The Body of John McMahon Found Wednesday Morning in the River Below the Mississippi Wagon Bridge.

The body of John McMahon was found in the Mississippi river Wednesday morning by a party of Little Falls men who came here to prosecute the search for the missing man. McMahon was a patient at the Northern Pacific Sanitarium and on Nov. 8 disappeared from that institution. The hospital authorities being unable to locate the man or find any trace of him, although but an hour before he was missed he was seen standing in the door that leads out onto the veranda. It was surmised that McMahon had taken his life owing to his mental condition. The missing man's brother and other friends from Little Falls came to Brainerd and after careful inquiry learned that a coat and vest and a man's hat had been found on the river bank a short distance below the wagon bridge and a footprint was also found at the water's edge. The articles of wearing apparel taken with that worn by McMahon when last seen and so certain were his friends that he had drowned himself, that on Sunday last dynamite was used in the river near the place where he was supposed to have gone into the water but it failed to raise the body. On Tuesday T. J. Monahan, Ed. Lovoy, Chas. Tanner, John Churrier and John Davis arrived here from Little Falls provided with two batteaux, grappling hooks, dynamite and everything necessary to make a thorough search of the bottom of the river for the body and on Wednesday morning about 8 o'clock their labors were rewarded, the body being located in twelve feet of water about sixty rods south of the bridge. Coroner Holmstead was notified, but an inquest was not deemed necessary and the party took the remains to Little Falls, loading the two batteaux together and floating down the river.

No blame in the matter can attach to the hospital authorities as McMahon was allowed the freedom of the house and grounds the same as other patients who are able to be up and around. McMahon's family are on their way from Ireland to Little Falls and are expected to arrive in a few days and the case is an extremely sad one. The deceased carried $2000 Life insurance in the Catholic Order of Foresters.

The Little Falls Transcript contains the following regarding the matter: John McMahon and his brother, Thomas, came to this city about a year ago from Ireland. Until recently both were employed on the Northern Pacific track work under Section Foreman Garsness. Better wages being offered they left the section work and went to work on one of the gravel trains. Both men have worked hard since coming here and John, who is married, saved enough money to send for his family who he left in Ireland when he emigrated to America. He had not been well for some time, and Dr. Trace, the company's physician, who attended him, states that he was afflicted with kidney troubles and mania. To add to his other troubles he worried considerably for the safety of his family on their journey across the ocean. Some of the men who worked with him, without considering the effect that it might have upon him, told him a story about a wreck of an ocean steamer, and his family were in the list of those that perished. Although told as a joke, no one undecieved him, and this so preyed upon his mind that his mental condition became serious, and he was sent to the Brainerd hospital about two weeks ago. The hospital authorities pitilessly thought that his case could be more properly treated at an asylum and sent him back to Little Falls last Tuesday, and sent a man with him to turn him over to his friends here. Some of his friends noticed that the hospital take care of him and he was taken back. On the Wednesday following he disappeared from the hospital and has not been seen since. A man answering his description was seen in the Northern Pacific yards, and it was thought that he was attempting to steal a ride on the eastbound extra freight. His family, consisting of his wife and two children, are now enroute to this city and are expected here in a few days.

A Visit of Inspection.

A special carrying the division superintendents of the Northern Pacific arrived in the city from the west yesterday morning at 10 o'clock and spent an hour here looking over the shops and other railroad interests. The party was composed of M. C. Kimberly, general superintendent, W. G. Pearson, assistant general superintendent, W. L. Darling, assistant chief engineer, F. W. Gilbert, Spokane; A. E. Law, Minneapolis; A. J. Bergevin, Staples; C. J. Wilson, Jamestown, N. D.; G. W. Vanderville, Winnipeg; Chas. Russell, Missoula; E. J. Pearson, Tacoma; N. Kline, Glendive, Mont.; H. J. Horn, Jr., Livingston, Mont.; E. C. Blanchard, Duluth. The party left for Duluth and Ashland and will go to St. Paul and Minneapolis. The inspection trip is an innovation with the road and it made it give the different superintendents a chance of seeing what is being done on other divisions, methods employed and the results obtained.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, There are evidences on all sides of the beginning of a new era of Prosperity, which will operate the mills and marts of trade, making Business Activity take the place of Commercial Depression; and WHEREAS, The services of millions of bright young men and women, possessing the requisite qualifications for efficient clerical work will be called into requisition; and

