Kidneys, Rheumatism and other maladies caused by Uric Acid in the Blood.—A Blessing to Sufferers.

SENT FREE TO PROVE ITS POWER

A few weeks ago we told our readers of the wonderful botanical discovery, the Kava-Kava Shrub, as botanists call it, Piper Methysticum, found on the Ganges River, Asia Minor. This wonderful shrub has proved to be a true specific cure for all diseases arising from Uric Acid in the Blood, such as Kidney and Bladder disorders, Rheumatism etc. It was no doubt used for centuries by the natives as a specific remedy for jungle fevers, miasma, and other maladies, when it was required to clean out the poisons from the blood through the action of the kidneys. European physicians pronounce it the greatest medical boon since the discovery of quinine, which like the Kava-Kava shrub, was first found in use among the natives by Roy, a five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Davis, who live at Ft. Ripley, fell into the river on Friday last, but was rescued by parties who heard the child's cries, who had a hold onto the brush until their arrival. Three hours later the boy died, and it is claimed that it was the result of fright, as he was not in the water long enough to injure him.

Papers have been served on Mayor Nevers in a damage suit against the city, in which Wm. Waldorf asks $1,000, of which $500 is for himself and a similar amount for his wife, Mary Waldorf. Mrs. Annie Cole caused the arrest of George Hase on Thursday, the complaint being for assault, and the case was tried before Judge Alderman on the above day. The trouble was the outcome of a fire which Mr. Hase had started to burn up the rubbish from his yard. Mrs. Cole proceeded to his fire with a pail of water and began to wet it down when Mr. Hase appeared, and in the fracas which followed both were more or less handy with water pails and their contents. The court decided that there was nearly as much blame attached to one as to the other, and discharged the defendant.

Dr. H. J. Riesland, the Brainerd Refractionist, will be in the city at the Windsor House, May 10 to May 16th. If your eyes itch, burn, blur, ache, grow dim, get tired, feel dry and gritty, squint, eyelids inflame and eyeballs become bloodshot, be sure and see the doctor for these symptoms are oftimes the commencement of conditions that may cause you years of suffering and possibly blindness, and you should have advice thereon. Dr. Riesland has made the study of the eye and the fitting of glasses a specialty for many years, and his great success in correcting the work of the so-called eye specialists, is well known. Do not fail to see him and have your eyes and glasses examined. Office hours 8 to 10 a. m., 12 to 3, 6 to 8 p. m. Consultation free.

The Y. M. C. A. Special Meetings.

The meetings which have been conducted under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. of this city, under the leadership of Jim Barwick, closed last Monday night. The last two meetings were held in the First Congregational church on account of the increased size of the congregation. The meeting on Monday night crowded even the Congregational church. At the close of the services all who were Christians, and all who desired to be, were formed into a circle about the room, and joined in singing, "Blest be the Tie that Binds." Those who were privileged to become intimately acquainted with "Jim" will never forget the sweet spirit in which he said and did everything. It was indeed a time of great profit to all who attended the gospel feast. Nor will the men at the shops soon forget the word of truth which was so faithfully presented to them. While the converts did not swell up into the scores, still the work done in these meetings will not have to be done over again. "Jim" knew that he had eternal life, and wanted all who professed conversion to be sure of it too. It is not too much to say that many in Brainerd will never cease to thank God that He sent Jim Barwick to this city.

Country Property Burned.

During the past week fires have raged in various parts of this county and the heavy winds that have prevailed spread the fire over a large territory, but the rain of Tuesday night was sufficient to put them out. Among those whose property was burned was John McCarthy who lost a small house and contents which was located on his farm three miles below the city. A large quantity of wood was also burned in that vicinity.

At Gull River several uncompied buildings were burned and it was with difficulty that the school house was saved it having been on fire three different times.

On Monday morning the farm house on the Alex. Cameron place in Oak Lawn was destroyed by fire, which originated from a defective chimney. There was an insurance of $200 on the property.

It is conceded by every lady in Brainerd that OUR PRICES on DRESS GOODS are cheaper than goods brought up from the Twin Cities. "Savoy!"

Found John Elder's Body.

