From W. A. Fleming.

Having been asked many times if it is really true that Mr. Stivers pledged his support to me as stated in the Dispatch, I wish to state the facts. When I was first talked of for representative, Mr. Stivers came to me voluntarily and asked me if I was going to be a candidate for the legislature, and he wanted to know, for if I was going on the ticket, he would support it and do all he could for it. Thus he repeated in one form and another several times. Again, some days after this, he asked me what I had made up my mind to do, and I told him I had not yet determined what to do. He then entered into quite a lengthy discussion of the matter, and said that I would have no trouble, and that it would be the best thing I could do. He pledged me his support, and said there would be no opposition to my being elected, if I would do it. He then entered into quite a lengthy discussion of the matter, and said that I would have no trouble, and that it would be the best thing I could do. He pledged me his support, and said there would be no opposition to my being elected, if I would do it.

Montana's Winter Resolutions.

The clouds cleared away the other morning at Fortland to afford the public and much structure as are enjoying within the city's gates a view of the snow peaks that ought to go down to history. Mount Hood wears a fresh and brilliant mantle and a cap of fluff snow that proved on inspection with a telescope to be a flurry of particles of snow whirled about in the wind till they partially obscured the summit. The visibility of the peaks that was allowing up them and the temperature of the air would be ready to condense, and every one was willing to take it out in con- sideration. Mount Hood, seen through the purified November air, is a grand spectacle, especially when lit with almost impossible colors in the sunset glow, but it is not a hospitable home for man or fowl when arrayed in that way.

Indians Reluctant Altruists.

Head wringing—the wringing of religious enthusiasm from heads thrust through their faith—is still practiced in some parts of India. In one place 10 couples underwent this cruel treatment to make a Hindu holiday, and one of the men lost his life by a fall—Calcutta Standard.

CAUSES FOR THANKSGIVING.

Elemental Lessons From Eminent Gen- eral. Mr. Stivers was one of the first to thank the American people have to be thankful in the munificence of sentiment that has been manifested on great national occasions. This, in addition to our health, happiness and prosperity as a nation, we should be thankful for the opportunity that has been afforded us to extend the promise of freedom, property and happiness to so many millions of people of other countries—Nelson A. Miles, Commanding United States Army.

Returns of Peace.
The return of peace to this country, after the conclusion of the war in which the land and naval forces of the United States have acquitted themselves so splendidly in both hemispheres, will be a cause for a devout return of thanks at this season when we are wont to come together for that purpose.—W. F. Decker, Hon. Admiral United States Navy.

Dear Greatest Thanksgiving.
No year since the triumphant close of the war for the Union has given greater cause for thanksgiving than this. We ought to be thankful not only for national prosperity, but for a new revelation of American character, American greatness and American destiny.—Charles Henry Smith, Postmaster General.

Gratitude to God.
The people of the United States have great occasion for gratitude to God. He has given us an opportunity during the year, access to our army and navy in a contended year, and has brought together in the hands of a national brotherhood all sections of the Union. Surely we have never had greater cause for thanksgiving than in 1898.—Committee N. B. Rice, Secretary of the Interior.

Mortgage Sale.

The trouble at Leech Lake. The correspondent of Frank Leslie's Weekly, an illustrated eastern publication, who was at Leech Lake during the recent Indian troubles, after describing the events of the battle and the negotiations which attended the settlement of the difficulty, sums up his conclusions as follows:

The proper way to keep the Indians peaceable is to right their wrongs. Do not send soldiers after the Indians, but let them know their rights.

Head what a citizen says: Mrs. Moses Derecher, of 127, 7th street, south—"I had not been feeling well all winter long. Low down in the small part of my back there was a pain very distressing, by spells becoming much worse and cutting me much discomfort, to say the least. Early in the spring my husband bought me a box of Doan's Kidney Pills at Sears' drug store, and I started taking them. Other medicines which I used failed to help me, but I can truthfully bear witness that Doan's Kidney Pills relieved my backache entirely, and corrected a disorder of the kidneys which accompanied the backache. Therefore, with my own experience with Doan's Kidney Pills I certainly do not have any hesitancy in endorsing the claims made for them.

