Innocent & Wicked, Possibilities.
BRAINERS. MINNESOTA.

Women admit a brave man and love an audacious one.

Some men marry males and some are married by wives.

Usually the more a man is wraped up in himself, the colder he is.

The man who looks upon the wife when it is red may feel his fate.

Self-praise is the church steeple—the higher it goes the narrower it becomes.

She had her faults, but she never went through Adams' post-office while he was asleep.

Our national symbol is still an eagle, not a lion. Our chief mission is to develop, not to devour.

A careful informant discloses the fact that not a feather is missing from the successful American eagle's tail.

It seems that the barrier which keeps our rich voters from enjoying life like our Spanish prisoners is "Red Tape."

Governor General Merritt of the Philippines seems to be just the sort of governor the people over there have wanted all the time.

A correspondent inquires: "How much territory would be available for a coal station in the Philippines?" About 11,000 square miles.

The world at large is apt as to whether a higher education is really an incentive for good, even many who see the real answer to that in his life.

The intense interest in the publication of Merritt's memoirs is a proof that they contain information of a startling kind, or as the result of well directed advertising.

The best characterization made of American soldiers in this war was that of "fighting half-brains," when he said, "So long as the enemy showed us his flag they fought like American soldiers; but when the flag came down, they were as gentle and as timid as American women." That deserves to become classic, partly because it is eloquent, and partly because it is true.

When we think of all the beauty which human eyes seldom behold, but we only often enough to know of its existence, we get a new thought. Many a brilliant sunset occurs in the far corners where no human foot has penetrated. Many a striking effect of light and shade, or a glow of gem-tinted twilight, or strange picturesque formation of mist and cloud, occurs in the remote arctic regions, if we had returned explorers tell us in true. There are many forms of beauty, more than our earth which we, its inhabitants, are almost unaware and which only the birds and beasts see.

The dedication of a monument to Francis Scott Key in his native city was chiefly a tribute to the man who wrote the "Star-Spangled Banner." The memorial lecture here, however, showed a spirit worthy of the state of our nation's radiant victory; and that it is there ready to be applied. The new party spirit; stop the corruptions of party election; legislate not for the next election, but for the next century. Few statesmen are poets and perhaps it is well that prose-writing lawmakers are in the large majority. Key, however, showed a spirit worthy of the high statesmanship when he wrote the sentence quoted, which are almost sufficient to entitle him to be called an early reformer of the republic.

Details during of the railroad construction work done in the United States during the first half of 1897, collected by the Railroad Gazette, show that there has been added during that period to the country's existing mileage some 2,002 miles of new road. The inference drawn from these figures in connection with other work of the same character now in progress, or contemplated is that the railroad building for the year will be equal to or not greater than that of any of the last three years. The same paper for the coming six months the mileage for the year will be about 2,185 miles, and this will be larger by some 75 miles than that of last year, and will exceed that of any year since 1894. But experience has shown that, as a rule, more railroad is built in the second half of the year than in the first, so that it is not unreasonable to suppose that the summary for 1898 will show more than 2,500 miles built.

Thaddeus Stevens was once engaged in a case before a judge noted for his ignorance of the law. During the trial the judge gave a ruling which increased the fine, when, with both hands trembling and his lips fastened, he began to read the up his papers. The judge then "stand" asked the pompous judge, "that you are trying to show contempt for this court?" "No, sir," returned Stevens; "I am not trying to show contempt for this court. On the contrary, I am doing my best to conceal it."

BROWN, For Justice, JOHN A. LOVELLY, For State Commissioner of Public Lands, W. M. FLETCHER, For State Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, J. A. FLETCHER.

PHIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1898.

FERRIS, FLETCHER—The winners.

The city convention will be held next Wednesday.

And now the city convention is occupying the attention of aspirants for office.

FETTERION of independent candidates for office have been more numerous than ever this week.

Next Friday the populace will hold their legislative convention for the district at Little Falls.

Edwards will be elected governor of Minnesota by a larger majority than ever given any other republican candidate for the same position.

Why not do away with conventions and make the whole business independent for the convention doesn't seem to settle the matter only with the fortunate ones.

One of the hardest workers for the success of the republican ticket today is S. H. YANDELL of Wisconsin. The Captain's defeat for the gubernatorial nomination did not sour him as many predicted. He is made of two good material for that.

Task MENARD is drawing large crowds of listeners to the meetings he is holding in various parts of the district. The people of the Sixth district will not fail to return him to congress. He has made a record that is irreproachable.

The way to show your appreciation of the way President McKinley conducted the war with Spain is to return the republican candidate to congress for without their assistance it will be as far advanced by the government at Washington.

There is no doubt in the mind of anyone who has taken the trouble to look the matter up but that the delegates supporting Wm. Fuller for senator from Morrison county to the legislative convention were fairly elected and while the result was a crushing defeat, personally, to C. B. Buckman, he has been in politics long enough to take the defeat in a more dignified manner. For many years Mr. Buckman represented this district in the Minnesota legislature and he has received many other favors at the hands of the Republican party. He has been defeated for a contested nomination and he should take off his coat and work for the ticket in the same manner that he would have desired the opposition to do had he been successful.

The legislative ticket for the district placed in the field by the Republican convention last week is a strong one and one that commends itself to the people of this county.

