HEREAFTER cattle will be shipped by the pound instead of carload rates on the Northern Pacific and other Northwestern roads.

SHOULD gold be discovered by Andree at the North pole there are plenty of people who would at once commence operation to reach the coveted spot.

IN the makeup of the committees Speaker Reed has placed Congressman Morris on that of rivers and harbors and also on levees and improvement of the Mississippi river. Those are two very important committees to the Northwest.

AND now comes a man from St. Louis who claims to have succeeded in developing a potato that will grow without vines, and entirely under ground. The vineless potato will be to the potato bug what the horseless carriage is to the horse.

The Northfield News strikes the right note when it says "work on the highways can hardly be said to compete with any form of skilled labor. Practically, it creates a new industry, as undoubtedly the introduction of the convict system of road working would lead to road improvement not now undertaken. A system that would make convict labor inure to the State and promote a public improvement of such incalculable importance as good roads has a great deal to commend it and is deserving of a trial. The next General Assembly ought to authorize a beginning."

Fullerton Gets a Roast.

Representative D. M. Gunn, of Grand Rapids roasts Executive Agent Fullerton of the state game and fish commission to a complete brown in a recent communication to the press of the Twin Cities. The agent of the game commission in an interview with the Minneapolis Journal stated that he had every reason to believe that moose meat was being served at all times of the year upon the tables of the Grand Rapids hotels and that game wardens had been withdrawn from Itasca county because no convictions could be secured after violators of the law had been arrested and that seventeen instances of the kind were on record. Mr. Gunn brands the statement as an absolute falsehood and adds:

The real intent of the law is for the preservation of live game and fish and not for the confiscation of what may be slaughtered. While a moose hunt is one of the measures employed to a certain end, it is by no means the object. Yet, we find that the present executive agent has devoted his whole energies to the business of confiscation and has absolutely done nothing to prevent slaughter. He sends out deputies who make no effort to find out the killing of game or fish, but whose work indicates that they have been instructed to report only violations of that kind. Fullerton may continue to do a thriving cold storage business at St Paul. It is regretted that the citizens of Mr. Fullerton there has been more money turned in to the state treasury under the provision of the act that created his office than ever before, and I am free to grant the correctness of the claim. But what does this fact indicate? Simply that there have been more violations of the law than ever before, that the payments have been greater; that less has been done to prohibit slaughter and greater caution used to bag the game of the hunter than under any previous administration of the office. Mr. Fullerton may be able to deceive the newspaper reporters and those who do most of their hunting and loafing at the state capitol, but the people of the region have long understood his motives, and are well aware that the law as now administered is well calculated to deplete the forests and streams of the state of game and fish that the legislature hoped to preserve.

The Gull Lake Reservoir.

Under date of July 24, Col. Jones makes the following report in regard to the Mississippi system:

At Pokegama reservoir, no work was done owing to legal complications over awards for lands. The report says that the reservoir has not sufficient capacity to carry the water from its own water shed, and it is suggested that subsidiary reservoirs be established at Deer and Bass lakes. The capacity could also be increased by dredging a deeper channel below it and the river. Colonel Jones says that preparations are being made to negotiate with the land owners at Gull lake reservoir to pay for the overflowed lands in accordance with the last sundry civil bill. Work on this project has not been commenced. An examination of the upper Crow Wing basin discloses the fact that a reservoir with a capacity of 6,753,000,000 cubic feet may be created by the construction of a dam twenty-two feet high one mile below Shell river. The report says there is no single locality where large quantities of water discharged from the crow Wing watershed can be stored, and this will necessitate a resort to a number of small reservoirs. Continuous hydrological records have been kept at the mouth of the dam since the completion of each structure. These records show that the rise on the annual service gauges of St. Paul, due to the reservoir water, for ninety days during the low water navigation period, has been from twelve to eighteen inches. Colonel Jones reports that a part of Leech lake dam is weak and should be rebuilt. The same condition obtains at Lake Winnibigoshish dam. At the latter a full reservoir is foreseen feet above low water of the lake, but this year the limit of safety was placed at but seven feet. In consequence 3,250,000,000 feet of water was wasted between May 23 and June 30. He urges appropriations for strengthening both dams.

GONE TO HIS LONG REST.

Newton McFadden Dies On Sunday Night at 10:30 From the Effects of a Gunshot Wound Inflicted by Himself.

The people of this city were shocked on Sunday afternoon by the announcement that Newton McFadden, one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens and business men, had shot himself with suicidal intent, and while many could scarcely believe the report, it was but too true as later events showed. During nearly the entire morning Mr. McFadden was at his place of business on Front street, and while his actions and conversation were not unusual, incidents can now be recalled which show that he was not himself. He returned to his home at the dinner hour, but ate sparingly and went to his room upstairs where he reclined on the bed. His wife was in the room at the time, and sent him go to the dresser, as she supposed for a handkerchief, but instead he took a revolver from the drawer, went back to the bed where he laid down and placing the gun close to his breast fired. The bullet took effect, but did not reach his heart, taking a downward course, but medical aid which was at once summoned, was of no avail, and Mr. McFadden died at 10:30 o'clock, having retained consciousness for even an hour after the fatal bullet was fired. He talked freely and expressed no regret over the matter. The deceased for many years had been a sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism, and although he had visited the Arkansas Hot Springs, Mt. Clemens and other places, and had spent the past winter in California, he could get no permanent relief, and it is supposed that his suffering was so intense that he preferred death rather than live and be a slave to the disease.

Mr. McFadden was one of the oldest residents of the city, and his friends were legion, he had no enemies. His business matters were in good shape, the firm having but recently bought a second drug store in this city.

The funeral services were conducted from the house Wednesday afternoon by Rev. Geo. W. Gallagher, assisted by Rev. M. B. Bird and Canon Pentreath, the services being under the direction of Aurora Lodge No. 100, A. F. and A. M., and the Knights Templar, the members of the A. O. U. W. and the Brainerd Fire Department attending in a body, the deceased having for many years been a member of these societies. The floral offerings were very fine and profuse, the Knights Templar, police and fire departments each presenting a separate emblematic wreath, and the State Fire Association a floral anchor of beautiful design. The remains were buried in Evergreen cemetery, the pall bearers being D. D. Smith, W. A. Fleming, John T. Fraser, J. T. Sanborn, T. McMaster and E. M. Westfall.

R. O. Strong, secretary of the State Fire Association, J. N. Nicolin, of Jordon, and C. N. LaFond, the last two being past presidents of the above society, were in attendance, Mr. McFadden having been an honorary member, and also a member of the first fire department organized in this city.

Mrs. Fred Kees, an intimate friend of the family, arrived in the city Tuesday to attend the funeral, as did also Mrs C. E. Chipperfield, her husband having been detained at Canton, owing to an engagement to deliver an address before the state attorney's association.

Newton McFadden was born at Alleghany, Pa., Nov. 26, 1850, and was in his 47th year at the time of his death. In May, 1870, he left Pittsburg, and came directly to Duluth, where he entered the employ of Bell & Eyster, Pioneers, remaining with them 18 months and then removing to Detroit, this state, where he opened a small business on his own account, remaining there some eight months. In 1873 Mr. McFadden came to Brainerd, and was employed by S. V. R. Sherwood in his drug store, remaining with him until 1874, when he succeeded his employer as proprietor of the establishment, and was engaged continuously in the drug business from that time until his death. In 1881 the style of the firm was McFadden & Johnson, being composed of himself and C. D. Johnson, later on succeeding to the business alone, and in 1893 The McFadden Drug Co. was organized, under which style the business has been conducted to the present time, the firm consisting of Mr. McFadden and Frank B. Johnson. In 1885 a fine brick business block was erected on Front street by Mr. McFadden, and the business was transferred from the one story wooden building to the handsome quarters that had been constructed on the old site. In 1874 the deceased was elected to the responsible position of county treasurer and held the same for 10 years, vacating the office in 1884. He had also held the office of city treasurer, and other positions of trust. On August 22, 1877, Mr. McFadden was united in marriage to Miss Julia Johnson, and to them a daughter was born, now Mrs. C. E. Chipperfield, of Canton, Ill., his wife and daughter, one sister in California, and one in Pittsburg, and his brother Milton McFadden, of this city being the members of his immediate family left to mourn his untimely death.

CARD OF THANKS.