KEELY MOTOR'S FATE
MYSTERY OF THE STRANGE MACHINE NOT DISCLOSED.

Preparations were being made to apply for patents on Keely's inventions, but were not carried out. His many experiments.

The death of John Ernst Werrell Keely, who passed on the discovery of the secret of "dynamite" molecules by the vibration of musical tones and thereby liberating a force unknown in the present boundaries of science, has left doubt as to whether the nature of his alleged secret will be revealed. Mr. Keely's widow is now in ill health. He had no children. It cannot be ascertained whether he left a will, or whether he committed to any living person the key to his alleged strange discovery in dynamite. The Keely Motor Stock Company organized to develop his experiments had hoped into a state of liquidation, from all appearances. The organization still exists, with a president and four or five directors living in New York and a secretary and one director living in Philadelphia. A corporate office is maintained in the attic of a building in Philadelphia.

Keely was an expert in the theory and art of music. He was a master of the theory of harmony. He was not only an instrumentalist, but a composer in that statement by the primary element of his alleged discovery. The theory of the Keely motor affirms that the forces of nature and harmonic forces. He said he had discovered the sympathetic vibration of the waves of sound with the disintegration of the molecules of matter and also had found in the traces of this discovery the sympathetic vibration of the spheres of dynamite. His first experiments were made with drops of water in a vacuum.

The first mechanical property he discovered from his series of experiments was the force of adhesive attraction, which he related in his own statements to be related to the polar currents of the earth. Next he developed, he has said, the force of propulsion, revealing a positive as well as negative energy. He said, as the chemical separation of the molecules of water produced electric magnetism he perceived the theory that the disintegration of these molecules, which he said he had accomplished, produced by the sympathetic vibration of tones, a subtle and higher force correlated with magnetism. He went on as far as to advance the startling proposition that the rotation of particles in their orbits was produced by the alternating power of stonely energy. He said he had cured the rheumatism of his own limbs, his own power, where he reached the ninth power, and that he had succeeded in obtaining a vacuum as near perfect as could be effected, and generated a force that could fire a gun more than a mile.

He gave experiments of this nature at study Keely proving station in 1888 in the presence of Lieutenant Zalkoff and other officials of science, some of whom were present at the time of his death. He said he had cured the rheumatism of his own limbs, his own power, where he reached the ninth power, and that he had succeeded in obtaining a vacuum as near perfect as could be effected, and generated a force that could fire a gun more than a mile.

It would require a book to tell of the series of mechanisms which Keely devised to convert the mysterious atomic energy so far to the industrial and commercial activities of the world. He died without effecting this purpose, and whether or not the secret formula of generating this supposed disturbance of interatomic energy did in fact remain to be told. The apparatus with which Keely conducted his alleged experiments is the property of the Keely Motor company. Apart from that he left a great mass of manuscripts relating to the progress of his experiments, which is the property of his estate and can only be disposed of in the administration of his effects.
No patents were ever secured with device which Keely invented. Charles H. Collier, a lawyer of Philadelphia, was retained by Keely's estate company in 1896 to apply for letters patent on the Keely inventions. Detailed drawings were made and abstracts pertinent applications were written. The designs were made and abstracts pertinent applications were written. "You are complimentary to your friend's husband."

"My friend" exclaimed the girl, "is too good for that—and if I had to be his friend, tell him he ought to help her. She wants some one's help."

"Probably," returned the Frenchman, "but it is dangerous to let a girl interfere between husband and wife, and my friend will do it for her own sake. There, that will do for this morning, Adele."

remained unchanged. A grey, weary, worn-out woman, she dwelt alone in a desolate chamber.

Holding little Leon by the hand, they quietly moved along under the trees. Presently they came to one of the many pretty grounds which were to be found in the Champs Elysees.

Next little Leon clasped her arms round, uttering cries of infinite delight. Marjorie looked on with indignant color, her eye full of motherly tender reproach; and, gazing upon her, she turned to herself.

"Poor Marjorie! She loves her husband for her child's sake. I have no right to come between them."

When the ride was done and she had left her child's side, she turned to herself with a sad expression.

Close to the Madeleine they parted, with a warm handshake and a promise to meet again.

