Malone Indicted.

Charles Malone, who sold the extract and other compounds which killed three or four Indians on the Mille Lacs reservation, has been held to await the action of the grand jury on the U. S. courts, as indicated by the following from the daily papers:

Malone had an examination before United States Commissioner Griffith at Detroit, and was held to await the action of the grand jury, which meets at Duluth in October. His bail was fixed at $1000, which will be given today at Duluth, and Malone released. Malone keeps a traders' store at Malone Point Mille Lacs lake. He admitted that he sold the essence to the Indians, but claimed that he had no malicious intent, and expected no harmful results as the Indians all owed him money and he would have had no reason to do any of them any injury.

Hamline University.

The catalogue of Hamline University for the year 1896-7 is at hand. This institution of learning has recently become a university in fact as well as in name. A fully equipped medical department was added over a year ago, and a divinity school has been organized with the expectation of opening this fall. A school of law is one of the probabilities of the near future. There were enrolled this year in the college of Liberal Arts, 103 students, in the Preparatory department 111. There were also seven post graduate students doing special work in science and history. The graduating class of 1897, college of Liberal Arts, numbers twenty-five, seventeen young men and eight young ladies; College of Medicine, thirty-one including two young ladies.

Hamline University is finely located between the Twin Cities, partaking of the advantage of both, yet far enough from either to have its own community life. Its course of study includes mathematics, ancient and modern languages, English language and literature, historical and political science, physics, chemistry and biology. Special emphasis is placed upon laboratory methods and upon individual investigation. The necessary expenses range from $150 to $200 per year.

NEARLY A CLOUD-BURST.

A Terrific Rain Storm Visits This Locality Last Friday Night, Doing Great Damage.

The Railroad Tracks are Badly Damaged—The Leech Lake Excursion Postponed.

The heaviest rain storm in the memory of the oldest inhabitant visited this city and county on Friday night last. To say that the rain fell in torrents is not adequate. It was a veritable cloud-burst, and did an immense amount of damage in destroying roads and bridges, besides endangering and in many instances completely destroying crops. From the daily papers it seems the storm extended from Staples on the west to east of Duluth and vicinity, doing even more damage in the latter locality than here. The amount of rainfall was unprecedented. The streets for a time were flowing rivers, and water stood from several inches to as many feet deep in the vacant lots and low places about town. The immense volume of water, as it tore down the gutters, tore great holes in the streets at various places, and overflowed and filled cellars and basements. The creek that runs through the ravine between the main part of the city and East Brainerd, became a Mississippi in size and volume. The embankments of earth at the ends of the bridges on Oak and Norwood streets were washed away, making the bridges impassable, and the gardens extending up and down the ravine were completely destroyed. The road-way entering the Mississippi wagon bridge was so badly washed away that refilling was necessary before the bridge could be crossed.

The railroads were the greatest sufferers, the loss to the N. P. in the city alone figuring up in the thousands. The embankment crossing the ravine to the shops was washed out to such an extent that it is estimated that it will take 1400 carloads of earth to refill it. The culvert and fill near Adam Brown's on the St. Paul track, was washed out for a length of about 300 feet. Great stones in the culvert wall weighing nearly a ton were carried away by the force of the swift current of the little creek which had been transformed into a rushing river. A cattle guard was also washed out on Oak street. Rails were passed over this portion of the road from Friday until Monday, when a temporary bridge was constructed over the creek. The B. & N. M. also suffered heavily. A portion of the road-bed was washed out between the round-house and the bridge, and a piece of the main track fill on the west side of the river several hundred feet long was so badly washed away that the excursion to Leech Lake by the Episcopal church on Saturday had to be postponed until Monday, in order to make the track passable. The roadbed was also badly damaged in numerous other places.

Three washouts occurred between this point and Motley on the N. P., besides numerous others on the Eastern Minnesota division between here and Carlton. Between Carlton and Duluth was a bad washout, and trains have been running with great irregularity ever since.

Quite a little damage was done to cellars and basements about town. At the Globe a large section of Front street was deposited in Mr. Kelleher's basement. At the corner of Sixth and Laurel streets the water overflowed into J. M. Hayes' cellar, carrying the sand under the sidewalks and also a section of the curbing of the paved street.

A great many of the roads leading into the country have been made almost impassable by washouts of the road beds on the sand hills. A gully 10 feet deep was dug out by the water in the road leading up Ahren's hill from the bridge at the dam. The Gull Lake road is badly damaged in places.

STORM NOTES.

Friday night's storm was a heavy blow for John Sorenson, who lives about four miles west of town on the Gull Lake road. The lightning killed a fine milch cow for him, and the heavy rain fall completely washed out and entirely destroyed six acres of fine corn and three acres of potatoes.

Alderman A. D. Smith has a bank barn at his residence, which he has used 12 years without being bothered with water, but in Friday night's storm, so great was the fall of water, that in a few minutes the water rushed in the front door of the barn and it took great hustling to get his stock out before being drowned.

MAN'S LITTLE VANITIES.

How Carefully He Looks to the Crease in His Trousers.

"Does masculine self unconscious-ness exist?" asks a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer. I am inclined to think, after weighing well man's many character traits, that this one at least forms no part of his mental make up.

He is such a conscious creature if ever once he imagines he is being observed. Only an outsider's glance is needed to rivet his attention upon his adorable self.

Sometimes it is the most innocent glance, one, if he did but know it, that has not taken him in at all, but as it happened to fall his way it is gobbled up by his vanity, and immediately the woman who has unfortunately bestowed the glance is viewed in the light of a possible conquest.

A man never seems to have grown too old or too ugly to arrogate to himself admiration that a woman in her calmest days would hardly dare claim.

That crease in his trousers weighs so heavily upon his mind. He is never, I am sure, perfectly assured of its correctness unless the trousers are just flome from the tailor.

Imagine a woman getting into a street car and hardly settling herself before she begins pulling at a seam in her gown!

How tenderly he hitches it into correct position! He doesn't mind in the least elbowing his ankles, and a man's ankles—ye gods, what sights to see, even the best dressed pair going!

Surely it must be that vanity prompts him to show them, or indifference, which amounts to the same thing. I often wonder why a sight of his brother's does not warn him to keep his own well covered.

In all matters pertaining to his toilet he is equally assured. I don't suppose 100 horsepower could drag him to certain places without a dress suit. He would think it a much greater crime to rob a bank than wear a last year's tile.

He tells a good deal about comfortable shoes, but I notice he falls right into line with the latest shoe fad regardless of price or comfort.

As for collars and necktips, no bud just beginning to get a taste of fine clothes ever fussed over them as a man does. Two items! Two items of wearing apparel. He hasn't a bit of conscience about pitching a drawerful of collars into the ash barrel if he happens to get a notion that they are a little "off cut," and, as for ties, he watches after their like with true eyes.

He bears that the scarfpin must go a little to the right or a little to the left, and it is changed without delay. Watch charms go out of date. Every trinket of the sort he owns is promptly abandoned. He wears only the kind of waistcoat other men wear.

Man's dress vanities! Why, they are legion, and he cultivates them with an insistence worthy of a better cause.—Boston Herald.

Paper Handkerchiefs.

The story of the heathen Chinee and the missionary's fancy handkerchief should be oft repeated. The Chinaman admired the dainty square of embroidered linen very much, until he was told its use, and that it would be washed and used again, when he dropped it with disdain. To his mind, the idea of using a handkerchief again and again was inconceivable.

When we look at it as a matter of hygiene, to burn up all soiled handkerchiefs is certainly the safest, cleanest course. There can be no question as to the advantages of this plan. Any slight cold may prove to be the grip.

No doubt many a case of consumption has been unsuspected until whole households have been subjected to risks which science has taught us to avoid.