I wish to tender my most sincere thanks to the friends who gave their sympathy and kindly ministrations on the occasion of the death and funeral of my beloved husband, Newton McFadden, and especially to the Brainerd Fire Department, the State Fire Association, the Masonic order and the A. O. U. W. These kindly deeds and the beautiful floral tributes were tokens that will not be forgotten.

MRS. JULIA K. MCFADDEN.

COMMUNICATED.

Newton Mc Fadden is dead. How prominent comes to the mind the thought, we know not the hour when the summons comes for the parting of the soul and the body. Poor Man, tired, weary, racked with the torments of rheumatic pain, his mental self left him and he sought to hasten the call of Him who calls us all, and severed the thread of life; passed beyond. He was his only enemy. He had his faults, and if his faults wrought sorrow to others they were immeasurably compensated by his other, higher and nobler traits of character and adornment in life.

He believed in that broad, universal creed, having for its cardinal doctrine "do right", and for its motto "do good", living up to those principles who can say but a crucified Christ will say, well done, peace, mortal peace.

He was charitable; he could always condone the faults of others; no subterfuge could ever passed Mc'adden unsigned and uncontributed to His political career and his business life was all that is honorable; no man was ever wronged or betrayed by Newton McFadden.

His memory will last with the earliest people of Brainerd who knew him best. No higher tribute can be paid, no grander expression can be uttered, and I would have written as his epitaph, "Newton McFadden was the soul of honor".

Dangers of Buffalo Hunting.

A son of an Iroquois half breed went out one day with other Indians to run buffaloes along the Red river, but he never returned. They found his horse with his gun and knife, but could not find the man.

About a year later, as the Indians were hunting in another part of the country, a buffalo bull was seen which had something peculiar on her head. They chased and killed her and found that her singular head ornament was the pelvis of a man, one of her horns having pierced the fibin part of the body, which was wedged on so tightly that they could scarcely get it off.

Much of the hair on the head, neck and shoulders of the cow was worn off short, and on the side on which the bone was the hair looked new, as if it had been worn off the bone, and was beginning to grow out again.

It is supposed that this bone was part of the missing half breed, who had been killed by the cow and carried about on her head until his body fell to pieces.—Exchange.

Cremation is more extensively practiced in Italy than in any country. The first crematorium was established in Milan in 1876, and there are now 50 in operation in Italian territory.

THE BEST OF TRUMPS.

St. Valentine,
O cabal below,
How much we mortals owe to thee!
What blessings grow
From all we do!

Just glance around,
Once o'er the ground
And see
What life would be
Without the trust
Both wives and husbands feel!

Men are divided by their creed;
You'll stand aside
They hail from every clime;
They fall from every height—
Or else they leaf with all their might—
Their woes grinding
A mass of boiling hills and bone,
Of sins, imperfections of the soul of life,
It shuts take refuge from all strife,
Their tramp a spell or dish.
Aye, there's the rub!

And maids these days?
Poor maids! Their years
Sometimes compel the thought
That they are far more sorely taught
By glittering things—
By trinkets,
Than by a nature fit for wings;
Their trump, the diamond!

Then you come
With Cupid in your train, and take the sunsh
And lay bare the heart of all mankind,
And bring the thought of Love—sweet Love,
the blind.

One snap upon fair Cupid's string,
And pessimistic thoughts are born,
And, spite of diamonds, clubs and spades,
Hearts are the trumps of men and maids.

Ah, Valentine,
Then saint benign!
How much we mortals owe to thee!
What blessings grow
Should we do fair!
What love from all should go to thee!
—Anna Warrington Wilbourg in Harper's Bazar.

The Euphrates.

John Punnett Peddle, in his book, "Nippur, or Explorations on the Euphrates," thus describes that great river of history:

"The Euphrates now flows through a dismal desert—a stream of muddy water, with tamarisk and poplar jungles, while licorice and dura fields and a few small towns and villages occupy a narrow, deep depression in a sterile, treeless plateau, inhabited only by nomads. But this has not always been the case. In ancient times Mesopotamia, from the River Khabor northward and westward, seems to have been fairly well wooded, well inhabited and prosperous, while the Syrian side of the river, from the bend by Barbalissus and upward, was rich and densely settled, and even to the south and east of this the ruins of important cities may still be found, and the Assyrian annals tell of forests in the same direction, remnants of which have been but lately rediscovered. In times of prosperity and progress and when a strong power controlled part or the whole of the Euphrates valley, civilization invaded the desert and established posts and roads, which checked and drove back the Arabs and extended the area of cultivable land."

Laws of Teaching.

(1) "There is no school," says Mr. J. M. Greenwood, "unless the father, the mother, the teacher and the pupil keep school together. (2) Know thoroughly the subject to be taught and explain to the pupil why you teach it. (3) Gain and keep the attention of the pupils. Excite their interest. (4) In your teaching use language that your pupils understand. (5) Begin with the known and go by easy steps to the unknown. Take the whole class with you. (6) Excite self activity in the pupils and lead each to discover truth. Show the class how to study. (7) In each lesson let a halt be made, and then have pupils fix the points already made, the conclusions reached and the premises upon which each conclusion is based. (8) The teaching must touch the whole nature of the child and stimulate to higher action and more industrious habits of study, of motive, of obedience, honesty and truthfulness. Three-fourths of education is a habit of work."—New York Ledger.

Spoiled It All.

"Some things make a man excessively weary," said a congressman from the northwest. "I had been working for six months to get a certain postoffice established out in my district, and finally succeeded, and the department sent out blank bonds to the man who was to be appointed.

"There had been some trouble about the name of the office to be established. The people wanted a name which conflicted with some other office, and the postoffice department suggested another name for them. All this had been carefully explained to the people and to the would be postmaster through many letters."

"Now, what do you suppose that fellow did? He secured bondsmen all right, but carefully marked out the name of the office selected by the department wherever it occurred and inserted the name he had asked for at first. I suppose he thought he was too smart for any government official. But it will be a long time before he gets that commission or the people get the office."—Washington Post.

Taught Him Sense.

The San Francisco Examiner says that once when Chief Justice John Marshall was driving the hub of his wheel caught on a small sapling growing by the roadside. After striving unsuccessfully for some moments to extricate the wheel, he heard the sound of an ax in the woods and saw a negro approaching. Hailing him, he said, "If you will get that ax and cut down this tree, I'll give you $1." "I'c's git yer by bout no sich of dat's all yer want." "Yes, that's all," said the judge. The man simply backed the horse until the wheel was clear of the sapling, and then brought the vehicle safely around it. "You don't charge $1 for that, do you?" asked the astonished chief justice. "No, massa, but it's wuf $1 to l'arn some folks sense." The quick witted darky got his dollar without further questioning.

A PRETTY BAD MIX UP.

It Was Thrillingly Realistic, but It Seems to Have Been Overdone.

The old property man seated himself on a moss covered "practical" stump while waiting for the play to begin, and, in response to my question, said:

"Mistakes will occur and things will get mixed up in the theatrical business as well as in any other. I remember one season when I was with 'The Country Fairs' everything real, you know—real cows, horses, chickens and all that sort of stuff. One act was in the city, and there were real fire engines, cable cars, dumpboats, policemen, and such like; good play and took in money by the barrelful, but hard work for me; had to buy fresh vegetables for the cows to eat in full view of the audience and look after a raft of other things.

"One night out at Zanesville, O., just as the curtain went up, the boy mule, who appeared in the first tableau, kicked the brass cannon used in the Fourth of July scene. He was a powerful kicker, having been practicing on me for about three months, and the row generated by the striking of his shoe against the cannon set off the charge, and it blazed away, scaring the real cows and other animals. The whole caboodle of 'em stampeded straight on to the stage. The real chickens also flew on, and the fire engine horses likewise naturally charged in, the racket being right in their line. The stage hands and most of the actors rushed on to try to straighten out the tangle.

"About this time a water pipe burst, and enough let out of the thunder machine, and it began to thunder worse than I had ever heard it before in a long and eventful life. This jarred the snow department, and the paper flakes began to flutter down pretty lively, while a box of red fire in the wings caught from the smoldering cannon wadding and cast a lurid and fitful glare o'er the general catadysm, as I may call it. The real Alabama bull tossed the heavy villain on his horns, and the real old Southdown ram butted the comic man across the footlights and back into the neighborhood of the fifth row, landing him in the lap of his honor the mayor. It was a terrible thing to be remembered, with the chickens flying up into the proscenium boxes and cackling like mad, and the comedian trying to play the whole thing down with a redhot selection from Wagner. But we got it all straightened out at last."

