FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1909.

Just think of it, the gold output of Mexico last year was $7,000,000. In the land of 50-cent-dollars, too.

It is probably not generally known that liquor enters largely into the manufacture of molasses powder, but of course that is not what makes it so popular with the sportsmen.

No wonder the Minnesota schools will have to close a month or two earlier than usual on account of a lack of funds. The janitors of the buildings receive larger pay than the teachers.

The Detroit Record is one of the brightest country magazines that reaches our table and the people of Becker county appreciate the enterprise of its publisher by giving it a liberal patronage.

Less than twelve months ago Chilkoot was a lonely mountain rising its peak in the Arctic wilderness of Alaska as a barrier to further progress of human beings. Today it is reached by an overhead trolley line. Thousands of people have crossed its summit and many of them will never return to tell the tale of privation and suffering.

The warmest political fight in Northern Minnesota will be waged at Moorhead at the March election over the choice of mayor. Editor Miesler says the question is whether "grafters" and "big mitt" men shall be allowed to fleece the treasury and things and crooks play their trade as in the past and the payers of "ribbons" be protected, or shall the city be run on business principles and the laws be upheld.

Tax average reader is probably not aware that the consumption of tin plates in the United States for the past year reached the enormous amount of 523,143,824 pounds, or over 276,071 tons, and that of this amount all but about 82,000 tons is a domestic production. No industry in the country has had such a marked and rapid growth as the manufacture of tin plates, each year showing an increase in the number of mills over its predecessor and also in the total output, and also a pleasing fact that the manufactured articles has been cheapened in price to the retail dealer as the industry has increased in volume.