If we are still unwilling to use the Chinese paper handkerchiefs in public—and we are—why not have handkerchief should be as little in evidence as possible—we can, at least, use them in the privacy of home. Pure white squares of Chinese paper, suitable for this purpose, may be purchased for 20 cents a hundred. Already some sensible people keep them on hand to use when suffering from colds.—F. W. in Philadelphia Ledger.

Gordon's Comment.

On a recent visit to Boston, General John B. Gordon, the ex-Confederate, was entertained by a well known lawyer, who showed him the sights. One of the places the southerners visited was the cyclorama of the battle of Gettysburg. The old soldier did not make any comment on it. When the two came out of the building and were on their way down town, the lawyer inquired:

"Well, general, what did you think of it?"

"What did I think of it?" said the general, coming to a standstill and striking a defiant attitude. "Let them paint Bull Run!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

An Atlantic cable has, fortunately, few enemies, though in the English channel, the Irish sea and the North sea the teredo, the special cable pest of the Mediterranean, does some mischief. This "miserable little mollusk," as the cable men call it, first made itself a nuisance by eating up wooden ship hulks until builders took to plating them with iron, and by burrowing into the dikes in Holland until the Dutch government was threatened with inundation. When the cable came, it took to it at once. It wriggles its way in between the steel wires of the most tightly wrapped core and eats away into and gutta percha until there is nothing but a wire skeleton left. Happily, however, as already indicated, our own particular cable has little to fear from the teredo, and the best wish we can give it as it lies at the bottom of the Atlantic is that it may never have a history, and that the time may be long before the Faraday sees it again.—Henry Muir in McClure's Magazine.

A MASTERLESS MAID.

A masterless maid, with my heart in my keeping,
I wander the world, and I'll wander again,
With sadness in my portion where'er I may go weeping,
And mirth for my scapbook where others read pain.

With neat speeding onward, as toe to the shortest,
God's world in its fairness his birth gift to me,
'Twixt me and the sunshine the eyes of no lover,
All soft tones eyading, I laugh and go free.

Adown purple hills steal the mists of the morning,
But few are my thoughts what that fetters;
The lark's sky born anthem, the velvet bee's humming,
Sound sweeter than love word or love song to me.

Yet sometimes I linger and hush in my singing,
And wait for the passing of masterly feet,
And sigh when I hear baby laughter soft ring-ing,
And wonder awhile if my freedom be sweet.

Yet sometimes comes wanting, unchecked and unbridled,
When cold falls God's sunlight athwart the pale green,
And down in the daisies I kneel me, face hidden,
And kiss the kind earth baby footsteps will pass.

—London Spectator.

THE RETIRED BURGLAR.

A Most Uncomfortable Situation and How He Escaped From It.

"At the rear of a farmhouse that I was looking around one night," said the retired burglar, "I found an extension containing a single room, that appeared to be used as a washroom. I thought if I went in through the extension I should be less likely to wake up the folks in the house, and so I got in at a rear window and started for a door at the other end opening into the main part, which I hoped to find unlocked, but I never really did find out whether it was unlocked or not, for when I had got about half way across the room I stepped through a hole in the floor and dropped into a cistern.

"I suppose that of all the uncomfortable places a man can get into one of the most uncomfortable is a cistern. It is a very difficult place to get out of, and it may be impossible to get out of it without help. The water in this cistern was just over my head, but I could swim, and the water wasn't very cold. I kept afloat and felt around the walls for something to climb out by. I did find something, the pipe from the pump, but it wasn't of any use to me, for it left the cistern just where the walls began to arch over to form the top. If it had run up under the arch a little, it might have helped me to reach the edge of the opening, but it didn't. It started out from the top of the straight wall. It was on the side toward the house, and I suppose that the water must have been outdoors, and they built the extension over it.

"I kept paddling all the time to keep my head above water, and every now and then I looked up at the opening I had dropped through. I could make out the outline of it by the starlight in the washroom, and I wished they hadn't left the cover off. And how I did wish I could get my hands on that cover! But the nearest I could get to it was about two feet away. I found that by making a great effort I could reduce that distance to about 1½ feet, but that was all, and it might as well have been 1½ miles.

"Paddling around in the water one of my feet struck my tool bag, lying on the bottom, where I had dropped it when I first went down. The little bound from that, instead of from the floor of the cistern, which I had touched a few times before, threw my head a little higher out of water than usual, and then I found the satchel with both feet and stood on it. That gave me the first rest I had had, and I dropped into the cistern. It raised me up so that my head was clear of the water down to just below my mouth, and I could keep in that position without very much effort and breathe easily. It was a very great relief.

"Then, of course, there was a chance to think things over with some kind of comfort. I had my jimmy in my bag, a useful tool in many ways, and no doubt I could have got out of the cistern by the aid of it, but the work would have been very difficult, and it would probably have taken me long, and as a matter of fact I had already thought of a very much simpler way of getting out. Standing on the bag not only raised my head above the water; but, of course, it raised me just so much nearer the opening at the top of the cistern. If I could get something a little higher still to stand on, a foot higher, or even less than that, I could reach the rim, and, of course, the thing to do was to end this bag up and stand on that. This seemed so extremely simple that you may not think I had thought of it before, but the falling into the cistern had been in the nature of a surprise to me, and I hadn't got around to this idea yet. I would have thought of it in time, even if I hadn't happened to strike the bag with my feet.

"Well, I balanced myself on the bag as it was until I had got a good rest, and then I bent down in the water and endeavored to get hold of one foot on it to hold it, and then I stood up in the water again and got the other foot on it. Then I found I could reach within six or eight inches of the rim of the cistern. But it was a mighty shaky support, rigid enough in itself, with the bones in it, but not fixed, it was wabbly and of no use unless I could get it right in line with my body when I jumped. But I accomplished it under my feet and trued it up the best I could and made a spring from it. I caught the rim of the cistern with both hands and then I raised myself up and chinned it. Then I got my right elbow up over on to the floor, and after that it wasn't very long before I had worked myself up over the edge and out, but I didn't try to do any more work that night."—New York Sun.

POLITICAL PHRASES.

Many of Them Due to English Historians and Statesmen.

An "unfettered press" is one of the historical phrases of our language, but not every reader knows that it was coined by the celebrated Richard Brinsley Butler Sheridan. When speaking on the liberty of the press, the orator thrilled the house with the following sentence: "Give them, a corrupt house of lords, give them a venal house of commons, give them a tyrannical prince, give them a truckling court, and let me have but an unfettered press, I will defy them to encroach a hair's breadth upon the liberties of England."

The "fourth estate" is a term that is constantly applied to the press. Its origin is generally traced to Macaulay, who in his essay on "Hallam's History," in 1838, writes, "The gallery in which the reporters sit has become a fourth estate of the realm." But Hazlitt, the famous literary critic, had some five years earlier written in his "Table Talk" essay on "Court Influence" the first idea to Lord Macaulay. Speaking of Cobbett, Hazlitt says: "He filips up the ear of the public with a three months' stale, like so much dead fish; single newspaper antagonist, he lays waste a city orator or a member of parliament and leaves hard upon the government itself. He is a kind of fourth estate in the politics of the country."

"Looming in the future" was the invention of Lord Beaconsfield. In June, 1852, then Mr. Disraeli, he issued an election address on financial questions, the effects of Buckinghamshire, in which the following occurs: "The times are favorable to such an undertaking. Juster notions of taxation are more prevalent than heretofore. Powerful agencies are at work which have introduced new principles into finance and altered the complexion of the fiscal world, and the possibility of greatly relieving the burdens of this country seems to loom in the future."

"Men, not measures," is now a historic phrase. It was first uttered by Mr. Canning in a speech in 1801, in opposition to the Addington ministry, when he said: "Away with the cant of 'measures, not men'—the trite supposition that it is the harness, and not the horses, that draws the chariot along. No, sir; if the comparison must be made, if the distinction must be taken, men are everything, measures are comparatively nothing. I speak of times of difficulty and danger, when systems are shaken, when the precedents and general rules of conduct fail; then it is that not to that or to this measure—however prudently devised—but to the energy and character of individuals, a state must be indebted for its salvation."