"But what about the audience?" inquired an innocent listener. "Wasn't there a panic?"

"Not a bit of it. That's the funny part of the whole thing. They were a very intelligent audience, right up to date on the realistic drama, and they thought it was the first act. Never heard such applause in my life. The manager wanted to repeat the thing every night in place of the opening scene, but the author wouldn't listen to it. He said it wasn't art."—Harper's Magazine.

Japanese Alloys.

The composition of a number of Japanese alloys hitherto kept a close secret is said to be, as now revealed by workmen making them, as follows: The "shaku" is an alloy of copper and verdigris, until they have assumed the coppered or blue black hue of sword sheaths and decorative articles. Another is the "shibu-ichi," a copper alloy with 30 or 50 per cent of silver of the well known gray color. What is called "Corean gold" is a copper of several alloys. About 30 plates of foils of gold, shadko, copper, silver and the last mentioned alloy are soldered together, holes are made and the plate hammered put and put in the mordant. The finest Japanese brass "shibu" consists of ten parts copper and five of zinc, and of bell metals "karakane" is made of ten parts of copper, four of tin, one-half iron and 1½ zinc, the copper being melted first and the other metals added in the above order.—Exchange.

Malayan Marriages.

On the Malayan islands the wives are treated very tenderly by their husbands. The priest who performs the marriage ceremony over a Malayan bridal couple gives to the husband the following monition: "Do not wound your wife with the sharp edge of a knife. If she refuses to obey you, take her into a room by herself and chastise her with a handkerchief." Provided the cloth is not tied into a dozen knots, no more gentle method of reproval could be devised.—St. Louis Republic.

Convincing.

"He is a very poor judge of human nature," remarked Miss Cayennet thoughtfully.

"What leads you to that conclusion?"

"He has such a good opinion of himself."—Washington Star.

Clear Reasoning.

He—How do you know your father will give his consent?

She—He has often said that you are the last man in our set to whom he would give his son-in-law's daughter, which, while simple, appears to be effective. Having due regard to the usual direction of vessels over the principal ocean courses, a single sound has been taken to indicate a common course, say easterly, while combinations of two sounds indicate all of the usual points of the compass. Thus a course due west is indicated by a single horn blow, one due east by a siren blow, north and south by combinations, such as two horns and two whistles, and so on.—Exchange.

SHOOTING A RHINOCEROS.

Mr. H. W. Seeley, of Hartford, Conn., Describes His Experiences in "After Big Game In Africa and India."

Shortly after bagging his first elephant the author started after the two horned rhinoceros, which gives the following account of his experience:

As I came round a bush I saw at the bottom of a kind of natural alley in the forest, framed in like a picture by the trees, a massive old female rhinoceros. She was facing me and standing half in sunshine, half in shadow. From a bush protruded the hind quarters of another. Signing to the Somalis to keep back, I instantly set down and "drew a bead" upon her chest. The distance was about 70 yards, and, although the wind was adverse to her and we had made no noise, she must have seen us like moving shadows among the trees and was evidently full of suspicion and distrust.

If I ever took careful aim, it was at that moment, and under cover of the smoke I shifted my position as the rhinoceros came charging down upon us, giving three or four sharp whiffs like jets of steam, evidently with the intention of clearing the enemy away from the rear before making her escape toward the front and, and the cracking trying to play the whole thing down with a redhot selection from Wagner. But we got it all straightened out at last."

"But what about the audience?" inquired an innocent listener. "Wasn't there a panic?"

"Not a bit of it. That's the funny part of the whole thing. They were a very intelligent audience, right up to date on the realistic drama, and they thought it was the first act. Never heard such applause in my life. The manager wanted to repeat the thing every night in place of the opening scene, but the author wouldn't listen to it. He said it wasn't art."—Harper's Magazine.

Japanese Alloys.

The composition of a number of Japanese alloys hitherto kept a close secret is said to be, as now revealed by workmen making them, as follows: The "shaku" is an alloy of copper and verdigris, until they have assumed the coppered or blue black hue of sword sheaths and decorative articles. Another is the "shibu-ichi," a copper alloy with 30 or 50 per cent of silver of the well known gray color. What is called "Corean gold" is a copper of several alloys. About 30 plates of foils of gold, shadko, copper, silver and the last mentioned alloy are soldered together, holes are made and the plate hammered put and put in the mordant. The finest Japanese brass "shibu" consists of ten parts copper and five of zinc, and of bell metals "karakane" is made of ten parts of copper, four of tin, one-half iron and 1½ zinc, the copper being melted first and the other metals added in the above order.—Exchange.

Malayan Marriages.

On the Malayan islands the wives are treated very tenderly by their husbands. The priest who performs the marriage ceremony over a Malayan bridal couple gives to the husband the following monition: "Do not wound your wife with the sharp edge of a knife. If she refuses to obey you, take her into a room by herself and chastise her with a handkerchief." Provided the cloth is not tied into a dozen knots, no more gentle method of reproval could be devised.—St. Louis Republic.

Convincing.

"He is a very poor judge of human nature," remarked Miss Cayennet thoughtfully.

"What leads you to that conclusion?"

"He has such a good opinion of himself."—Washington Star.

Clear Reasoning.

He—How do you know your father will give his consent?

She—He has often said that you are the last man in our set to whom he would give his son-in-law's daughter, which, while simple, appears to be effective. Having due regard to the usual direction of vessels over the principal ocean courses, a single sound has been taken to indicate a common course, say easterly, while combinations of two sounds indicate all of the usual points of the compass. Thus a course due west is indicated by a single horn blow, one due east by a siren blow, north and south by combinations, such as two horns and two whistles, and so on.—Exchange.

Learned Late.

Sometimes a man lives to be more than 30 years old before he fully realizes that it isn't the case of a gold watch that he is depending on to keep good time.—Somerville (Mass.) Journal.

The army worm may do more damage in the state than would an army in force.

If those seniors and sophomores of the Chicago university don't reform they will land in the state legislature.

The sultan doubts his ability to comply with the demands of the powers. But perhaps the powers will help him to comply with their demands.

If the reports of renewed Turkish massacres of Christian missionaries be true it behooves the European powers to take another fall out of poor little Greece.

Of course, the sultan brought the Turco-Grecian war to an abrupt termination, just as soon as he was given to understand that unless he did so General Miles would have to miss the queen's jubilee.

The contest between romance and realism has reached an acute stage. An offer is made, in a newspaper column devoted to such proffers, to exchange "Tom Brown's School Days" for "setting of white Leghorn or Plymouth Rock eggs."

Herbert Spencer, the English philosopher, has mastered the science of method. He keeps five secretaries busy in order to bring his sociology up to date, though he himself can only work one hour a day when in his best physical condition. Much of the time he cannot work that one hour, but his secretaries, directed by him, do their daily task.

In the recent engagements the Greeks used against the Turks rifles which nearly thirty years ago were fired at Germans by the French, captured by the Germans, and by them sold to the Greeks. Many of these rifles have now been captured a second time. To whom will the Turks sell the out-of-date weapons? Their history makes them undesirable. They have a tendency to go off—to the other side.

A press dispatch from Quebec tells of new guns received at that point, and also a quantity of projectiles for twelve-pounder, quick-firing cannon. How the face of history would have been changed had a few modern, quick-firing guns been magically supplied to Montcalm just as the English forces reached the Plains of Abraham! No heroism of Wolfe's little army would have availed against such instruments of slaughter suddenly reinforcing the defenders of Quebec; and it might well be that "Here Montcalm died victorious" would be the legend read on that historic monument which now commemorates Wolfe.

When Edward Bass, who became the first Episcopal bishop of Massachusetts, took his master's degree at Harvard, his thesis was: "Will the blessed in the future world, after the last judgment, make use of articulate speech, and will that be Hebrew?" He decided both questions in the affirmative. Had he taken the negative he would have been equally safe since nobody could successfully contradict! The incident suggests that in a century and a half the world has moved little. Men are still tempted to dogmatize about the unknowable—but only here and there a theologian wastes himself in that way. The leaders of religious thought find scope for all their energy in setting forth the eternal verities, founded on the teachings of Christ, that relate to the formation of character for this life and for the life to come.