WHEREAS, Those who are the most thoroughly qualified will secure the best places; THEREFORE, I, by virtue of the power vested in me for preparing young people for Success in Life, do recommend all who desire the best facilities for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Book-keeping, Business Practice, Penmanship, Short-hand, Typewriting, Correspondence, and all the other branches of an education having a direct application to the practical affairs of life to attend the BRAINERD BUSINESS COLLEGE, of Brainerd, Minn., an institution of high repute and thoroughness.

Given under my hand and seal, this twenty-fourth day of November, in the year of our SEIGNIORITY Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine.

LEWIS H. YATH, Prin., Brainerd, Minn.

CASS LAKE RUMORS.

Rumor has it that Das Gunn, of Grand Rapids, will build a $20,000 hotel here; also, that P. J. McGarry will build a large three-story hotel. Jerome Keisler, saloon and hotel keeper, and J. F. McGinnis, a heavy merchant, of Brainerd, were here yesterday, and the rumor is they bought four lots for business. Charley Tedford has bought his saloon fixtures, and they're fine too, and has them set up and ready for business just as soon as the village is organized and can issue to him the proper credentials.

New Officers Elected.

At the last regular meeting of St. Francis Branch Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, of this city, the following named members were elected to serve as officers during 1900: President—W. H. Meekins. 1st Vice Pres.—J. W. Koop. 2nd Vice Pres.—Wm. Jemander. Rec. and Ins. Sec.—T. H. Murphy. Assat. Rec. Sec.—Henry Theriot. Financial Sec.—John Ingrand. Treasurer—John A. Denis. Marshal—P. B. Ruffe. Guard—John Corrigan. Board of Trustees—M. Cullen, D. M. Clark, George Koopig, William Koop, T. M. Bally.

J. O. Omas, who has been employed in the Blue Hill Hardware shop, will go to Brainerd tonight to take charge of the Hotel Stratton shop—Little Falls Transcript.

From the Transcript.

J. G. Gandy, of Brainerd, was in the city Thursday on business for the Ackley Lumber company. E. H. Newman is expected to arrive Friday with a car load of horses for his saw tables in this city and Brainerd.

INDUSTRIAL CENSUS.

RECORD OF THE SECOND YEAR OF PROTECTION.

The Protection of That Policy Has Resulted in an Increase of 25.68 Per Cent in Wage Paid and 15.76 Per Cent in the Sale of Wages.

The extent to which American labor has gained in employment and in wages in the past four years, by reason of the restoration of industrial activity in place of the dullness, depression and untended idleness of the preceding period following the free-trade experiment at tariff making in 1894 cannot, for obvious reasons, be accurately stated in figures. It is impossible for any but governmental agencies to enter the ground with anything like completeness. Employers of labor do not, as a rule, take kindly to inquiries as to facts concerning wages, gross cost of output, etc.

The American Tariff Protective League, always exceptionally successful in its field, has just completed its inquiry for the month of March, 1899, using that month as the basis of comparison with March, 1895, while the being fifteen months after the enactment of the Dingley tariff, while the latter was seven months after the enactment of the Wilson tariff of 1894.

In the case of the earlier tariff, the country had considerably longer than seven months in which to organize to protest the facts of increased production, for the reason that the period of well-advanced seasons really continued very soon after the election of Grover Cleveland in November, 1892. Consequently the time during which domestic producers were engaged in reducing their scale of operations in order to meet the free-trade tariff lines, together with the seven months of actual protection under a free-trade tariff, we have a total period of time practically the same as the fifteen months between Aug. 1, 1897, and April 1, 1899.

