The Cuban are at present too much given to the removal of heads to be safe owners of plantations, or of any other else. That is a sad fact which we ought to have thought of.

Political troubles of evil are not fairly met by the Washington Star when it represents one congressman as going to another. "Don't you know that those of these islands in the Pacific Ocean are the work of coral insects?" That was what that is with our taking possession of them? "My friend, you are wholly dependent on the freight that makes a steamer's shipping service with a cargo of oil, and your power is in the neighborhood."

Lutcher says that when one is in a good-looking nurse is preferred to one that is not good looking. That is the solemn truth; and it is equally true when one is ill. Let us hope that the subscribers of the hospitals will bear this important fact in mind and cease their discrimination against girls who, wanting work as nurses, are refused because of the malformation of being pretty or good-looking. There is not a patient anywhere who wouldn't yearn for their soothing and bright presence, and it is wrong to make them suffer for that which is their own fault.

No wonder the modern "husky man" sometimes drives almost to distraction in his vain quest for an original joke, and that the ancient device of "word stories" has become popular in England. In the latest issue of the magazine, a leading article contains a list of colorful pictures, very much in the style of those today. They represent various animals dressed up as human beings, which is now a popular form of humor. This is a cat dressed as a fashionable lady in a hand-mirror from a rat dressed as a sailor, and a cat harrier in a hand-mirror from a rat dressed as a sailor. These things were current in ancient times. We are not far from true progress, Englishmen who have not a wit. No one is so far from true progress, Englishmen who have not a wit. No one is so far from true progress, Englishmen who have not a wit.

The difference between unlettered and uneducated is usually appreciated by some of the people in India, despite the widespread discontent that prevails there whenever the British government interferes with any half-dressed custom. A leading paper, the Pioneer of Lucknow, writes by saying: "We are not far from true progress, Englishmen who have not a wit. No one is so far from true progress, Englishmen who have not a wit. No one is so far from true progress, Englishmen who have not a wit."

REDUCING THE NAVY.

Department of the Navy has announced a considerable reduction in the present.

Washington, Aug. 31.—It is not the intention of the navy department to make any considerable reduction in the number of ships on the commission list at this time. Aside from the questionable proposition of reducing the effectiveness of our naval strength to advance a satisfactory outcome of the peace commission's work at Paris, the department is desirous of using the time now available to make many necessary changes in the ships so that they will be gathered at the navy yards and put in the most thorough repair, one after the other being docked, cleaned and painted so that in the course of a few weeks it is hoped to have the navy in even better shape than it was at the outbreak of the war.

GRATIFYING REPORTS.
Yellow Fever Being Successfully Checked at Key West.

Washington, Aug. 31.—Gratifying reports have been received by Surgeon General Wyman from the points where yellow fever has recently made its appearance, and the hope of that official is that it will be stamped out without difficulty. State Health Commissioner Porter advises that there is an excellent case at Key West, where the fever was reported on the 22nd inst. It is now being treated by the health officer, and it is believed that it will be stamped out in a few days.

CHAPTER VIII

Early in the morning after Miss Hetherington's visit, Marjorie prepared to set out for the castle. She would gladly have made some excuse to stay at home, but Mr. Lorrain would not hear of it, and at his direct request she consented.

"She is your best friend," said the minister, and you must not offend her.

"Very well, I will go," answered Marjorie, but I shall never make any more of it than I can get out of it."

"Why not, Marjorie?"

"The castle is eerie enough at daylight, but at night it is dreadful, and Miss Hetherington creeps about like a ghost. I do not sleep out in the air."

"At a quarter before nine she started, for she had three miles to walk. She was asked to linger on the road, which was through pleasant country pastures and among green fields. The morning was bright and clear, though there were clouds to suggest the approach of coming rain. Passing up through the village, the gate she had come to the previous day, she saw young Sutherland standing at the gate of the weaver's cottage.

"Good morning, Marjorie. Where are you going to do today?"

"I'm going to the castle," she replied.

"Are you going to walk?"

"Yes."

"Then may I come with you a piece of the road?"

"Not today, Johnnie," she said nervously. "I'm late, and must hurry."

The young man sighed, but did not press his request. They walked and eyed at the meeting. Marjorie turned quickly away.

She followed the downward dingle till she came to the cross-roads where she had alighted from the wagonette. Close to the cross-roads she saw a man sitting on a bench, and she was about to stop over, when she heard a voice behind her. Turning quickly she saw to her astonishment the French teacher from Dumfries.

"He was clad in a dark walking-suit, with broad shoulders, and a handsome, as she had seen in the window, with the pale blue smiling and his bright blue eyes fixed rapidly upon her.

"Monsieur Cassandre!" she cried in astonishment.

"Yes, it is I," he replied in his soft, musical voice. "I have walked from the town, and was going down to see you."

"So you are!" she echoed.

"Yes, mademoiselle, and the good man your guardian. You have spoken of him so often that I longed to make his acquaintance, and, having two little days before me, I came here, my dear child."

"Marjorie did not know what to say, she shuddered and blushing in such obvious embarrassment that the Frenchman seems to her relief.

"Do not let me detain you, if you have an appointment, or say perhaps you will permit me to walk a little way in your company?"

And before she quite understood what was taking place, he had lightly looped the sash and was handling her over with great politeness. They strolled along the four-arched bridge to the castle.

"I am going up to the castle," she said, and I shall not be back till the afternoon. Do not let me take you out of your way."

The Frenchman smiled and shrugged his shoulders.

"Oh! one way is to me as good as another," he exclaimed.

"But you said you wished to see Mr. Lorrain?"

"Precisely; but I prefer your company, my child."

"He is at home now, and will be glad of one to talk to."

"I see you want to get rid of me, little one," said Cassandre, merrily. "If I go with you, promise to return soon. Remember, I shall not depart until you do return."

"Yes, I will promise," answered Marjorie. "I would rather you did not come any farther."

"And wherefore, my child? Is my company so disagreeable?"

"No, monsieur, but her visit to this place is very late, and if they saw me walking with a strange gentleman it would be all over the parish before I would hear of it, and I should get no peace."

"And as she spoke she looked round nervously, as if dreading an eyewitness."

"Miss Hetherington! Pray, who is she?"

"The lady I am going to see. She has been everywhere—nothing but looks and looks."

"But surely there is nothing to be afraid of?"

"Yes, but very clever," answered Marjorie. "I like her very much, Miss Hetherington."

"Yes, Miss Hetherington," answered Marjorie, who was incapable of falsehood.

"You are sure of that?"

"Quite sure."

"You are a wise lass!" cried the lady, rising to her feet. "Men are little cats, and safer at a distance. Look at that picture, she continued, and pointing to a portrait over the mantelpiece. "That is your brother, Mr. Hugh."

"Yes, my brother, Mr. Hugh," said Marjorie, looking at the picture with a shudder.

"That is your brother, Mr. Hugh," said Marjorie, looking at the picture with a shudder.

"Well, I am not," she said, and she looked at him with a steady gaze.

"You are not?"

"No, I am not."