There are actually more employees of manufactories, male, female, and child labor included, in Germany, Great Britain and France than there are in the United States, though the population of the United States is 22,000,000 greater than the poplation of Germany, and 34,000,000 greater than the population of Great Britain or the population of France. There were returned by the last national census 5,091,000 persons as in "manufacturing and mechanical industries," in the United States, but included in this number were 150,000 seamstresses, 185,000 tailors, 60,000 milliners, 288,000 dressmakers and 105,000 butchers, and with these and sundry other similar deductions from the number of those engaged in manufacturing and mechanical industries it is found by the last report of the commissioner of labor that the actual number of persons engaged in manufactories in this country is 3,837,000. But though the number of employees is less than in other manufacturing countries, the United States stand at the head of them all in their products of manufactories, the product by hand, the volume of steam power used and the annual wages paid.

Japanese courtesy stands the latest test. An American riding a bicycle in Tokio accidentally knocked down a venerable man. The aged victim gathered himself together, deferentially approached the rider, and humbly, begged pardon for being in his "honorable way."

That California professor who thinks he has discovered a lost race in Lower California needn't feel puffed up at all by his discovery. Harvard and Yale discovered the same thing the other day at Poughkeepsie.

It is said an attempt will be made by the stockholders of a railroad to oust Russell Sage from the presidency. If they succeed we don't know what the poor man will do, as the vacancies in presidencies are growing fewer since the courts went into railroad business.

Senator Vest, in a tariff speech the other day remarked that the finest and most luscious cherries in the world are raised in Oregon and Washington. The Cherry Sisters of Iowa should promptly cancel the senator's season pass.

The tide is turned. "Many Spaniards Are Hanged" is the headline in a morning paper, and "their Cuban captors" are credited with being at the right end of the rope. This report shows the existence of "unwonted activity" in Cuba—if only the inevitable correction does not come that "for Spaniards read Texas mules."

The famous "English stroke" which Trainer Lehmann has been explaining for the benefit of the Harvard crew this year seems to be about as effective as an apoplectic stroke.

Attracted and convinced by the transforming effect of Christianity upon the stolid Orientals, a Chicago physician and his wife, tourists in western China, were recently converted and baptized at the Sinfu mission. There are people in America who insist that all missionary work is wasted effort—but they have not visited mission fields.

Lieut. Peary will sail for the north pole in a few days, and those who wish to contribute to his relief fund may do so at once.

STRIKERS ARE QUIET

BOTH SIDES WAITING FOR THE RESULT OF THE OPERATORS' MEET.

The Arbitrators Are Highly Elated Over the Prospects—The Meeting Will Be a Big One—All Operators Favor Arbitration—Failure in West Virginia—Coal Famine Not Likely.

Pittsburg, July 27.—The mining situation in this district is quiet and unchanged. Both sides are waiting for the result of the meeting of the operators. The arbitrators are highly elated at the prospects. All agree in saying that it will be the largest meeting of operators ever held in this district. All of the Western men are here and the Eastern people will arrive in the morning. Hotel lobbies are meeting places for the operators already here and the strike question is being well discussed. While a large number are not in favor of the old uniformity plan all are anxious to hear what new phase the peace commissioners have given the subject. Some are decidedly opposed to uniformity, but all are in favor of arbitration for settlement of the strike.

The board is busy completing the contract which is to be presented to the meeting at the court house. No one can at this time predict the outcome of the conference, which is expected to last two, and, perhaps, three days.

Failure in West Virginia.

Fairmont, W. Va., July 27. — The strike in this district, which President Ratchford predicted would be general, has proved a flat failure. After days of vigorous effort by Debs, Mahon, Coslet, Miller and Ratchford, culminating Sunday with mass meetings in many places, the miners at Fairmont remain unshaken. It was agreed that if there was no strike Monday efforts would cease and an appeal be made to the railroad men to stop hauling coal. A canvas of the situation shows the New England, Gaston, Montana and West Fairmont and Briar Hill Watson miners, with 1,000 men, are all working.

—o—

Aid for the Strikers.

Indianapolis, July 27.—Messrs. Conner and Terhune, the governor's special strike commissioners, made their report and Gov. Mount at once called a conference of state officials and leading citizens. The result was an appeal issued to the people of Indiana calling for aid for the striking coal miners. A committee has been appointed to receive subscriptions. The miners in many cases are destitute.

—o—

No Coal Famine Likely.

Pittsburg, July 27.—Judging by the present state of the local coal market a famine in fuel is not likely to occur, even though the strike should last several months longer. As a matter of fact, the market is overstocked and the demand has only slightly increased. At least 6,000,000 bushels of river coal are now lying in the upper pools, about 5,000,000 bushels having been consumed and shipped during the past three weeks. The railroads are bringing in large quantities every day from West Virginia and mines east of here.

—o—

No Disorder Among Strikers.

Pittsburg, July 27.—Miners' Officials Dolan and Warner have assured the sheriff that the strikers had no intention of marching on mines of the New York & Cleveland Gas Coal company. President Dolan said it was not intended to lose the sympathy of the public by any ill advised display of force. A body of 1,000 miners carrying heavy clubs marched to the Castle Shannon mines at Oak Station, where about forty men were working, and prevailed upon them to come out. There was no disorder.

—o—

Strikers Try to Seize a Train.

St. Louis, July 27.—One hundred of the marching strikers who are operating under the leadership of Bradley, a Coxeyite, tried to seize an Illinois Central freight train at Belleville, Ill. They were driven off by a sheriff's posse. When the freight slowed up at Belleville the band of strikers boarded it and declared their intention of riding to Lenzburg and Marissa mines, where they wished to inaugurate a strike. The crew refused to carry the strikers and halted the train at the depot. The railroad officials were communicated with and Sheriff Rhein and a posse immediately went to the scene and ejected the strikers. There was no disturbance.

LONG WEDDED LIFE.

Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone Celebrate Their Fifty-Eighth Anniversary.

London, July 27.—Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone have celebrated the fifty-eighth anniversary of their wedding. TURKS LEAVE THESSALY.

The Sultan Gives in to the Powers and the Strain Is Over.

Constantinople, Special—The ambassadors of the powers and Tewfik Pasha have agreed upon the frontier clause in the peace treaty. The reports that the Turkish forces have begun to evacuate Thessaly are confirmed.

In consequence of the recent raids by Albanians into Servian territory, the Servian foreign minister has informed the porte that if further incursions take place the Servian troops will be ordered to pursue the raiders into Ottoman territory, and that they are now held in readiness in Prokoulye, prepared to start for the frontier immediately. NO HELP FOR MRS. MAYBRICK.

The British Government Declines to Interfere in Her Case.

Washington, July 28. — The British government has again declined to interfere in the execution of the sentence of Mrs. Florence Maybrick, on the ground that there is no reason for a change of judgment in the matter. The last effort to secure at least an amelioration in the conditions of her confinement, was made by Ambassador Hay, who had some correspondence on the subject with the foreign office which he has transmitted to the state department. Lord Salisbury appears to have called for a report in the case from Secretary Ridley and the latter regretfully stated that he was unable, in view of the conclusion which had been reached by himself and his predecessor as to Mrs. Maybrick's guilt, to recommend that any exceptional treatment should be accorded her. Secretary Ridley also added that the medical report in Mrs. Maybrick's case was satisfactory, an evidence that the government does not credit any of the statements as to the insanity of the prisoner.

MURDERED WHILE DRUNK.

Three Miners Have a Spree That Results in Death for Two.

Greensburg, Pa., July 28.—Herminie, a little village at the terminus of the Hempfield branch, was the scene of what will, in all probability, prove a double murder. James Porter and John Hyde, two striking miners, were visiting Robert Rodgers, who is employed in the Ocean mines at Herminie. They had been drinking heavily and became very drunk. They lay in a stupor until about 3 o'clock in the morning, when Hyde awoke, and getting an old ax, which was in the room, proceeded to use it upon his two sleeping companions. He struck Rodgers on the head, fracturing his skull and rendering him insensible. He then attacked Porter, fracturing his skull, besides cutting a terrible gash in his neck. Hyde is in jail.

WILL SUCCEED BOWLER.

Office of Controller of the Treasury Offered to Mr. Tracewell.