It is, however, to be borne in mind that our returns for March, 1899, differ and significant though they be, are considerably short of the actual, expressing the real progress made in fifteen months of practical protection. Everybody knows that a very important advance in the wage rate of the whole country has gone into effect since the close of March, 1899, our census month. Therefore our census fails to present the full facts of increased prosperity among American wage-workers. We show that compared with March, 1895, there was in the 1,307 establishments reporting a gain of 75.74 in the number of hands employed, a gain of 39.56 per cent for March, 1899, that there was a gain on the gross sum of wages paid of $4,611,733.54, this being $4.69 per cent more than in March, 1895, and that while in March, 1895, the average rate of wages per capita for the month was $22.35, the average rate per capita in March, 1899, had increased to $24.65, being a gain of 10.49 per cent. Had this increase been extended so as to include the months of April and May, 1899, the months in which the heaviest and most general advances in wages occurred, the percentage of increase in the per capita wage would undoubtedly have been above 15 per cent.

The figures in condensed form are as follows:
Number of reports received, covering March, 1895, and March, 1899, 1,307
Number of hands employed, 191,724
March, 1895, 191,724
March, 1899, 257,486
Gain for March, 1899, 30.9 per cent
Amount of wages paid,
March, 1895, $6,288,044.52
March, 1899, 9,895,250.00
Gain for March, 1899, 54.6 per cent
Average wages per capita,
March, 1895, $22.35
March, 1899, $24.65
Gain for March, 1899, 10.49 per cent.

Such is the story of protection and prosperity as affecting the American wage-worker. It is a story which should bring joy to the heart of every American citizen.

STATISTICAL FACTS.
New President McKinley summarizes existing Free-trade conditions.
Among the special gifts of President McKinley that of effective verbal statement in concise form is especially notable. Few men have ever said so small a number of words more to the point and so important, and that the country wanted to know, than was said by our chief executive in his speech at the banquet of the Commercial Club in Chicago, Oct. 10, 1898. The president had something good to say, and this is how he said it:
'I congratulate you, gentlemen, upon the growth and advancement of your city and the evidence of prosperity everywhere observable. Nothing impressed me more in looking into the faces of the great multitude on the streets yesterday than the smiling, happy faces of the people. That was evidence to me of your real and substantial prosperity. It meant the steady employment, good wages, happy homes, and these are always indicative to good government and to the happiness of the people.'
'We have had a wonderful industrial development in the last two years. Our work alone never was so buoyant as at the present time, and our foreign trade exceeds that of any like period in our all history. In the year 1899 we bought abroad up to $1,277,000,000 worth of goods, and in the same year we sold abroad up to $1,277,000,000, giving a balance of trade in our favor of $600,000,000.

more money at home, more earnings at home. Our products are carried on every sea and find a market in all the ports of the world. In 1898 the Japanese government took from us $25,000,000 of its total imports, and in 1899 14.97 per cent. We are the greatest producers of pig iron, and our manufactures of iron and steel exceed those of any other country. We raise three-fourths of the cotton of the world.

WORKMEN ARE KILLED.

Accident on the Omaha Road in South Dakota.
Sioux Falls, S. D., Nov. 21.—Word reached here late last evening of an accident on the Omaha railroad near Humboldt, about twenty miles from Sioux Falls. Several men were on a lumber cart at the crossing of a half-mile of Humboldt when they discovered a work train in charge of Conductor Higgins, backing down upon them, on their way to Humboldt. In the work train were a number of men, upon which were a hundred or more workmen, principally Italians. One man on the lumber cart jumped, leaving the cart on the track.

When the rapidly backing work train struck the lumber cart, the force of the collision threw four of the men from the track and killed five of the workmen and injured many more. Five of the injured are reported to be in a critical condition, and the workmen, many being gravely injured, are being cared for at the hospital. The injured Italians immediately became wildly excited, and a mob of natives, many being gravely injured, are being cared for at the hospital. The injured Italians immediately became wildly excited, and a mob of natives, many being gravely injured, are being cared for at the hospital.