From that day forth Marjorie and her husband were together in the Bois de Boulogne and on the boulevards, with little Leon on a pony.

At last Marjorie was so completely refrained from speaking to Casseidre, that she was obliged to write her a letter at Chateaufort, her face sometimes an expression of indignation.

There was something very wrong indeed; she was determined to discover, if possible, the exact relations existing between Marjorie and her husband.

CHAPTER XXIX. U' H H H LANDS. Marjorie bore her and child with a proud and happy heart.

LANDOR'S OWN STORY OF HIS AWFUL SUPERSTITION

He Undoubtedly Would Have Been Killed Had It Not Been for a Strange Superstition.

[LONDON LETTER.] but most effectively and it is best reproduced in his own words. "It was to realize the wooden frame of a very high-backed saddle, from the back of which some few of the sharp points stuck out horizontally. As I sat on this implement of torture, I was held by twenty or thirty mounted men, with muskets and swords, we set off at a furious pace. A horseman riding in front of me led my pony by means of a cord, in my hands was fastened a heavy iron ring, and thus we traversed across country for miles. But for those few minutes in the saddle the ride would not have been so very bad, for the pony I rode was a fine, spirited animal, and the country around was curious and interesting to the tourist he entered at their hands.

When the first accounts of his suffering reached England, there was a great unpopularity to send him to the "Furnace" table, but Mr. Landor was very properly apposed to his own statement the official doctors of the government that the air of the Punjab was again turned back, but ultimately succeeded in getting across the mountains to Masoorah. He was then in the following manner:

Mr. Landor arrived in India in April, 1850, and made his first attempt to enter Tibet towards the end of May. The Tibetan authorities were very kind to him, and he was taken to the Lhasa Pass—the custom route—and it was only in the month of July that he entered Tibet by the Lhasa Pass, was again turned back, but ultimately succeeded in getting across the mountains to Masoorah. He was then in the following manner:

the left one especially, were being destroyed, and my nose scorched. "This ceased and I was enabled to open my eyes. The spectacle before me was overwhelming. By the "Punjab" I was in a row the most villainous things I have ever seen upon earth. One a powerful, repulsive individual, had in his hand a good knobbed mallet, used for fracturing bones; another carried a bar and another; a third held a big two-handed sword, while others made a display of various glazey instruments of torture. The crowd, thriving for my blood, formed up in a semicircle, leaving room for me to see the parade of the torturous implements that awaited me, and, as my eyes roamed from one figure to another, the several Lamas called their various implements to show that they were preparing for action."

The continuation of the tortures was to have been escaped by a naked wire, but a curious circumstance enabled him to escape with his life and those of his followers. The reason was because after they had stretched Mr. Landor and Man Singh on a rack with their feet tied to each other, and raised to a post high in the air, and allowed them to remain there for twenty-four hours, it was discovered in searching the hands that the web between the fingers was quite loose, and the man possessed such fingers has, according to the Tibetans, a very long life. Mr. Landor, however, was not so lucky, and his fingers were cut off, and he was thrown into a ditch, and he was not to be seen again.

They were accordingly taken to the frontier and allowed to return to their homes, and he was not to be seen again.

For the People Library.

The entertainments given on Monday and Tuesday evenings by the Carrington Specialty Entertainers at Gardner Hall, under the auspices of the Brainerd Public Library Association, were well attended and gave good satisfaction. Miss Bowen, the soprano, was highly appreciated by the audience at each session, and deserved the applause she received. "The Drummer Boy of Shiloh" was certainly a novelty in his line and his manipulation of the sticks was something wonderful. The local talent consisting of the Bohlin Quartette and the selection by Miss Davis elicited rounds of applause by the enthusiastic listeners. In fact the public was well pleased with the entire program and will await with interest for the announcement of the date of the next entertainment, there being seven more of the course. It is to be hoped that the public will take an active interest in the public library so that the fund may increase rapidly and insure an institution of the kind worthy of a city of the size of Brainerd.

The first contribution to the cause was received on Monday with the following commination:

P. W. Way, $5.
T. B. Haxnar, $5.

Dear Sir:—For enclosed $2 please mail me a ticket for the series of Friday entertainments. Also enclose best wishes for the undertaking and the enclosed for the fund.