A "gigantic innovation" is a phrase that was originated by Mr. Gladstone in a debate that took place in July, 1860, on the action of the house of lords in rejecting the bill for the abolition of paper duties. "It appears to me," said Mr. Gladstone, "to the determination of one moiety of this house that there shall be no debate upon the constitutional principles which are involved in this question, and I must say that, considering that gentlemen opposite are upon this occasion the partisans of a gigantic innovation—the most gigantic and the most dangerous that has been attempted in our times—I may compliment them upon the prudence they show in resolving to be its silent partisans."—Scraps.

A Horse's Teeth.

Every horse has six teeth above and below. Before 3 years of age he sheds his middle teeth. At 3 he sheds one more on either side of the middle teeth. At 4 he sheds the two corner and last of the fore teeth. Between 4 and 5 the horse cuts the usushes. At 5 will cut the upper tusks, at which time his mouth will be complete. At 6 years the grooves and hollows begin to fill up a little. At 7 the grooves will be well nigh filled up, except the corner teeth, leaving little brown spots where the dark brown hollows formerly were. At 8 the whole of the hollows and grooves are filled up. At 9 there is very often seen a small bill to the outside corner teeth, the point of the tusk is worn off, and the part that was concave begins to fill up and become rounding. The squares of the central teeth begin to disappear, and the gums leave them small and narrow at the top.

Couldn't Be Too Bad.

"Do you think," said the lady who was shopping, "that any body would steal this umbrella if I were to leave it for a few minutes?"

"Really, madam," replied the clerk, "I shouldn't like to venture an opinion without first examining the umbrella."—Washington Star.

Cannibal Mysteries.

"A man who is just married tells his wife everything."

"Yes?"

We are getting to be better acquainted with that repulsive habit, man eating, and Sidney Langford Hinde, in his "The Fall of the Kongo Arabs," published in London by Methuen, writes that in central African cannibalism is growing and extending to tribes that formerly were free from the taint. Miss Kingsley in her recent book tells us of her visit to a country of cannibals.

As commanding a force in the service of the Free State it was the business of the author to prevent the raids of the Kongo Arabs. The Arabs, it is represented, were good fighters, but when beaten died precipitately, fearful of being eaten by the followers of the Belgian train. It is one of the beliefs of Mussulmans that a mutilated body cannot enter heaven. So cannibalism, or the dread of it, had its effects on these slave dealing Arabs.

Probate Notice.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss.
County of Crow Wing. }

In Probate Court, Special Term, June 16th, 1897.

Letters of Administration on the estate of said deceased being this day granted unto Henry Morwartz, of said County.

It is ordered, That all claims of all persons against said estate be presented to this Court, for examination and allowance, at the Probate Office in Court House, in the City of Brainerd, on the following days, viz: Commencing on Monday, the 5th day of July, A. D. 1897, and on the first Monday of each month thereafter for six months.

It is further ordered, That six months from the date hereof are allowed to creditors to present their claims against said estate, at the expiration of which time all claims not presented to said Court, or filed with the proper officer, shall be forever barred, unless for cause shown, further time is allowed.

Ordered further, That notice of the time and place of the hearing and examination of said claims and demands shall be given by publishing this order once in each week, for three successive weeks prior to the day appointed for such examination, in the Brainerd Dispatch, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Brainerd, in said County.

A Famous London Boxing Club.

The most interesting place of amusement for men is the National Sporting club. Every Monday night during the winter the sports of London meet there in the same building that Colonel Newcome and his son once left because they objected to Captain Costigan's song. The colonel would be more amused there now, for well trained and scientific boxers from all the world meet in a roped in square, surrounded by a motley crowd of stockbrokers, bankers and miscellaneous sporting characters, who wait for the best man to win. Then they adjourn to a round room, and around the bar and little tables they talk about bygone fights and the men and horses whose picture cover the wall. Sofas find their way to the Strand, where, in a supper room called Marble Halls, every variety of sport in all stages of life and actors from the neighboring theaters discuss the fight of the evening round by round.—From "London as Seen by C. B. Gibson" in Scribner's.

No Duplicity Here.

The story is told of an English and an Irish trooper who were scouting against the Matabele in South Africa. A band of savages suddenly burst from behind some rocks and started for the men. They jumped upon their horses and fled over the nearly open country, but the Irishman kept falling to the rear of his companion.

"Confound you, Mike!" exclaimed the Englishman. "Ride, ride for your life! You'll be caught!"

"Go long wid you!" replied the Irish trooper, who was riding his best. "Do you think I'm throwin the race!"—Harper's Round Table.

RAGING ELEMENTS.

CYCLONE AND CLOUDBURST WORK HAVOC.

Northwestern Towns Visited by a Destructive Storm—At Benson, Phillips and Other Points Houses and Streets Torn Up—Duluth Badly Flooded—Other Towns Suffer.

Barnum, Minn., July 6.—Saturday morning at 2 o'clock a cloudburst struck this town, followed by a cloudburst. The Moosehorn river rose rapidly, and in an hour's time the water was about four deep in every house on level ground, and a raging torrent ran through Main street, carrying away sidewalks, and a nasty move up stairs. Several families could not remove their effects. Every bridge in town was washed out, and the streets were torn up completely.

The houses of J. Murphy, Wm. Nerves and Fred Kramer were washed away, and Mr. and Mrs. Murphy were badly injured, the former probably fatally. The Bat. Paul & Duluth lost several bridges and miles of track, and no trains are expected for this week. A great many logs and ties floated away. The water is now subsided, and the town looks desolated.

Duluth, Minn., July 6.—The storm attained the proportions of a cloudburst. Between midnight and 4 a. m. rain fell in the shortest space was one-tenth of an inch in a minute, and it was also a city was literally flooded. The side hill streets were gutted, and the business streets were guttered to a depth of four feet in places. Acres of paving blocks were torn and floated away. Scores of buildings were flooded. The losses in Duluth and vicinity will be at least $200,000. The street railway company has a heavy suffer. Its power house was flooded and its tracks were covered with rocks, sand and debris of all descriptions. The company also has heavy pufferes. The St. Louis river is the highest since 1883. Two million feet of logs are coming down from the Johnson-Wentworth boom and are being caught at the head of the lake. The water in the river is four feet deep over the piers of the island of Fond du Lac.

Princeton, Minn., July 6.—During a heavy rain at this place a severe wind, cyclonic in nature, suddenly arose, and brought lasting fear to the people. All great damage to shade trees and buildings. The roof of Anthony & Kinney's store was badly damaged, and three plate glass windows in the dry goods department store were broken. Several buildings and residences were unroofed and badly damaged. Many precious accident occurred, though several persons sustained slight injuries. The storm swept the surrounding country, but no serious damage is reported as far as I got of the city of Mr. Ash, about four miles north of here. The house was unroofed and the barn blown down.

West Superior, Wis., July 6. — The Northern Pacific railroad finds that it will have to rescind all of its switching rates here in the vicinity owing to the storm. The storm played havoc with the tracks. It carried the bulk of steam shovels and work trains belonging and says for a week with which the yards here were being rehabilated, and all of it is washed so bad as to render the tracks unsafe. The steam shovel and thirteen cars at Carlton gravel pit were buried under debris, and the big work train and eighteen cars were stranded near there by running into a washout.

Brainerd, Minn., July 6.—The storm was the worst ever known in this section. Rain fell for three hours steadily and at one time the city looked like an inland lake. Several bridges were quate to carry off the water, and many cellars and basements in the business portion were flooded. The streets were suffered from washouts. Inside the city limits a section of the Northern Pacific track sixty feet long is gone and a rapidly flowing river takes the place of a solid track.

St. Paul, July 6.—A severe thunder storm passed over this city. A house on the bluff was struck by lightning and at one time the city looked like an inland lake. Several bridges were quate to carry off the water, and many cellars and basements in the business portion were flooded. The streets were suffered from washouts. Inside the city limits a section of the Northern Pacific track sixty feet long is gone and a rapidly flowing river takes the place of a solid track.