Washington, July 28.—The president has decided to appoint Hon. Robert J. Tracewell of Indiana for the position of controller of the treasury. President McKinley, realizing the important questions coming up for decision in the controller's office, has been giving the matter of the selection of an appointee considerable attention, and finally concluded to give the place to Mr. Tracewell. The position has been vacant since the retirement of Controller Bowler on the 1st inst. The recent appointment of Hon. T. V. Powderly as commissioner general of immigration was signed by the president to-day. Mr. Powderly's nomination for that office failed of confirmation in the senate because of the opposition to him on the part of labor organizations.

GOLD IN MEXICO.

Big Fields of Gold in the State of Guerero.

City of Mexico, July 28.—It is predicted here that when the gold glacier mining is developed in the State of Guerero more gold will be taken out than in the Klondyke region. Some placer mining is being done with excellent results and water is abundant even in the dry season. One miner, an old Californian, reports taking out $34,600 in May and his average is $15,000 per month. The Indians in Sonoro who work in a crude way in the local gold placers, only operating when in pressing need of money, get large returns for very little labor, and an explorer who has recently been through the remotest regions states that Sonoro will equal California in its palmiest days as a gold producer.

SHOT IN A QUARREL.

Use Gentleness.

Be gentle in stimulating the kidneys, otherwise you will excite and weaken them. The happiest results follow the use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters to overcome renal inactivity. Malarial complaints, indigestion, rheumatism, neuralgia and biliousness succumb to the corrective influence of the Bitters.

A NERVOUS WOMAN.

Mrs. John Carpenter, Perry, Okla., says: "I took a bottle of Pe-ru-na and received great benefit from it. I could feel every dose as it took go to the ends of my fingers. I suffered greatly from nervous headache and my nervous system was completely run down. I could get no sleep, no rest, and the harsh winds and the sharp cries drove me almost to distraction. The air-liquified saw-mill down by the creek buzzed away with a vim that plainly told that the stream was swollen with the melted snows of the winter just past. The big grist-mill bumped and thumped in deep, melodious tones, although it were making an effort to drown the rasping, discordant music of its small but noisy neighbor.

The double doors of the store were wide open. Had all the other signs of spring been missing, the fact that they were open would have indicated to the knowing, if the snow had not melted from the Adirondack mountains, that it was high time they did, for those doors never stood open until the pale-faced fellow in his shirt sleeves, who had come to stay, had made sure that the winter was gone and he could with safety leave the side of the stove with which he had become inseparably identified, and migrate to the long, wooden bench on the porch to bask in the sunshine.

"Hoyr," he said at length, "time we're gittin' out ag'in. Spring has come."

With that he hobbled toward the door.

"Good, Gran'pap," said the Chronic Loafer, rolling off the counter and following.

Then the old Storekeeper opened both doors.

The old oak bench that had stood neglected through the long winter, excepting as a wind and warping rain, gave a joyous creak as it felt again on its broad and knife-hacked back the weight of the Patriarch and his friends, and kicked up its one short hickory leg with such vehemence as to cause the Storekeeper to throw out his hands as though the world had dropped from under him and he was clinging at a cloud for support.

"Mighty sousis!" he cried when he had recovered his composure and equilibrium.

"My, oh, my!" murmured the old man, his child-like face beaming with contentment as he sat back in the sun. "Isn't the old bench feel good ag'in, Sime? An' this ol' hickory warrin' his arms defiantly at the quartet on the bench. "Come on."

At this indisposition of these four to take up the gauntlet he had thrown down, the Loafer became still more brave and defiant.

"Hedgins!" he sneered. "You uns is afraid, eh?"

"Pawsible to be afraid of," snapped the Miller. "Simply because spring's come or it's ben comin' ever since I kin remember. I hain't a-goin' to waller 'round in a muddy road."

"HE WENT FLYIN'."

"Nur I, nuther," growled the Shoemaker.

"Well, I hantered yer, an' you uns's all skeert ter weeds, dead skeert," cried the Loafer, drawing on his coat and grinning triumph through his bushy whiskers.

"Come, come," said the Patriarch, beating his stick on the floor to call for attention to order. "'Fo' I was five years younger I'd take your banter; I'd drav your head inter the mud till you'd be afeared of showin' it at the store fo a year fer fear some un'd shovel yer inter the road. That's what I'd do. I hates blowin'. I do—I hates blowin'. Fur be it from me ter blow, particular as I was somethin' of a wrestler when I was young an.

"I bet I could 'a' th'owed you in less time 'an it takes me ter set down," the Loafer said, as he seated himself on the steps and got out his pipe.

"Th'owed me, eh!" retorted the old man. "You'd 'a' th'owed me, would you. Well, I'd a' liked to hev seen you a th'owin' me."

He shook his head at the bragart. "You didn't you know thet 'hen I was young I was the best wrastler in the valley; didn't you ever hear of the great wrastlin' me and Simon Cruller done up to Swamp Hollow schoolhouse?"

"Did Noar ast as empire?" asked the Loafer.

"What, does you mean be talkin' of Noar by sech like when I'm tellin' of wrastlin'? Tryin' to change the subjec', I s'pose, an' I ain't a-goin' ter hev it.

"Me an' Sime Cruller was buddies," he began at length. "Thet was till we both got our full growth an' was gittin' Bicky Stump. You uns never seen her, eh? Well, mebbe you never seen her gran'mother. She was one of them derberry bushes in the buryin'-groun', an' of you hain't seen it yer otter, fer then ye shirk yer duty as a citizen. Bicky, a woman she was. Pretty? Why, she was a model, she was—a perfect model. Hell! You uns should 'a' seen her a-settin' along th'oo' the fall an' I bet how I'd like ter hev one han'a while she'd hev the other, an' we'd go tramplin' along life's furrow together.

"The whole thing came to a jint at a spellin' bee up to Swampy Hollow schoolhouse," continued the Patriarch, unmindful of the interruption. "Becky Stump was there an' looked onusual pretty, fer it was cole outside an' the wind had made her face all red on the drive over from home. She was there, too, dressed in her store clothes.

"It didn't take me five minutes to see that Simon Cruller was tryin' to git Becky Stump; was trying to her that he was a-lookin' at me. Jealousness come Sime he corner an' begins blowin' me, but I don't put me, so I steps over, all a mistake; that he was a-lightning—spellin' in'. He was showin' alked loud like Becky his blowin'.

her," I sais, sais I, but a more ings you kin ow you is less time 'an it takes to tell it, an' if you step out-side I'll prove me words."

"You th'ow me!" he sais. Then he begin to laugh like he'd die at the merry idee.

"With that we went outside, follered by the rest of the boys. They was a quarter moon overhead, an' the girls put two candles in the schoolhouse winder, so with the snow we could see pretty well.

"At it we went. Boys, you otter 'a' ben there! You otter 'a' seen it! That was wrastlin'! When Sime an' me clinched I twisted my right hand 'round the waist with me right arm an' gits hold of the strap of his right boot with the forefinger of me left hand. He gits his left arm aroun' my neck an' down my back somehow, an' with his right hand tores my pantaloons an' me coat an' grabs me in the armhole of me waist-coat. Ove we goes, like two dogs, snarlin' an' snappin', while the boys in a ring aroun' us cheered an' the girls crowdin' the schoolhouse porch an' peeked an' screamed with fright. We t'wisted, we turned, we rolled over an' over till we looked like three 'n I run up to him, an' I'd 'a' bed him down, but he turned over.

"But I was quick. Mighty sousis, but I was quick! I kep' me feet an' gits one han' inter his waistcoat pocket an' one in him. Wherever he'd start ter git your man by the bootstrap or the pocket you kin be sure that's where I'd git your man by the bootstrap or the pocket, an' by the time I'd got me right 'a' bee here today. But I done it, an' I'm a fool fer not ter hev been sure. Sime Cruller rolled roun', even matched, an' agin I got sight of Becky Stump standin' on the porch, her hands gripped together, her face pale, her eyes almost poppin' outen her head, she was so excite' as hard, an' the wery sight of her urged me on to inhuman efforts. It seemed to have the same effect on Sime. The blood begin to run outen both me nose-holes an' yit I kep' at it. Me heart beat so hard it made me bones rattle. Sometimes I kep' at it. Sime was so hot it was fer me jest like wrastlin' with a stove, an' still we kep' at it. Then all of a sudden—it was two hours after bed fust clinched—everything seemed to swim—I couldn't keep me holt—I couldn't—I only knowed that I was still holdin' on to Sime—then I knowed nawthin'.