Both Messrs. Ferris and Fletchinger are gentlemen well known to nearly every, if not every, taxpayer in the district, and the people can well afford to trust the needs of the county in their hands. Both gentlemen have had legislative experience and are well equipped to give all matters pertaining to the positions the best of attention, and the records of both during the term that they have represented this county in St. Paul will bear out in the statement that no better selection could have been made.

W. M. Fuller, the nominee for the senate, has represented the district one term in that body and he has always found working in harmony with the members of the lower branch in all matters pertaining to the interests of the constituents. We predict that the ticket will be elected by a good majority in November.

Defeated in a Fair Fight.

The fight between Editor Fuller and C. Buckman for senatorial nomination in the district comprising the counties of Crow Wing, Itasca, and Lake of the Superior, was settled yesterday, and Fuller was nominated in the convention.

He defeated Mr. Buckman in a square fight in the Republican primaries, and he would have received the support of every loyal Republican. Senator Fuller's running mate in the ticket are A. F. Ferris and W. A. Fletchinger of Crow Wing county, and the whole ticket will be elected—Wadeau County Pioneer.

Religion in the Navy.

For one hundred years the chaplains of the navy have been working in their little field, striving against difficulties unknown in religious work ashore, and doing a world of good along a line that seldom is mentioned in dispatches or paraded in publications. Today there are but twenty-three of these men, truly few enough to fight the forces of evil in the service, and it may prove of interest to know a little of their history, their daily life, and the labors they perform.

At the beginning of the century chaplains were required to teach young officers in addition to their religious duties. A chaplain was part schoolmaster, part messenger, part preacher, and in some ships a sort of general handy man. As the century grew older and the navy expanded, the corps gradually settled into its present condition—that of ministering to the spiritual needs of the officers and men.

To-day the chaplain is an officer, nominated by the President of the United States, and commissioned by and with the advice of the Senate. Candidates are expressly chosen by the Secretary of the navy, who makes inquiries into the fitness of each applicant for the position. There are always numerous applications on file in the Navy Department of each vacancy from ministers of all denominations, and the bill of chaplain is considered so desirable that senators are often urged by friends to press the claims of some certain candidate.

From "The Church in Navy," in Demorest's Magazine for September.

To the Voters of the Second Congressional District.

HELEN Miss Hetherington left the Parsonage's room that afternoon, she felt that she had been deceived by the sudden coming of Mrs. Marjorie...

She had heard from Mr. Lorraine that the lady was indisposed, but she had not spoken of the matter to any one, and she was therefore utterly unprepared for what she saw.

"She's waiting on you," said Miss Marjorie, "she's waiting on you all day."

"You are not well, Miss Hetherington," said Mrs. Marjorie, "I am sorry to hear that you are not well, and I am sorry to hear that you are not well."

she was to go to her sister's house in Edinburgh for a time. The young girl was reluctant to leave her home, but did not dream of disobeying any wish of her foster-father.

By early the next afternoon all was done, and as Marjorie was to start early on the morrow, she, in obedience to Mr. Lorraine's wish, put on her bonnet and went up to the Castle with Miss Hetherington's good-byes.

She was admitted by Miss, conducted along the library passage, and led of once toward Miss Hetherington's bedroom.

"She's waiting on you," said Miss Marjorie, "she's waiting on you all day."

When all factors are taken into account, it can easily be seen that the possible effect of the food on the milk must be referred to a very small proportion indeed, writes P. McCondon in Agricultural Gazette, England.

THE BATTLE OF MANILA.

Rev. G. W. Gallagher and family have received several interesting letters from Manila, written by their son, George. This week we publish one describing the events of the battle:

MANILA, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, August 21st, 1898.

DEAR FATHER: I suppose you would like to hear something about the battle of Manila. We had a hard time landing from the City of Para. We were transferred to a small steamer and then into boats. It was pouring down rain. Three days after we landed, we went into the trenches. As my luck would have it, I got the post farthest out beyond our lines. I lay down in the middle of the road with mud half way up to my knees, the rain pouring down in torrents. It was pitch dark when I took my position. How strange I felt there! I was only a hundred yards from the Spanish lines. I could hear them moving and talking. On the 19th of August the battle occurred. We got up at half past 4 o'clock in the morning, had breakfast at five o'clock, and started forward about half past seven, got into the advanced trenches at half past eight o'clock, and stayed there until the bombardment commenced. The roads were two feet thick with mud. We had to lay down in the mud. At ten o'clock the bombardment commenced. For more than an hour there were all kinds of shells shooting through the air. Fourth of July was nothing to it. Our breastworks were between the ships and the Spanish forts and lines. The firing of both Spanish and American went over our heads. The shells sounded so strange screeching through the air and exploding within a hundred yards of us. At eleven o'clock we were commanded to storm the trenches. We rushed forward with a yell and a dash. In ten minutes we had captured their first line of trenches. The 13th Minnesota was on the right of the line of battle. There was a good landing from the trenches and it was right here where the hottest fire was. Fifty yards to our left was a Spanish intrenchment filled with gunners. They poured the lead into us fearfully. We got it so thick and in such awful quantities that we had to retreat to the right hand side and lie down behind some small breastworks that we quickly made. It was here that poor Patterson, of my company was killed. I tell you I never want the bullets to ring as they did past me on that day. To make a long story short, we took trench after trench. At five o'clock in the afternoon we reached the city walls. Well it was an experience that none of us will ever forget. I will tell you about the city in my next letter.

Your loving son,

Geo. A. GALLAGHER.