Algona, Iowa, July 6.—One of the heaviest rains ever known occurred here by two running horses running away and throwing the occupant. He undertook to cross the race track as the running race was in progress, resulting in his being thrown violently and he was picked up unconscious. At last report he was still unconscious and would recover. The lady with him came out uninjured.

Killed by Lightning.

Gary, S. D., July 7.—Another victim was added to the lightning fatalities of miles ago in this state, in the death of the little boy belonging to Knute Hanson. The shock deprived him of his eyesight and so affected him that he could not recover.

Hope to Wed Glory.

Pierre, S. D., July 7.—Two members of Company A, S. D. N. G., left for a week at the state encampment at Bryant. As they passed the best inspection of any company in the state, they are going after any honors which are in sight.

Killed in Chicago.

Chicago, July 6.—Lightning claimed five lives and there was an unusually long list of accidents and injuries here as the result of the Fourth of July celebration.

Chicago, July 6.—The shooting of Jeweler Hall, of Spence, a harbor, by a mob of five masked men who attempted to rob the saloon.

Eight People Drowned.

Chicago, July 7.—Eight people were drowned in Lake Michigan while bathing at various points along the beach.

The Mob Repulsed.

London, July 7.—A dispatch to the Times from Sinia says that a mob of 10,000 men tried to seize a mosque, but the police and troops opened fire and a serious conflict ensued. Finally the rioters were repulsed, with heavy loss and took flight.

The Paris Figaro says that in the letter of Emperor Nicholas, inviting President Faure to visit him at St. Petersburg, he refers significantly to the "bonds that are henceforth to unite France and Russia."

CYCLONE AT MINNEOTA.

Considerable Damage Done by a Storm Which Visits Long Island Lake, Minn. Special.—A cyclone struck Minneota. Buildings were torn down and fences and trees in the path. Several barns were smashed. A large round, two stories high, was demolished in the town. People fled to their cellars. A moment later the storm struck the town. No one was killed.

Vicious Assault.

Winona, Minn., Special Tel.—Phineas Hamilton, a boy of seven years, was charged with assault in the second degree on Louis Lee, a boy of his acquaintance. The assault might easily have been murder, and it may yet so result. Early one morning Hamilton ran Sheehan and had been thrown from a bridge into the water. Hamilton came up, and, without provocation, hit him a murderous blow on the head with a club, fracturing his skull.

No Gambling in Montana.

Butte, Mont. Special.—The low prohibiting gambling in Montana is being enforced in this city. The law even prohibits shaking dice for drinks, and, according to the attorney general's construction, makes players guarding for prizes in social gatherings unlawful.

Copper at Royalton.

Killed by Lightning.

Bismarck, N. D. Special. — Charles Wagner, son of W. H. Wagner, one of the best known farmers in this county, was killed by lightning at his farm, twenty miles from here. He was twenty-five years old.

EDUCATORS IN SESSION.

Annual Convention of the Educational Association.

Milwaukee, July 7.—The annual convention of the National educational association, for which several thousand teachers have already arrived, was opened in the Auditorium of the Artist council of education. At the afternoon meeting the time was devoted to the discussion of the theme, "The Aesthetic Element in Education." Prepared papers were read by Prof. John Dewey, of the University of Chicago, and United States Commissioner of Education W. T. Harris, after which a general discussion was had, in which W. T. Jones, inspector of literature in the New York state department, superintendent of Schools Oscar Soldan of St. Louis; State Superintendent Schaeffer of Pennsylvania; Principal Smiley, of the Denver high school, Superintendent W. W. Powell, of Washington, D. C.) schools; Prof. S. G. Williams, Cornell university; Henry Raab, superintendent of public instruction of Kansas, and Prof. D. H. Kiehle, University of Minnesota, all spoke.

At the evening session a paper was read by Colonel Alfred Ayres, of the State Journal of Bloomington, Ill., in which reasons were given in support for the amendment of the constitution by the general government. Other subjects beside those not laid down in the by-laws may be discussed at the meetings of the week. There was a very stormy debate the subject was referred to a special committee of five to report at the next meeting of the council. No conclusion was reached on the reduction of rates. The list of subjects of which occupied much of the time at the session, and it was also referred to the committee of five. A discussion as to the advisability of a report on high schools occupied the greater part of the morning, but no action was taken.

ACCUSED OF MURDER.

Eugene Buel Now Lies in Jail Under a Most Serious Charge.

Wadena, Minn., Special.—Eugene Buel, a farmer living near here, lies in jail, charged with the murder of one Peterson. Buel and Peterson had been partners in business last September, and who has not been seen since. Buel and the Nelson drew $400 from the bank here and went off with Buel. The next report was that, on account of some scrape, Nelson had been forced to quit this part of the country immediately. Early last winter Buel bought a farm a few miles west of Verndale, paying cash for most of it.

It is learned that parties have been searching the woods on the quiet ever since the snow has gone off, and a couple of days since found the body of Westenhaid and an Indian were going to and from the place where Peterson came across a jaw bone and piece of the skull of a man, and a clump of human hair. It was found the clothing and the rest of the well picked bones of a man. The jaw bone and skull had been crushed in by a heavy blow. The clothing was identified as belonging to Nelson. Buel was immediately put in jail on suspicion. He was called on the stand by the coroner, but waived examination and it was postponed until Tuesday.

FOUR WERE DROWNED.

West Superior, Wis., July 7.—By the capsizing of a boat in Superior bay four persons lost their lives. Three members of a family, named Christiansen—Daniel, Clirlstie and May—and Harlon Mcdonald, an electrician, were drowned, the other three persons being saved. The boat was overloaded and capsized when a steamer passed by.

Casualties of the Day.

Yankton, S. D., Special.—Last Saturday evening Johnnie Gamble and Enoch Cornell, both 15 years old, were accidentally killed by the bursting of a cannon. They had loaded it too heavily, and when it exploded, discharging the contents in their faces. It is feared they will lose their eyesight.

Algona, Iowa, July 6.—One of the heaviest rains ever known occurred here by two running horses running away and throwing the occupant. He undertook to cross the race track as the running race was in progress, resulting in his being thrown violently and he was picked up unconscious. At last report he was still unconscious and would recover. The lady with him came out uninjured.

THE MERCURY IN MANY CITIES BREAKS ALL RECORDS.

Many Deaths and Prostrations in Various Cities—Cincinnati Suffers the Most With Thirteen Deaths and Fifty Prostrations—Three Deaths at Cleveland—Chicago People Scorched.

Chicago, July 7.—The wave of torrid weather under which the Central States sweltered last week showed no abatement in severity. Reports from Kansas City and from Chicago south closely skirting the Canadian sun left a record of prostrations and deaths while, has seldom been equalled for the early days of June. Throughout the entire district the mercury registered from 90 to 100 in the shade during the day, and the number of prostrations ran into the hundreds. Cincinnati, with a maximum temperature of 98 degrees, showed the highest death rate—13 deaths resulting and a total of 50 prostrations; but there were many fatalities reported elsewhere.

In Chicago the mercury registered close to 90 degrees for the greater part of the day, and there were over a score of prostrations. At midnight a severe thunderstorm broke over the city, sending the mercury down several points and bringing welcome relief.

Thirteen Deaths.

Cincinnati, O., July 7.—Saturday was the hottest day in the present torrid spell. The mercury climbed and showed 94 mercury at 97 from 2 to 3 p. m. and but few people were able to work. Fifty prostrations and 13 deaths were reported. The maximum record on Market street is the most conspicuous of all the thermometers. Its enormous size, and the bunting hung in honor of the national holiday, make a brilliant display. A breeze in mingling waves of blue and gold, purple and white, with the motto of the young people's organization displayed on every hand. COCAINE IS PREFERABLE

It Has Many Advantages Over Eucaine.