"When I came to I was layin' be the schoolhouse stove, an' Becky Stump was leanin' over me—whilst a big ball accrost me forehead. The other folks was standin' back like, fer they seemed to think that after sich an exhibition it was rettled an' they didn't want to disturb us.

"'Becky,' I sez, sez I, 'did I win?'

"'You did,' she sais. 'You both fainted at once, but you fainted on top.'

"'An' now, I spose you'll hev me,' I sais, for it seemed like there was something in her eyes thet kinder urged me on.

"She was quiet a pice, an' then she leans down an' whispers, 'If you think it wants to marry a fen.' No, sir, I'll merry no man I can't lick.'"

"Well?" retorted the old man.

"Did she ever merry?"

The Patriarch shook his head.

"Go look at the grave stun," he said, "an on it you'll see wrote: 'Ere lies Becky Stump. Her peaceful soul's at rest.'

KOSSUTH AS AN ORATOR.

Imposing in Appearance and the Finest Speaker of His Time.

In appearance Kossuth was taller than Americans had been led to suppose. His face had an expression of penetrating intellect, long, the forehead broad, but not excessively high, though a stylish gentleman would not so, and the chin narrow but square in its form. His hair was thin in front and dark brown. A fine beard, which was quite long, but not very thick and arranged with neatness and taste. His moustache was heavy and rather long. His eyes were very large and of a light blue. His complexion was pale. His manner of address was at once incomparably dignified and graceful. His posture and appear ance were those of a gentleman, free from their essential grace and dignity but from a sense of power they instantly recognized. He spoke as one as if with little preparation and with that peculiar freshness which belongs to extemporaneous address. He spoke the wonderful compactness and art of his argument were not felt until reflection came after the first impression freely, equally well with both arms. Nothing could be more beautiful in its way than the gesture of the pointed hand as it was raised to heaven when he spoke of Deity; nothing sweeter than the palm turned to the assembled host. Beyond a doubt he was the greatest of orators then living.

A Story of John Bright.

The Lord Primate of Ireland writes: I was told by a friend of the great orator Bright—a name never to be mentioned without respect—that one day he was speaking with an old friend of his school career. He had been at two schools, in one of which he had learned a great deal that was useful and necessary for his position in life, and in the other of which he was taught to love reading, and had been brought in contact with Milton's book, and with his friend say, "You seem to think far more of the second school than of the first, and I know you have a great deal that was useful in the one, and I should think not nearly so much in the other." Bright replied, "Well, I don't know anything about it. In the first school I learned what helped me no doubt to get on in the world, but in other I was brought into contact with the eternal spirit of liberty, and that was the thing that made me whatever I have been in life."

What He Meant.

"I am afraid, Mrs. Meadcroft," said the new lodger, "that I was under a misapprehension when I told you that I would as soon sit down to eve an hour bed in my room." A WRESTLING MATCH.

THE village had awakened from its long winter's sleep. It had shaken off its lethargy and stepped forth into the light and sunshine to take up again its life. It had cast off its heavy garments until the months should be deep, melodious snore, though it were making an effort to drown the rasping, discordant music of its small but noisy neighbor.

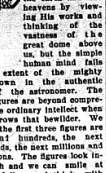
VASTNESS OF SPACE.

FIGURES WHICH MIND CAN HARDLY REALIZE.

Billion as a Measure of Time—The Pace at a Brisk Flight Travelled—The Immensity of the Sun—Counting a Billion.



F course, one can get a grand idea of the mightiness of the Creator of the earth and the heavens by viewing His works and thinking of the vastness of the universe, but the simple human mind fails to grasp the extent of the mighty grandeur shown in the authentic statements of the astronomer. The figures in the great astronomical expansion of the ordinary intellect when set down in rows that bewilder. We are told that the first three figures are units, tens and hundreds, the next three thousands, the next millions and the next billions. The figures look innocent enough and we can smile at hundreds of dollars and think with pleasurable feelings of thousands which melt into millions, but the brow clouds with care when we endeavor to get a comprehensive idea of the wonderfully overwhelming quantity set down as a billion. Now, what is instantaneous action? The mind is incapable of comprehending the almost infinitesimal divisions of time that are recorded upon some of the wonderful machines used by scientific searchers after the truth. Light travels at the rate of two hundred thousand miles a second, and is, therefore, instantaneous. The astronomers tell us that when a flash of lightning occurs upon our earth it is not visible on the moon until a second and a quarter afterward, and upon Neptune until eight minutes, or on Uranus for two hours, and upon Neptune until four hours and a quarter after its passage through the ether. Now away, far, far away, beyond Neptune, there are worlds upon worlds, with the strengthened universal suffrage, proclaimed the principle of national sovereignty and the principle of nationalities, realized in Italy, perhaps, Dante's dream of the settlement of the dream of Dante and of Machivelli, emancipated the petty nations of the Balkan peninsula, established the system of commercial liberty, sought every means which might bring together and unite peoples, and never ceased to preach the universal reform from socialism.

It is remembered in fine that he declared nations should be the arbiters of their own destinies, and that he tried to substitute for the ancient system of conquests the maxim, 'Right before might.' The ideas of this modern and revolutionary sovereign, this lover of peace. The ideas of this modern archy and the republic, were developed in an imperfect manner only, and for some time to come the world will be ruled, ended by being pitiless in his regard. But his work, though interrupted, had its grandeur. Future orders will perhaps accomplish what he vainly dreamed, and democracy may some day do that wherein a Caesar failed."

Senator Platt's Wife's Influence.

"Senator Platt of Connecticut," says the Washington Post, "has spruced up considerably since his wife married him. He used to be quite independent in the matter of dress. Trousers might be short or long, as the fancy struck him, or might be awry—it was all the same to Platt. Now all is changed. Platt is positively well dressed. Almost unintelligently to the capitol with smiling face, when heretofore he was the walking epitome of grevvous indigestion. He is as calm and barbered with daily care. His shoes are always shining, and on his head is the proper kind of hat to cast. Even the judge to accompany him to the theater, first negotiating with a small colored boy to catch a lot of grasshoppers, as there were none to be found on the stream, and it was impossible to catch the trout without 'hoppers.

"Yes, suh," replied the boy enthusiastically as he hastened off to earn the "two bits" promised.

When the tin box containing the 'hoppers was finally produced, only three were found, and they were almost as big as curlew.

Of course it was impossible to fish, and the sportsmen returned home disgusted, the enthusiastic host of the occasion having immediately gone under the collar. The first thing he did was to hunt up the colored boy, on whom he bought a drink.

"I thought I told you to get small 'hoppers?"

"So I did suh; 'deed I did."

"Does that look like it, you young rapscallion?" replied the angry fisherman, as he opened the box and exhibited the three grasshoppers.

The boy looked at the contents of the box with well-feigned amazement. "I done got the best of little dem I declare," he declared; "deed I did. 'Spect dem big fellers must habe jest gone to suk and eat all dem little ones up."—Sportsmen's Magazine.

The Yerkes Observatory Telescope.

President Harper and Prof. Barnard of the Chicago university have just tested the new telescope of the Yerkes observatory, William's Bay, Wis. Prof. Barnard says: "It is not possible to estimate what the telescope means to science. It will take weeks and possibly months for the operators to succeed-ly to solve the problems which the atmosphere may present. We have a right to expect great results. This instrument collects twenty-five per cent more light than the Lick telescope. This means a great deal, since it allows us to penetrate one-fourth farther into space. The telescope is exceptional for the use of lenses. The telescope is located at a practically ideal point. It is assured that something definite may be learned about the planet Mercury, and the question of their rotation periods. We expect much information about the moon, especially their physical conditions and period of rotation, as well as those of Saturn and his rings. We hope at this stage to show the world much that is new concerning the asteroids, the little worlds between Mars and Jupiter. The presence of astronomy will be enriched by its discovery of many of the secrets of the double stars. We are promising more accurate measurements of distances to the fixed stars.

SAID OF NAPOLEON III.

M. Saint-Amand, the eminent French historian, gives the following summing up of the character and achievements of Napoleon III., which carries a favorable estimate of that remarkable man:

"Whatever judgment posterity may pass upon the second emperor, it is an incontestible fact that for nearly 22 years he was the most conspicuous personage in all the world. No figure in the last half of the nineteenth century has so obtruded itself into history.