Can any one imagine Grover Cleveland for the month of March, 1899, using that month as the basis of comparison with March, 1895, while the being fifteen months after the enactment of the Dingley tariff, while the latter was seven months after the enactment of the Wilson tariff of 1894.

"For the English," he murmured, "this hollow threat will be a stinging star, for my brothers, it is a signal which will tell them that they may enter without danger into the Cemetery of the Kings, where our lives await them."

A tone of footstep and voice now made itself heard.

Sanger again listened attentively.

"Some one approaches! Doubtless it is they."

And he directed his steps toward the gate, where he exchanged the game word with each newcomer who successively passed him.

At the end of about fifteen minutes the principal among the fanatics of Howland were reunited in the cemetery of the Kings, and the prisoners then arrived, accompanied by Jabbah the great priestess.

"Jabbah," murmured the former, as they crossed the dell, "the route has been long, but we touch the end."

"Yes," answered the priestess, "the light torches," commanded the priestess, who had taken her place on the granite steps of the pedestal of the idol.

This order was instantly executed and the red flames of the torches of darkness in the vast enclosure.

The priestess followed Sanger to the approach.

"Are all prisoners present?" she asked.

"I have counted all as they passed," answered the latter, who was waiting.

"Which one?"

"How?" cried the priestess, asking.

"Missus," the darkness concealed her face, and she made no answer to his question, and I took her name word, and I did not ask their names."

"At this moment Jabbah caught sight of the faint glimmering light which shone behind her, and she made two steps to meet him, making him, in a whisper, "Well, are they dead?"

"Yes," responded Sanger, "the English and the Englishmen are all dead."

"Speaking thus, he thought he uttered an falsehood. Following George Malcolm, he had followed the order of the priestess, but in his intention to silence some one, he had said that he had not seen any of the prisoners, and he had not seen any of the prisoners, and he had not seen any of the prisoners."

"How is he?" asked the priestess, who had been looking at him with interest and curiosity.

"He is dead," answered Sanger, "and he is dead."

"The English," murmured Sanger, "the English and the Englishmen are all dead."

"How is he?" asked the priestess, who had been looking at him with interest and curiosity.

"He is dead," answered Sanger, "and he is dead."

The rain turned as if he were falling from a white, between his shoulders. At the first glimmer he looked about the newcomer and exclaimed in a frightful rage:

"George Malcolm, who comes to sweep your eyes?"

"Or better upon me a second visit," answered the night, in a few hours of laughter. "You have penetrated into my palace, George Malcolm. My palace shall be your sepulchre."

"Do you believe so?"

"For all response, I would beg to wait the table and expect the hand to strike the bell, but should the Englishman had been slain, and had he taken his life, he said."

"At last, George Malcolm, our eyes are changed. Providence, which protects us, has put an end to your crimes. You shall perish, and by my hand!"

"At last, George Malcolm, our eyes are changed. Providence, which protects us, has put an end to your crimes. You shall perish, and by my hand!"

"At last, George Malcolm, our eyes are changed. Providence, which protects us, has put an end to your crimes. You shall perish, and by my hand!"

and force. Strike all! Let your cords strangle, your knives cut, your torches burn! Give an assassin's leap as punishment. May this, God of evil conduct you! The priestess, now, will lead your eyes."

The Hindoo gratified themselves, lifting above their heads their lances and their daggers, while in a slow, solemn voice, Jabbah pronounced this invocation.

"Yes, God of hate and vengeance, brother of Howland, and father of Kali, thy faithful servants inspire thee with their skill and strength, and make them victorious. In thy name, I bless their arms!"

She extended her hand over the kneeling crowd, who rose, crying:

"Glory to Jabbah!"

"Glory to Jabbah!" cried the latter Englishman, and he, as on the spot, perished by John Malcolm.