Elysee Rechu, the famous scientist, has recently read before the Academy of Sciences in Paris, a paper about cocaine as a local anesthetic. He compared the two substances by injecting a 1 per cent solution into the region where he desired to try the strength of either substance. The result was evidently in favor of cocaine in several reasons. The injection of the cocaine is more painful than that of eucaine, the action on the tissues is inverse to that of eucaine, which is constructive, while the cocaine is dilative, and, therefore, fills with blood the part to be operated upon by causing the latter's ischemia. The insensibility produced by cocaine lasts thirty, or at the least, twenty-five minutes, instead of sixty or seventy minutes of insensibility produced by eucaine. The only advantage of eucaine would be its lesser virulence, and it is questionable whether that property would fully compensate it for its shortcomings in the three points mentioned above. Prof. Bouchut has experimented with eucaine on animals, and found that the effects of eucaine were in some respects similar to those of cocaine, but considerably more pronounced. Prof. Rochu warns, therefore, against the use of eucaine, which he has used to produce an anesthetic state more than 1,000 times without one single fatal accident.—Philadelphia Record.

267 Pounds of Dog.

Neon, a dog owned by Wayne Bailey of Rutland, is said to be the largest canine in the world. He tips the scales at 267 pounds. Neon is a handsome half-Gerrian and half-English mastiff, fawn-brindle in color, his lungs head being of a little darker shade. He is as agile and lively as a cat. He makes a splendid watchdog, but is kind and affectionate animal. Mr. Bailey got him at West Rutland when he was six months old. He is now five years old, at the time of his purchase Neon weighed 162 pounds. He stands up from the ground thirty-five inches and gives fifty inches. The dog's neck is unusually large, measuring thirty inches, and from tip to tip the measures six feet five and one-half inches.—Vermont Phoenix.

Novel Experiment.

A novel, and what promises to be a notable experiment, is being tried in Shefield, England. Children who are otherwise to send to the poorhouse are divided among cottage homes. These homes are managed in about the same way as the homes for working people. Each home accommodates fifteen children, and has at the head of it a working man and his wife, as foster-parents, selected by the authorities. Both boys and girls have to assist the "mother" in the work. The other boys are taught a trade and the girls learn dress making, cooking and other branches of domestic service. The homes are open to all visitors, and the assistance of the neighborhood take an active interest in the little cottagers.

Strange Food of the Chinese.

The opinion that the Chinese will eat almost anything that is eatable is not altogether wrong. It is also a fact that they sometimes eat that which would appear to us to be absolutely uneatable. Thus, a recent traveler in China tells of two cases in which fashionable young people had cooked and eaten animals which had been poisoned by strychnine. The ethnologer gives on to say: "On one of these occasions someone very thoughtfully brought in enough to call a foreigner as to the probable results; but, as the animal was already in the pot, the convives could not make up their minds to forego the luxury of the feast, and no harm appeared to come of their indulgence." It should be said that these strange tastes of the Chinese are the result of necessity, not of predilection. Food is scarce in China, and the daily wants of people are forced to use that which is thrown aside by people of other lands.

Not to Be Expected.

Recently, in Belfast, two farmers who had come in from the lovely market, after transacting their business, made their way to a public building where the portrait in oils of a local church dignitary was being hung.

The harsh, ascetic countenance of the reverend gentleman was not in any way softened by the slovenly manner in which the colors had been laid on.

After a short and silent view, one of them broke forth with the remark that "this reverence laddie isna a very great ant fave."

Cure of a Bedroom.

It is a great mistake to convert the sleeping room into a lazar. This place, above all others, should be kept free from everything that will collect dust. Water that has stood in a bedroom over night is unfit to drink, and fruit that is kept in sleeping quarters loses its freshness, and is unfit to eat. Let there an air of dantiness and cleanliness to the sleeping room be aimed at, using a few bright rugs and plenty of dotted swiss—this stuff is used for curtains, mantel lambrequin, covering for dressers, washstand, etc.

FLOOD THAT HELPED.

GRANDMOTHER Melton lighted the kitchen lamp and set it in the middle of the table.

"We might as well have supper," she said. "Your father probly'll be back till late."

Fred and Polly drew up their chairs, and Grandmother Melton brought a steaming bowl of mush from the stove and dished it into two smaller bowls.

"I'm the light of a bear," observed Fred, between mouthfuls. "I think it's a shame we have to go to school. There isn't a single boy or girl in Springville that has to go half so far as we do."

"I don't see why father doesn't move down there," complained Polly, burning more of the rich yellow milk on her mush; "then we could get to his work just as well, and it would be ever so much pleasanter than this lonesome place."

"You must remember that your father isn't a rich man," answered Grandmother Melton, gently. "He owns this cottage, and if he moved he would have to rent another house, and perhaps he couldn't sell this one."

The Meltons had only been in their new home since the early summer before. Both Fred and Polly had enjoyed it very much indeed during the pleasant days when school was out and vacation began. Then the wide, swift Mississippi had gleamed through the willows and cottonwoods a few rods away, inviting to bathing and swimming and fishing. But with the coming of winter the roads changed to mire, the river to ice, and the winds swept up the river sharp and cold, and it was a dreary, lonesome walk of three miles to and from Springville. As the winter progressed they had complained more and more, and now for a week the bluffs to the east of the lagoons in the river bottoms.

"They've got ahead of me," Polly had protested; "and I can't pass my examinations."

That morning Father Melton had gone up the river to help watch the levees. Reports had been coming from Minn. St. Louis, Cairo and other points farther up the great river that the water was rising rapidly. The levees must be watched day and night to prevent breaks. On leaving his home that morning Mr. Melton had told Fred that he would be back before dark, and that there was no danger to fear from the water. All his neighbors knew that the high water stage was high enough to be safe, even in the greatest floods.

"I'll go down and watch for him if it wasn't raining so hard," said Fred, and then he looked around toward the doorway, anxiously.

He caught his breath suddenly. Then he half rose from the table and pointed to the floor. Grandmother Melton dropped her fork noisily on her plate and her eyes followed the direction indicated by Fred's finger. She stared and gazed at the other two, wonderingly what it all meant.

"Look at the floor, crawling from the crack under the door, was a dark wriggling object. At first Fred had taken it to be one of the enormous rattlers so common to the Mississippi bottoms, that found their way in the spring of his father's rifle which stood in the corner.

"It's the flood," said Grandmother Melton when she could get her breath.

By this time the black ribbon of water was creeping across the floor in cracks and creeping out over the floor toward the table. Polly broke into a wail of terror, and Grandmother Melton seemed uncertain what to do.

Fred suddenly roused himself. He remembered that he was sitting in the house, and that he must watch over and protect it in his father's absence. He sprang to the door and threw open the door, not without a throb of fear, it was dark outside, and the rain came down in torrents. Curling up over the step they could see the muddy water, and they could hear the sound of it slapping against the house. It stretched away into the darkness in all directions as far as Fred could see. He knew that it already was at a depth of more high around the house.

"The levee's broken," said Polly, in a scared awed voice. "Do you think we'll be washed away?"

It was something that happened against the side of the house with so much force, that the dishes rattled. Fred ran to the side door and looked out, and found that a big log had washed down against the building.

Grandmother Melton was usually cool and brave under the most trying circumstances, was wringing her hands in terror.

"Run upstairs," shouted Fred, "and Polly and I'll bring all the stuff we can up with."

Grandmother Melton waited no longer. She crept up the narrow stairway to the little room that can be used as a board and began filling his arms with dishes of food, while Polly in her excitement acted the fool. The first thing came to hand—grandmother's rocking-chair—and struggled up the stairs with it.

"We'll need clothing more'n anything else," called Grandmother Melton.

Fred ran back to the room as the cottage was now entirely covered with water. He splashed through it and waded all the way to the closet where he ate his cool carry. Polly bravely wiped away her tears, and when Fred brought the loads to the stairway she ran with them to the bedroom where Grandmother Melton was waiting.