On Wednesday evening D. R. and J. M. Elder received a telegram from Mark Murphy, of Minot, N. D., stating that the remains of John Elder, their brother, who was lost in the great storm which swept over the Northwest in November last, and been found, and word was sent by them to have the body shipped to Brainerd, and it is expected that Mr. Murphy will arrive with it on Sunday morning. As regards the burial is is impossible to state at what time it will occur until after the arrival of the remains. Mr. Elder received the following letter this morning from F. Glenn Matson, of the Fort Berthold Indian Agency at Elbowoods, N. D., which throws some light on the subject:

"I wish to inform you that as Indian Jerome Good Bear by name, reported to this office last Sunday evening that he had found the body of your brother, and the next morning I went out, and sure enough, I found the gentleman as reported. I positively identified him, but thought that you would feel more satisfied to have Mark Murphy see him, and his body was therefore sent to Frenchy's ranch and Mark sent for. The wolves had not found him, but his remains were in a bad condition, having been exposed to the warm weather so long. In your trip from the ranch to the Missouri, you certainly passed within two or three miles of him, you having traveled too far eastward. I think he had traveled about 18 miles from the sleigh, and could he have held out 10 miles further he would have reached the river. No sign of the team has been found as yet."

A Splendid Company.

The Y. M. C. A. of this city has arranged with the Slayton Lyceum Bureau for a series of entertainments, to be given here, the first of which, the Smally Grand Concert Co., will appear on the evening of May 13th. Tickets for the course will be $1.00, single tickets 50 cents. Now on sale at Atwood's drug store. Concerning the Smally Grand Concert Co. the Minneapolis Times says:

The Smalley Grand Concert Co. includes real artist. Their naturally fine voices are well trained and balance harmoniously, and they give with adequate execution the best order of music. They are all young women of prepossessing appearance, and when they appeared daintily attired alike, in simple gowns of crimson satin they were enthusiastically greeted. Their numbers ranged from grave to gay, and from simple to ambitious. They gave "Hear den Bells" (arranged by Reeves) in a sprightly manner, and one of the prettiest numbers was Revell's Fan Song, which they gave with a graceful and coquettish swaying of fans. They sang "Annie Laurie" with good effect, and as an encore rendered Goldberg's "Good Night." They were enthusiastically encored. The feature of the evening was the solo by Miss Gertrude Sprague, the second contralto. She has a rich, deep voice, with a remarkable lower register. She takes notes unusually low for even a cultivated contralto, with ease, and while the tone is full and powerful it is at the same time sweet and pure. She was warmly welcomed and by request sang "Booked in the Cradle of the Deep." Her voice proved equal to the requirements of the selections in both range and feeling, and the audience fairly sat with bathed breath to catch each note. In response to an insistent recall she sang that favorite love Song, "Answer."

HARD TIMES

"I can't buy plants," said my neighbor, putting away a gorgeous catalogue with a sigh, "and I am longing for Roses, Lilies, and other beautiful flowers." Never say die, said I, there are cheap plants, and for 50 cents or one dollar you can make a fine display. But I am so unlucky. Time and again have I sent for plants, but have never had success with flowers. There is where you have made your mistake. Send off for plants next, but do as I have done, patronize home industry. Pay a visit to the Brainerd Greenhouse, No. 87, Eighth street south, where you can make your selections of whatever kind and size plant you wish, at prices lower, comparatively, than you will see quoted in the catalogue. These plants are not forced, but grown at a low temperature, and consequently hardy and healthy and just adapted for the climate, and any information that you may require as to the habits or treatment of plants, will be cheerfully given. Have they a large stock? They have many standard varieties of ever blooming Roses, strong and healthy, about to bloom, price 25 cents, Carnations, Begonias, Geraniums, Pansies, and Chrysanth-emums, at 5 cents and up, strong, warranted. Dahlia and other bulbs at 5 cents, and other plants too numerous to mention, but at prices that will delight you, and you will receive the same courteous treatment when you buy anything or not, and you can't help coming away both content and pleased. Do they have large sales? The manager's delivery of speech may be somewhat defective, but his delivery of plants and flowers, to judge by the rapidity by which orders are filled and delivered continuously to all parts of the city, cannot be anything but satisfactory to the genial proprietor, Mr. Wm. Dodd.