It must be that within three days Jabbah shall be free!"

"Yes, free from your hand!" answered a voice of thunder, which made Jabbah start to his feet and utter a cry of horror. The priestess, standing up, before his vision, strange, unexpected, and unaccountable, by the natives, revealed:

"It is he! And he!" exclaimed the priestess.

"George Malcolm!" echoed the latter.

"He is he!" cried Jabbah, "in Howland's name, say him!"

"At this command, stepped by their queen, Jabbah, exclaimed, surprised and terror:

"Breaking out into clamor, the Hindoos were about to throw themselves upon him, when on every side the ranks heaved up about the howl-bark of the natives, appeared to be some initiate."

"Breaking out of granite, by a singular metamorphosis, became an English soldier, and he, throwing from him the pistol dash by whose aid they had been enabled to play the role of rocks, sprang upon the natives, surprised and disarmed them. At the same time, from a deep oak in the side of the cliff, emerged Sir Edward Malcolm, dressed in the uniform of a British officer.

"Hurray!" shouted the English.

"Make them prisoners," commanded the priestess, "kill all those who resist!"

"Step back, and stand firm by the altar!"

"All retreat!" said to him, "at last you are my children!"

Jabbah threw about her face a look of rage, and he said to her, "Ah, at last I shall see your triumph!"

"And I shall see your triumph!" answered the latter, who had been looking at him with interest and curiosity.

"No!" said Madame Justice, "but I shall see your triumph!"

"No!" said Madame Justice, "but I shall see your triumph!"

reason that I generally forgot to go out of doors on the regular fall-daily nights, and, therefore, was naturally anxious to make the best of what was left of the shower.

This year the few stars that rewarded my vigilance by falling in the latter part of November were exceptionally bright. They glittered more brightly, they actualized, they moved slowly, as if they wanted to be well as I did.

The birds of that autumn were of particularly bright plumage. I remember that they sang very well, and although I am not positive that those must have been fewer or later, for I made no complaints about the scarcity of chevrons.

If I remember rightly, those I ate were remarkably fine, either one great chevron in a single bill, or a fairly large one with two little ones which did not interfere with the expansion of the throat.

There was a peculiarity about the weather of that November; very often the skies were really cloudy and gray, and the rain sometimes came down with steady persistence, while the cold and penetrating winds made people think of heavy overcoats before their apparelized skins. But these days of lead weather had very little effect upon me or upon my spirits. It did not occur to me that the melancholy days had come, and as for their being the saddest of the year, that was impossible. At that time some sort of a sun was always shining. If it were not the ordinary sun, about which our earth revolves, it was a particular orb which shined for my especial satisfaction. It sometimes even shone at night, after I had gone to bed—that is, if I happened to be awake.

It was not only nature that was more than usually agreeable; the people of this world, so far as I knew then, were very pleasant, remarkably so. I do not remember quarreling with a living soul during the whole of that November. It seems as though my intercourse with my fellow beings was unusually good. I regard to social progress and the steady betterment of the human race, I was an ardent optimist. Even people I knew as not being very pleasant of manner or intelligent of speech seemed then good company.

Politics did not trouble me at all. I suppose a good many people voted for the wrong men, but I paid no attention to their misguided actions. It was scarcely possible that there could be any candidates for office who did not possess some virtue, and a strong disposition in the direction of general altruism made me well willed to all good people who had been selected to administer the affairs of townships, counties or state.

There was truly something exceptional in this Thanksgiving season. Other people may not have noticed it, but it impressed itself most forcibly upon me. How could it be otherwise? It was a time that my first book was published.

MY MOST NOTABLE THANKSGIVING

BY FRANK H. STOCKTON

It was Thanksgiving time, nearly thirty years ago. To the ordinary inhabitant of that portion of this country where I then dwelt the season was very much like other seasons, an autumnal frothing, there was nothing in the earth, the skies, or the water that gave to this period any peculiarity which would distinguish it from the similar period of any other year, past or to come.