By this time the building had begun to shake and quiver as the water beat against it.

"She's going soon," shouted Fred.

"I'm afraid the water will reach us here," suggested Grandmother Melton.

Fred looked up. The ceiling was low, and just above him there had been a old trap-door, now nailed up. Instantly Fred seized the axe and broke through the ceiling so they could see the dark sky and the rain coming down in steady torrents. Fred piled a small table on the table and climbed out on the roof.

He couldn't see far, but he could hear the roaring of the water against the sides of the building, and the next instant the front end of the house began to settle downward, and Polly slipped down toward the rear end. Fred narrowly escaped being buried off the roof.

"We're going! We're going!" screamed Polly.

"We're just off the foundation," answered Fred, as bravely as he could.

Then he swung back down into the room and helped Grandmother Melton and Polly up through the trap-door to the roof. He covered them up with a blanket and told them to hang on to the ridgepole whatever might happen. Then he ran down for a coil of clothesline. This he tied firmly to the window at one end of the bedroom, carried the other end up through the trap-door, along the roof and dropped it over the eaves. Down he went again and fastened it to the other window frame. It would do to hold to. Hardly had he finished his work when the building gave another great lurch.

"Hold on," shouted Fred.

The words were hardly out of his mouth when he found himself thrown violently from his feet. He caught a glimpse of the water pouring up the stairway and then he was in it. He struggled and went out. Next he found himself pounding about in the water.

"Fred! Fred!" came the shrill, wild voice of Polly.

"Here I am," sputtered Fred. In falling he had caught the edge of the trap-door and Polly helped him to the roof.

"We had all we could do to hold on," gasped Grandmother Melton.

"We're moving," shouted Polly.

They were tossed and bumped along, with the water swirling and splashing around them.

"It's our first voyage," said Fred, with an effort to laugh; "p'raps we'll wind up in the gulf of Mexico."

But Polly didn't laugh; neither did Grandmother Melton.

A few minutes later they heard some one shouting far out on the stream and they saw the glimmer of a lantern. Fred shouted in return, but there was no answer, and presently the lantern was swallowed up in the darkness and the sound of voices came from more lonesome and terrified than before.

They were compelled to sit very firmly on the roof and the ridgepole all the time, for the house was continually bumping against obstructions in the stream and careening and jolting like a boat in a rough sea. Besides this, they were wet to the skin and shivering with cold and fright. Occasionally huge forms would loom up near them, and they would be startled to hear cows or buildings floating down the river. They were momentarily afraid lest they should injure Grandmother Melton and be broken up. If this happened they knew they would have small hope of life.

Quite suddenly they felt the building grind on something, and then, with a jolt, it came to a standstill. They could hear the timbers strain and creak and all the current of the stream splashing about it, but it did not move.

"Well, we're anchored," said Fred. "I suppose we're out somewhere on a sandbar in the middle of the river."

"Do you think we have reached Memphis?" asked Polly, anxiously.

"Polly is talking about as if they had been drifting for hours.

For a long time they remained almost silent. Occasionally they joined their voices in a great shout, but there was no answer. Fred said the water was falling, but no one could hear it, anyway, but it eased their spirits to be doing something.

"It's Memphis," cried Polly, joyfully.

Sure enough, on the hill, not such a long distance away, they could see many lights gleaming out over the water. Nearer, there were other lights moving about as if in search.

"It's Memphis," said Polly, and then they all shouted at the top of their voices.

But no one heard them. The water roared too loudly. So they sat for hours and hours—they seemed to them until the gray light of morning began to break in the east. They strained their eyes as it grew brighter and looked off across the gray flood of water with its scattering heaps of wreckage to the town on the hill.

"I thought Memphis was a bigger city than that," said Polly.

"It isn't Memphis," said Fred, with a little shiver, "it's a town that was made Polly and her grandmother look around quickly: "it's Springville."

"Springville!"

And Springville it was. They could see the little weatherbeaten church on the hill, and the red-brick schoolhouse, and Judge Carson's home, and a great many other familiar places, although some of the buildings had been shifted or had stood near the river had disappeared.

"But haven't we come only four miles?" said Grandmother Melton, looking greatly surprised.

Half an hour later two boats came alongside and in cautiously were received ashore. On the bank Polly found herself in the arms of her father, crying and laughing all at once. Father Melton looked old and worn and worried. He had given up his family for lost, and he was bravely helping the other people in the work of rescue.

After the flood was subsided the Meltons went down to look over their home. Father Melton hardly knew what to do, but Polly spoke up quite promptly.

"I tell you, father, let's leave it right here and live in it; Fred and I won't have so far to go to school."

And what do you think? That is just what Father Melton did. He straightened the house and built a new foundation under it, and the Meltons are living there today, quite happy and contented. Fred has only lost about two persons at least—Polly and Fred. —Chicago Record.

AND THE CROWD WILTED.

They Had Thoughts of Interfering, But Changed Their Minds.

From the San Francisco Post: Two young men who had stamped on every feature stalked into the Southern Pacific ticket office on Market street yesterday afternoon, and hurried excitedly to his arm was a young woman, her face covered with a tear-stained veil and her slender figure convulsed with sobs.

"Oh, don't go," she pleaded.

"I must," was his replied firmly, as he felt for his purse.

The clerks in the office drew near the scene, reporters crowded the doorway, a policeman stepped in the doorway, and a great throng jostled and surged in the sidewalk to get a glimpse of the scene within.

"Oh, please don't leave me," she sobbed.

The policeman scowled at the villain who was about to desert the unfortunate young woman, and his hand also had stepped forward to attend him had formed a vague idea of refusing him a ticket in order to prevent such a cruel desertion.

"Oh, please, please don't go," sobbed the girl, throwing her arms around him.

"I'll be back on the 5 o'clock train," said he to the ridgepole whatever might happen. Then he ran down for a coil of clothesline. This he tied firmly to the window at one end of the bedroom, carried the other end up through the trap-door, along the roof and dropped it over the eaves. Down he went again and fastened it to the other window frame. It would do to hold to. Hardly had he finished his work when the building gave another great lurch.

OLDEST BANK IN THE WORLD.

Founded at Naples in 1539 and Been in Existence Ever Since.

It will probably surprise a good many people to learn that the oldest bank in existence is the Bank of Naples, which has lately been passing through such troublous times. The British consul at Naples in his report for last year furnishes some details of the foundation of the bank in the sixteenth century and points out that the earlier banks, the Monte Vecchio of Venice and the Casa di San Giorgio of Genoa, established in the twelfth century, and the Bank of Barcelona, established in the fourteenth century, have all ceased to exist. The report traces the foundation of the Bank of Naples at 1539 and the institution was therefore older than the Bank of England, which was established in 1694. It is in the unique position of having a considerable capital to which no one lays any claim. For the explanation of this curious state of affairs we must go back to the time when the Neapolitans, in order to receive Charles V. with great pomp and magnificence, decided to cast loans from the Jews against valuable pledges. The difficulties of repayment were solved by the generous action by the king banishing the Jews, but the Jews contrived before leaving to dispose of their property to the Neapolitans on very easy terms. The buyers offered the pledges to their original owners at a considerable profit on the transaction and also offered further loans without interest on the old security. Philanthropic offers were also made to the institution on condition that it advance loans without interest, and in this way the Monte di Pietà originated as charitable pawnbroker. Gradually, however, it developed into a bank doing ordinary business, and continued up to nearly the end of the seventeenth century prospered greatly.

Varying Power of X-Rays.

At a recent meeting of the Royal society in London a description was given of the change that occurs in the penetrative power of the X-rays in proportion as the air is more and more completely exhausted from the vessels in which the rays are produced. At a certain degree of exhaustion the rays penetrate the flesh and muscles of a human hand in shadow. With a greater exhaustion of air the flesh becomes almost perfectly transparent, while the bones remain opaque. With a still higher degree of exhaustion the rays begin to penetrate the bones; and with the highest vacuum through which the electric discharge will pass, the bones themselves become almost as penetrable as the flesh. Similar variations in penetrative power can be produced by increasing or diminishing the power of the current, or by varying the electrical resistance of the tube.