One of the most singular characters that has ever been examined is certainly that of the victor of Solferino, the vanquished of Sedan; more cosmopolitan than French, at once a dreamer and a man of action, by turns and even sometimes simultaneously democrat and autocrat, tormented now by the recollections of the past, and now by new ideas, the representative of Caesarism and at the end of his reign the champion, for popular interference, the counsellors men thoroughly antipodal their antecedents and their temperaments, his figure is strange and not always able to guess his own riddle, sometimes of the most supreme and impassionate despite an imperturbable indifference, energetic yet with an air of irresolution, loving himself to excess and yet while contemning it, kind to the humble and compassionate to the poor, very accessible to ideas, with the love of bettering the material and spiritual condition of the majority, victim of the faults of others more than of his own, and better than his destiny.

The republic will always reproach the second emperor with having made the coup d'etat and established, with the aid of frightful disasters which concluded his reign cannot be forgotten. A grudge is borne him for not remaining true to his Bordeaux program—"The empire is peace"—a truly wise formula, much further he would have permitted him to realise his dream of extinguishing pauperism.

But on the other hand people remember that he took part in every great idea of his all quarter of a century, that he broached all problems, raised all questions, that his eagles soared victoriously from the Tiber to Mexico, that he strengthened universal suffrage, proclaimed the principle of national sovereignty and the principle of nationalities, realized in Italy, perhaps, Dante's dream of the settlement of the dream of Dante and of Machivelli, emancipated the petty nations of the Balkan peninsula, established the system of commercial liberty, sought every means which might bring together and unite peoples, and never ceased to preach the universal reform from socialism.

It is remembered in fine that he declared nations should be the arbiters of their own destinies, and that he tried to substitute for the ancient system of conquests the maxim, 'Right before might.' The ideas of this modern and revolutionary sovereign, this lover of peace. The ideas of this modarchy and the republic, were developed in an imperfect manner only, and for some time to come the world will be ruled, ended by being pitiless in his regard. But his work, though interrupted, had its grandeur. Future orders will perhaps accomplish what he vainly dreamed, and democracy may some day do that wherein a Caesar failed."

Another Flat Story.

When a certain judge was over at the Springs last season he was approached by several merchants there persistently dwelt upon the number of trout that a man could catch in a certain stream, at a spot only known to him. He at last succeeded in inducing the judge to accompany him to the stream, and, first negotiating with a small colored boy to catch a lot of grasshoppers, as there were none to be found on the banks of the stream, and it was impossible to catch the trout without 'hoppers.

"Get small 'hoppers," said the merchant to the little negro.

"Yes, suh," replied the boy enthusiastically as he hastened off to earn the "two bits" promised.

When the tin box containing the 'hoppers was finally produced, only three were found, and they were almost as big as curlew.

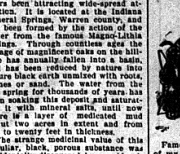
MIRACULOUS MUD.

FOUND AT THE INDIANA MINERAL SPRINGS, IND.

Cures Rheumatism, Kidney, Bladder, Blood, Skin and Nervous Diseases.

Big Hotel Has Been Erected and People Are Journeying There From All Over the Country to Bathe in the Mud.



A deposit of most remarkable mud discovered in Indiana, has of recent years been formed by the action of the water from the famous Magnet-Litahia springs. Through countless ages the foliage of magnificent oaks on the hillsides has annually fallen into a basin, and has been reduced by nature into a pure black earth unmixed with roots, stones or sand. The water from the big spring for thousands of years has been impregnating this deposit, and saturating it with mineral salts, until now there is a layer of medicated mud about two acres in extent and from ten to twenty feet in thickness.

This deposit contains all of this peculiar, black, porous substance was accidentally discovered by an old soldier, Sam Story, who had brought rheumatism home from the war and suffered with it for years. He was attempting to dig a drainage ditch through the mud deposit, and after digging in this useless experiment for a week or more, was astonished to find that he was entirely free from pain, and that his rheumatism had been cured of his rheumatism.

The fame of the mud began to spread and afflicted congregated at the Springs in search of health. The method of using the mud was at first very primitive. The patient would bring down in the deposit where nature had laid it, but since then improvements have been made, a beautiful hotel erected, and the mud bath developed into a luxurious experience. The accompanying cut shows how it's done.

Parents who desire to place their daughters in a school where they will receive the best of care and attention should write to the Mother Superior for further information.

Coleman on the Cub.

Mr. R. Lindsay Coleman, ex-president of the National League of Wheelmen, vice president of the Western Wheel Worksr in talking about the bicycles, says: "The cut in the price of bicycles is a decided surprise. We expressed the opinion that the reduction in prices would fully realize their error in endeavoring to cheapen the quality of their product, and that the prices we had to pay would be lower, but not the standard price for other high grade wheels. The reduction in prices by the Western Wheel Works is, that we not only guarantee our wheels as equaling two our prices as well, and the purchaser has the satisfaction of the further satisfaction of knowing that his neighbor who purchased a wheel in July paid the same price as he did."

Mr. Chipperfield is the founder of the Illinois State's Attorney Association, the object is the foundation of an association through which the methods of criminal litigation may be simplified, perfected and made uniform throughout the state. Joel Tucker, sheriff of Dodge county, arrived in the city Wednesday morning for the purpose of taking Frederick Halverson back to Kasson. Halverson was arrested by Deputy Cullen at Pequot on Monday, the charge against him being incest. When the officer attempted to arrest him he attempted to escape by taking to the woods but was finally captured after a struggle. Halverson told Deputy Cullen that he was the man wanted but that the charges were false and had been trumped up against him on account of a neighborhood quarrel and that he had been in hiding at Pequot for ten days. Sheriff Tucker took the prisoner with him on the noon passenger on Wednesday.

It is the intention of the street car company to close up their business and take up the track not later than August 10th so the Dispatch is informed by Supt. F. S. Parker. The reason for this action is because the business does not pay and future prospects for the business is not flattering. When the announcement was made public a number of the business men called a meeting to see if some arrangements could not be made whereby Mr. Parker would continue the business but nothing definite was arranged and a further meeting will be held the first of next week. In the event that the line is abandoned the Brainerd & Northern Minnesota will run its trains into the city from the Northern Pacific depot.

Sorry that He Spoke.

Chas. G. Essener was arrested by Deputy Cullen at the Capiconia Club near Pine River, on Wednesday on the charge of having killed deer out of season. Mr. Essener appeared in court yesterday morning and entered a plea of not guilty and the case was continued until August 28th, upon payment of $10 for costs and the deposit of a bond for $100 for his appearance at that time. The arrest of the gentleman was brought upon himself and if he has gotten into trouble he is solely to blame for it. The deer two fawns, were brought into camp at the club and the Philadelphia sportsman explained to the guests the exciting details of the hunt not forgetting to impress upon their minds the fact that he was the man who brought the game down with his unerring aim. As luck would have it the matter got out and the arrest followed. Now, Mr. Essener claims he did not kill the deer but that the guide is the guilty party and that he, Essener, was allowed to claim the glory of of the chase and that he is sorry that he spoke. Undoubtedly in future the gentlemen will not claim the game of another hunter, especially out of season. Mr. Essener departed for Philadelphia this noon where he owns a hotel and several restaurants but will return in time for the trial and spend some weeks here in hunting during the fall.

Summer School Notes.

This is the third week of the school with an enrollment of 70, the actual attendance being over 60 and several having been obliged to withdraw.

As the days go by the interest grows and the value of the school becomes more apparent. The work in history has been in the study of the science of history rather than an accumulation of facts. Some of the questions before the class were these: Was Texas justifiable in seceding from Mexico and seeking admission to the United States? Was the Southern states right or wrong in seceding from the Union? If Texas was right why not the south right? If the south was wrong on what grounds could the colonies be justified in rebelling against England?

These questions adroitly put by the instructor, Dr. Magnusson, provoked much discussion and led to an investigation as to the origin of government and the right of kings, presidents or congress to rule. It was decided that the right of government is Divine and does not rest in majorities or individuals and that any government is better than anarchy or mobocracy. On Wednesday evening the teachers were addressed by Rev. Geo. Gallagher on "Heroes and Heroines" which was elegant and inspiring and the speaker held the attention of the large audience of cultured and refined people with his glowing pictures.

Members of district school boards often say "We do not need a teacher of education so much as we need a teacher who can maintain order and has a good ability to govern." This is hardly the truth of the matter. What is really needed is teachers with the ability to govern and a mind broadened and skilled by a good education. Neither governing alone will make a good teacher, both are needed and our summer school is greatly aiding to produce such teachers.