MISPLACED ECONOMY.

It Is Usually Practiced by the Fair Sex.

There is certainly such a thing as an exaggeration of economy and a misplacement of effort, as in the case of the genius who advises making court plaster at home out of tightly stretched black silk and gum arabic or the one who gives us a long formula for the composition of a glue to be used at Chinas, says the New York Post. An investment of a dime around the corner is based upon more economy than any other commodity that will last a year. Such thrift is like that of the woman who bought all the vegetable trimmings she could worry over she suddenly remembered the poison, and at once found it a very good substitute indeed for anxiety. How easy for one of the children to find it in one of those pockets of goods which at any moment may attack a child! COLD TONGUE PASTE.

Dishes Easily Prepared Which Will Tempt the Appetite.

Fragments of cold tongue may be utilized by making them into paste and keeping it on hand for a sandwich for the lunch basket or to be served with a cup of tea for a supper dish or a relish at a table. It is prepared as follows:

Chop the tongue fine. To one and one season with salt, cayenne pepper and French mustard to suit the taste. To two cups of meat add one piece of butter the size of a small egg. Put the mixture into earthen cups, pressing it down tightly, and bake it with the cups standing in a pan of water two hours or more. When the paste has cooled, cover it with melted butter or boil the depth of a quarter of an inch, and put in a cold place. This will keep for a week or ten days.

Egg Saute—For each person prepare one egg, as follows: Separate the yolk from the white. Put the white stiff, heap it on a small dish or patty pan, flavored with salt and pepper and handdrop the whole yolk in, sprinkle with salt and white pepper and bake five minutes in a hot oven. This makes a pretty dish for the tea table, and is delicious when served with delicately spiced Tinos.

How to Examine a Watch.

To one who knows nothing about the mechanism of a watch, its mainspring or the balance wheel is a mere piece of steel. He has looked at the face and the hands of the watch, and while he admires the motions of the hands and the figures on the face he may have wondered in idle amazement as to the character of the machinery which produced the motion. Take it to pieces and show him each piece and explain its relation to the other design nor adaptation nor relation between them; but put them together, and he will be as much at a loss to alter their movements, and then show him the various pieces and explain to him all one design—that, notwithstanding the number of parts, their dependence on the various offices and the agents concerned, the whole piece is of one piece and designed for one end. He now rightly concludes that when the watch was fashioned and when purposed, in relation to all the other parts must have been considered and that upon this wheel were cut and regulated—adapted—to the ratchets on that, and that upon the mainspring. Now that such a piece of mechanism could not have been made without design or the adaptation of the parts is such as to show it to be according to design, and proceeding from a wise intelligence.—Harper's Round Table.

BEAUTY IS BLOOD DEEP.

PURE, HEALTHY BLOOD MEANS BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION.

Intestinal Microbes Poison the Blood When the Bowels Are Constipated. Drive Them Out by Stating the Liver Lively.

"Beauty is skin deep." That is wrong. Beauty is blood deep.

A person constipated, with a lazy liver, bilious headaches, sallow complexion, impure and fever spots and a sole leather complexion.

No one with a furred tongue, a bad breath, a jaundiced eye, can be beautiful, no matter how perfect are form and features. To be beautiful, to become beautiful, or remain beautiful, the blood must be kept pure and free from bile, microbes, disease germs and other impurities.

Cascaret Candy Cathartic will do it for you quickly, surely, naturally. They are the grip nor gripe, but make the liver lively, prevent sour stomach, kill disease-germs, tone up the bowels, purify the blood, and make all things right, as they should be. Then beauty comes of itself, and to stay.

Buy and use Cascarets today. Try what they do, not what we say they do, that will please you. All druggists, 10c, 25c or 50c, or mailed for price. Send for booklet and free sample. Address Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago, Montreal, Can., or New York.

WHILE YOU WAIT.

"Block your hat while you wait," was the first of the signs that caught my eye. It was once familiar; it is now not so often seen, says the New York Sun. "Have your shoes half soled? Have you paired while you wait." The first of these signs appeared in the Bowery. Two expert workmen sat in the window of the shop and worked away lustily. More men at work were seen inside. There were comfortable chairs for waiting customers and newspapers for them to read. The shop filled a long, low room. There were a considerable number of places in the city where shoes are mended while you wait, but the signs of none of them is a schedule of time required is given; so many minutes for heels and so many for soling.

In some tailor shops nowadays garments are pressed while you wait, and there are dentists' offices in which you may now have your artificial teeth repaired while you wait.

In summer time there are to be found nowadays establishments where they clean and press your straw hat while you wait. They are usually set up in some vacant store in a busy street.

In some of these places one may see half a dozen men sitting hatless, waiting. Some of them are reading papers, and on at the men at work, who have, in the different stages, three hats in hand at once.

The modern "while you wait" signs show the enterprise that is all the time on the lookout for new ways of making money, and they show, also, the readiness of the people to things and get them out of the way.

The Other Man Didn't Survive.

The grandsons of the "Old Guard" will never be forgotten in France can long as the memory of a brave man shall live in the national heart. But some of them, at least, were as bright as they were brave, as the following trustworthy anecdote bears witness:

One fine morning, after peace had been concluded between France and Russia, the two emperors, Napoleon and Alexander, were taking a walk, arm-in-arm, around the palace park at Erfurt. As they approached the end of the park they saw a sentry at the grand staircase, the man, who was a grenadier of the old guard, presente darms. The emperor of France turned and pointed out the man to the czar, and asked: "What do you think, my brother, of soldiers who can survive assaults such as that?"

"I envy you," answered Alexander, "what do you think of soldiers who can inflict them?"

Without stirring an inch from his position or changing the expression of his face, the sentry cried out: "The soldier himself replied, gravely:

"The other man did it is dead."—Youth's Companion.

The Purchase of a Title.

A well known Continental dealer in titles and decorations has just issued a price current for the home market. He does not sell his wares directly to his clients, but claims to have influence with the various governments, and says, with a "tap" a twill. As a proof of good faith, he asks no fee until the desired piece of goods is delivered. The degree of Ph. D. can be had for a mere song for a few dollars, and the title of Councilor of Legation can be obtained for $500. The decoration Order of the Iron Crest is just a little expensive. It will cost $15,000. But you can be a baron or a count for $2,000 or $3,000, according to the size of the title you select. One hundred dollars will secure you a patent of nobility, but the price for "Colonels" is not quoted. For even the Continental dealer feels he must draw the line at some point, and the American market is in this particular line of business.

Passings of the Cracker.

A Florida man is thus quoted in the Washington Post: "One of the best signs of the times in Florida is the rapidly-waning influence of the 'Cracker.' The 'Cracker' is a long-haired, sallow complexioned, freckle-faced animal with the 'one-gallus' type, whose principal occupation is whittling soft wood goods boxes and expectorating tobacco juice. Let us thank the Lord that domination of the 'Cracker' in Florida has ruled the destinies of the state long enough, and, being ignorant, prejudiced and unprogressive, his sway was for the general detriment."

Sound Distances.

The whistle of a locomotive is heard 3,300 yards through the air; the noise of a railway train, 2,800 yards; the report of a musket and the bark of a dog, 1,800 yards; the human voice reaches a distance of 1,000 yards; the cracking of a frog, 500 yards; the chirping of crickets, 800 yards. Distinct speaking is heard in the air from below to a distance of 600 yards; from above it is understood to have a range of only 100 yards downwards.

It is a common saying that lightning never strikes twice in the same place, but the saying has been disproved. Last week lightning struck the house of H. W. Thomas, foreman of the N. P. boiler shops, and it was badly demolished, but all his family escaped uninjured. This week a lightning streak of good fortune struck him when he held ticket No. 3095 that drew the fine new $100 wheel at J. F. McGinnis & Co's.

The police on Tuesday arrested a man by the name of Lee on a message from the authorities of Anaconda, Mont., accusing him of grand larceny. The man has been selling rugs and mats about the city for some days and went by the name of Dave Miller. A later telegram stated that the Anaconda sheriff had left there for this city to take Miller back. He is expected to arrive today. Miller is in jail awaiting the Montana sheriff.

Mrs. Georgia Barber, formerly of Burnhamville, but now of Brainerd, was taken down to Minneapolis by Dr. Christie last week and operated on for a womb trouble. It was the worst case of the kind that Dr. Dunsmore had had in the past two or three years, and there was great danger in the operation, but the lady passed through it well and was getting on nicely up till Monday. There has been no word from her since then.—Long Prairie Leader.

The case of B. Benson, who was arrested on June 29th, on complaint of J. W. Anderson, on a charge of petit larceny, was called up in the municipal court this morning. Benson demanded a jury trail and a jury was ordered impaneled, and the case was set for Monday. Benson was delivery man for Mr. Anderson, who conducts a grocery in Southeast Brainerd, and he is accused of collecting money from customers and not giving them credit on the books.

A meeting of citizens will be held in the Y. M. C. A. building on next Tuesday evening for the purpose of perfecting an organization to look after the improvement and betterment of the streets of the city. Certainly no more worthy object could be imagined, and all citizens should attend. The first thing attempted in this line should be the abatement of the sow nuisance, as citizens would then take some pride in planting trees and beautifying the streets otherwise. Until this is done all attempts to improve the streets will be a waste of time.

John Sago yesterday plead guilty to petit larceny in the municipal court and was fined $50 or given a 60 days' jail sentence. Sago last spring stole a gun and some blankets from John Bishop at Gull Lake. Mr. Bishop has suspicioned ever since that Sago was the guilty party, but did not cause his arrest until last Friday, when he found the gun at Henry Betzold's in East Brainerd, where Sago had pawned it. Sago was arraigned on Saturday last and entered a plea of not guilty. The case was continued until Wednesday, when the plea was changed to guilty, and Sago was sentenced as stated above.

C. E. Sherwood Insane.

The many friends of Engineer Chas. Sherwood will be greatly pained to learn that he has become demented, and has been taken to a hospital for treatment. For a month past those associated with him have noticed that he was acting strangely. About three weeks ago he failed to report for duty on his regular passenger run from St. Paul to this city, and for a week he wandered about the Twin Cities before he reported for duty. It was then noticed that he was acting very strangely. He made a couple of trips then disappeared again without permission. He went to Montana and on Tuesday of this week the local Masonic lodge, of which he is a member, received a message saying that he had been found wandering about the country about 20 miles from White Sulphur Springs, Montana, in a demented condition. He has been taken charge of by friends and taken to a hospital for treatment. Mr. Sherwood was a most excellent engineer, and apparently was free from any trouble that would affect his mind, hence his condition was a great surprise to his many friends. It has been reported, however, that he has been concentrating his mind for some time past on a proposed invention, and it may be that constant and untiring thought on this one subject may have caused his deplorable condition.

Leo. Kelleher Drowned.

Leo. Kelleher, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Kelleher, aged 9 years, was drowned on Monday afternoon while in swimming in the creek south of town near the Betzold place. Ordinarily this creek is only a small stream with not enough water to be dangerous, but the recent heavy rains have filled it, and washed deep holes from 10 to 15 feet in depth. Young Kelleher, with three other boys, Witham, Senti and Tardy by name, were in swimming. He and the Senti boy had hold of hands and were wading down the creek when they fell into a deep hole. The current carried the Senti boy down stream and he succeeded in catching hold of the root of a tree and pulled himself out. Young Kelleher could not swim and went down. On coming to the surface he called to the Witham and Tardy boy to reach a stick to him, but they were so excited that they could do nothing, and he sank to rise no more alive. The Tardy boy, as soon as possible, ran to Leo's home, and Mr. Kelleher and Alderman Purdy went down with a team as fast as possible, taking two boys who were good swimmers with them. On arriving at the scene of the accident the boys dived down for the body, and the second attempt proved successful, but life was entirely extinct. The sudden death of the young boy was a terrible blow on the parents, who are both nearly crazed with grief. The funeral services were held at 2 p. m. on Wednesday at the Catholic church, Rev. Fr. Zambuah, of Staples, conducting the services.

A Fine Time at Brainerd.

The members of the local G. A. R. Post who attended the Thirteenth Annual Encampment at Brainerd last week were loud in their praises of the hospitality extended the old vets by the people of that city. One of them was heard to remark that "it was the best encampment he ever attended," and that is saying much. The people of Brainerd did themselves proud in providing for the boys in every possible manner, and the neat appearance of the city was admired by all. Camp Spalding was a thing of beauty and the large tent afforded ample room for all who wished to listen to the speeches.—Verndale Sun.

The Leech Lake Excursion.

The excursion to Leech Lake, which was announced for Saturday, July 3rd, had to be postponed until Monday, July 5th, owing to washouts on the N. P. and B. & N. M. railroads caused by the storm of Friday night. The excursion occurred on Monday, but owing to the delay the attendance was comparatively light, probably not more than half going that would have gone on Saturday. The train consisted of five coaches, but not more than three were filled, probably about 150 persons. Those who did go, however, report a most delightful time. The programme of entertainment at Walker and the agency was carried out as previously announced. The return trip from Walker was made after the fireworks, leaving about 10 p. m. and arriving here at 12:15.

The excursion was not a financial success, only 1,285 adult tickets and several children's tickets being sold. As a result the receipts will not quite cover the expenses.

Still Going

At $1.50 per dozen. On account of the inclemency of the weather, I will continue for a few days longer the cut prices on my Cabinet Photographs at $1.50 per dozen. DAYSDALE

Elected Officers.

The Mississippi Valley Lumberman of last Friday says: "The stockholders of the Brainerd & Northern Minnesota railroad held their annual meeting yesterday afternoon in the office of the company in the Lumber Exchange and elected the following officers: President C. A. Pillsbury; vice-president, J. R. Carpenter; secretary, W. F. Brooks; treasurer, E. L. Carpenter."

The River is High.

Owing to the unusually heavy rains the past few days the river has again risen, and until the flats about the pump house are again covered with water, the water being within a foot as high as during the extremely high water early in the spring.

POINTON ITEMS.

Married, at the residence of Wm. Martin on Eagle lake, Elder Deacon officiating, Mr. Henry Wellwood to Miss Myrtle Martin, of Pointon's. Neighbors and friends join in wishing them long years of wedded bliss.

Mr. E. K. Clymer, wife and children of St. Paul, are stopping at the Nash farm; rest and recreation the object.

A couple of resident bachelors who were taking in the wedding blow-out on Tuesday night got home in rather a dilapidated condition having come in collision on their way home.

Several men from Iowa have been looking the land over at this place a couple of weeks past with the intention of buying, and improving land here. Three of them have bought on Sec. 29, and are clearing and fencing and will build in the near future.

Crops are looking fine, notwithstanding the heavy rain storm of late. The roads are in a bad condition.

ELASTIC STARCH has been before the people of the United States for 21 years, and is without doubt, the greatest starch invention of the Nineteenth Century. Last year its sales reached the unprecedented number of twenty million packages. It is prepared with scientific principles by men who have had years of practical experience in fancy laundrying. It makes ironing easy, restores old summer clothes to their natural whiteness, and imparts to linen a beautiful and lasting finish. It is the only starch manufactured that is perfectly harmless, containing neither arsenic, alum or any other substance injurious to linen, and can be used even by a baby provided.

Proceedings of Board of Education.

The regular monthly meeting of the board of education was held on Monday evening, all members being present except Cullen and Titze.