St. Cloud Suicide.

The Mississippi Bridge.

On Tuesday the bids for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi river were opened at the auditor's office but no award was made. Several bridge firms were represented and the bids ranged from $15,000 to $20,000, some of the companies putting in as high as six different bids for different kinds of structures. The meeting adjourned until Tuesday at which time the commissioners will have the report from an expert engineer who has taken the bids, plans and specifications to St. Paul for examination.

Fresh From the Gold Fields.

Henry Proteau, fourteen years ago a resident of Brainerd, arrived in the city this morning on a visit to his brother Theo Proteau, and to-morrow the two leave for Montreal, Canada, to visit their former home. Mr. Proteau has been in the west and northwest ever since he left Brainerd, and among many others he went to Alaska two years ago. In company with two others they began prospecting, and struck it rich, and the three men now own five claims located in the Klondyke district that are worth many thousands of dollars. Mr. Proteau in conversation this morning said that he would not advise anyone to go into that region unless they are thoroughly prepared to experience hardship and privation, and with the expectation of laboring hard, and also that it was necessary for a man to be provided with provisions, etc., to last for some time, as everything in the way of eatables commanded a very fancy figure in that region. Mr. Proteau said that his company were paying laborers $1.50 per hour or $15 for a day's labor of ten hours. He left Dawson City on June 15th, and after taking his brother, who is a cripple, to Canada, and visiting with his relatives for a few days, he will return to the mining regions. He says the reports from the gold fields are overdrawn in some instances, but in the main are correct, and that while many who go there make a strike, a big majority are satisfied to work at day's wages at the prices offered, and apparently there is work for all.

Mr. Proteau gave his brother $1000 this morning with which to get ready to go to Canada, and assured him that when they reached their destination he would be supplied with all the money he wanted. The five mining claims are worth $200,000 each, and the three gentlemen can take that amount for them at any time they wish.

Perfection in Cake-Making.

Housekeepers frequently wonder why it is that they cannot make biscuit and cake that are light and palatable and that taste as delicious as the biscuit and cake made by their mothers and grandmothers, the delightful memory of which even to this day creates a sensation of pleasure to the palate. The trouble arises from the highly adulterated state of the materials they have to work with, particularly the cream-of tartar and soda used to raise or lessen the food. Cream-of-tartar and soda that are now procurable for domestic purposes contain large quantities of lime, earth, alum and other adulterants, frequently from five to twenty-five per cent, and consequently vary so much in strength that no person can tell the exact quantity to use, or properly combine them, to insure perfect results. From using too much or too little, or because of the adulterants in them, butter, salt, yellow, or heavy biscuits or cakes are frequently made. These adulterants are also injurious to health.

All this trouble may be avoided by the use of the popular Royal Baking Powder. Where this preparation is employed in the place of cream-of-tartar and soda, its perfect leavening power always insures light, flaky digestible biscuit, cakes and pastry that are perfectly wholesome and free from the impurities invariably present when the old raising preparations are employed.

The Royal Baking Powder, we are informed by the most reliable scientists, is perfectly pure, being made from highly refined ingredients, carefully tested, and so exactly proportioned and combined that it never fails to produce the best and uniform results. An additional advantage in its employment comes from the fact thatbread or other food made with it may be eaten while hot without fear of indigestion or any unpleasant results, while being equally sweet, moist and grateful to the palate when cold.

Blueberry War Celebrated.

On Monday evening at St. Paul the survivors of what is known as the "Blueberry War" celebrated that event at the Commercial rooms in quite and elaborate manner. The Pioneer Press gives an account of the bloodless affair as follows:

In July, 1872, Brainerd was the headquarters for the Northern Pacific railroad construction crews and its then terminus was but a short distance from the end of town. July 23, 1872, the people of the town, or the railroad men and the toughs with which the town was overrun, hanged two Indians or half-breeds who had murdered a white girl in the neighborhood. The Indians gathered in the town or its neighborhood in a threatening and angry mood and the people became frightened to the extent that they left town. On the 24th John Gurley, then sheriff of Crow Wing county, a man of cool head and good courage, who had followed the building of the Union Pacific and the Northern Pacific roads as sheriff or peace officer in the different towns, telegraphed Gov. Austin as to the situation and asked that troops be sent to his assistance. This telegram was received by the governor at about 10 o'clock in the morning and between midnight and 3 or 4 o'clock of the morning of July 25, the members of the three St. Paul companies were notified to assemble at their armory at 7 o'clock in the morning to go to Brainerd to suppress an Indian outbreak. Although the memory of the blood outbreak of ten years previously was fresh in the memory of all, as the Indians at this time states, not a man that was notified failed to respond and at 8:30 o'clock in the morning, under the command of about one hundred men started from St. Paul amid all the demonstrations attendant upon the departure of troops for the front. The troops and the people regarded it as a serious piece of business. Fortunately no blood was shed although the demonstrations of a military force so promptly sent to the scene of the threatened trouble was regarded and stated at the time to have had a very salutary effect upon the Indians of the lawless elements of the frontier where had gathered all classes of those who followed up the building of the great transcontinental roads of those days. The expedition was under the command of Capt. [illegible] (since colonel) Charles S. Bunker and the governor commissioned the late Judge A. M. Edgerton, of Winona, to accompany it to treat with the Indians.

Owing to its being the height of the blueberry season and to some incidents of the campaign it has ever since been known as the "Blueberry War."

ELASTIC STARCH has been before the people of the United States for 16 years, and is without doubt, if a greater success than ever before in the Nineteenth Century. Last year its sales reached the unprecedented number of twenty million packages. Its prepared upon scientific principles by men who have had many years experience in fancy laundering. It makes ironing easy, restores the original gloss to the clothes and whiteness, and imparts to linen a beautiful and lasting finish. It is the only starch manufactured that is perfectly harmless, containing neither arsenic, alum or any other substance injurious to linen, and can be used even for a baby powder.

LINCOLN'S HUMOR IN LAW.

It Was Only Equaled by His Conscientiousness In Taking Cases.

Even as early as 1852 Lincoln had acquired a reputation for story telling. When not busy during the session of the court, he was "habitually whispering stories to his neighbors, frequently to the annoyance of Judge Davis, who presided over the Eighth circuit." If Lincoln persisted too long, the judge would rap on the chair and exclaim: "Come, come, Mr. Lincoln, I can't stand this! There is no use trying to carry on two courts. I must adjourn mine or yours, and I think you will have to be the one." As soon as the group had scattered the judge would call one of the men to him and ask, "What was that Lincoln was telling?"

In his law practice Lincoln seems to have been singularly conscientious, his first effort being to try to arrange matters so as to avoid litigation. Nor would he assume a case that he felt was not founded upon right and justice.

"We will not take your case," he said to a man who had shown that by a legal technicality he could win property valued at $600. "You must remember that some things legally right are not morally right. We will not take your case, but will give you a little advice, for which we will charge you nothing. You seem to be a sprightly, energetic man. We would advise you to try your hand at making $600 in some other way."

One of the most interesting anecdotes is the one quoted from Joe Jefferson's autobiography. Jefferson and his father were playing at Springfield during the session of the legislature, and, as there was no theater in the town, had gone to the expense of building one. Hardly had this been done when a religious revival broke out. The church people condemned the theater and prevailed upon the authorities to impose a license which was practically prohibition.

"In the midst of our trouble," says Jefferson, "a young lawyer called on the managers. He had heard of the injustice and offered, if they would place the matter in his hands, to have the license taken off, declaring that he only desired to see fair play, and he would accept no fee whether he failed or succeeded. The young lawyer began his harangue. He handled the subject with tact, skill and humor, tracing the history of the drama from the time when Thespis acted in a cart to the stage of today. He illustrated his speech with a number of anecdotes and kept the council in a roar of laughter. His good humor prevailed, and the exorbitant tax was taken off. The young lawyer was Lincoln."—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

His Language.

A statement made in good faith, but difficult to accept, was recently offered by a congregation by a country pastor. He had been holding forth on the advantages of plain speaking.

"Why, brethren, [illegible] using his hand down [illegible] with great vigor, "[illegible] of all those long [illegible] words? Why, I'll bet [illegible] the most of them [illegible] and he didn't [illegible] falutin talk. He [illegible] plain, simple [illegible] ren." You [illegible]