But there was something that made this Thanksgiving season very peculiar in my eyes. For some time the whole world had seemed to me to be permeated by the knowledge that something was about to happen which had never happened before and which could not be by any possibility, happen again.

I had always loved the Thanksgiving season. To be sure, much of the brightness and color in which the land-seas revolved in October was lent by the rich hues of the oaks, the heavy green of the pines and the reds, lighted up here and there by some hanging sunny leaves or reddening ivy, with hill and dale greatly adorned by the mist of Indian summer, made a picture in which I delighted as much as I did in the beauties of any other season.

But in this year the late autumn fall was more than I had ever known it before. Van Dyke never dreamed of such beauty as I saw now, and the curtains of distant mist seemed ever about to the open windows of the earth, lighted up here and there by some sparkling spire in the air which it would have been impossible for other people to understand, even if I had pointed it to them.

The high was dark, the stars of Kali shone above the highest peak of the mountain and the Cemetery of the Kings. This moment, quiet which had been the terrible scene of St. John Malcolm's assassination, appeared calm, solemnly deserted, suddenly a woman form, almost indistinguishable in the misty shadows, penetrated the narrow dell which led from the plain into the sacred inclosure, glided among the rocks, avoided contact with the majestic skeletons and reached the base of the statue of the god Siva. There, in a form, or rather this man, remained for several seconds, motionless, attentive, listening to the silence and questioning with his glance the depths of the void.

Continued by the explanation that he found himself in the heart of profound silence, he drew from his belt a flint, a piece of steel and a morsel of tinder which he placed to the fire.

With this spark he lighted a pipe, and in hurried fashion he inhaled a puff of a slower of opium, accompanied by a blinding smoke.

The momentary brilliance of the incense that he drew from his belt, he saw, the faithful services of the priestess.

MY FIRST NOON

BY FRANK H. STOCKTON

who were in the habit of migrating to the north in the late autumn delay of their journey this year, those of them who did remain made themselves very conspicuous and agreeable.

It was a great year for rabbits. In earlier days I had given much attention to trapping these little creatures, but seldom took much interest in the sport until the snow had covered the earth, and thereby induced game owners of various kinds to cast their eyes upon the delicate morsels, even in train by men and boys. But now, although I did not care to trap the rabbits, I was charmed to gaze upon them as they looked about on the edge of the woods, wagging their little tails and sitting up like little men nervously trembling, while their long eyes scanned the leaves. The rabbit for seemed very long and fine that year, and I am sure that its color must have been extraordinarily well adapted for the adornment of human youth and beauty.

I do not know that there were great crops of corn that year, or that the least of any kind was sown, descended fields, but I felt the farmers ought to be very happy people.

To me the country was permeated with an atmosphere of richness and unexpressed fulfillment. I knew that new crops had been very good, at least I knew that the trees had borne some of the best fruit of the season. I had tried a good deal of it, and it had never tasted a greater amount of the richness and subside favor of which I was so fond.

It was also a good year for squirrels. I do not wish it to be supposed that I was an active hunter, although I like them better now than I used to in my earlier days, although they are in my earlier days in the business of chestnut gathering, as when I was younger. But in this Thanksgiving season of which I speak the squirrels

It was Thanksgiving time, nearly thirty years ago. To the ordinary inhabitant of that portion of this country where I then dwelt the season was very much like other seasons, an autumnal frothing, there was nothing in the earth, the skies, or the water that gave to this period any peculiarity which would distinguish it from the similar period of any other year, past or to come.

But there was something that made this Thanksgiving season very peculiar in my eyes. For some time the whole world had seemed to me to be permeated by the knowledge that something was about to happen which had never happened before and which could not be by any possibility, happen again.

I had always loved the Thanksgiving season. To be sure, much of the brightness and color in which the land-seas revolved in October was lent by the rich hues of the oaks, the heavy green of the pines and the reds, lighted up here and there by some hanging sunny leaves or reddening ivy, with hill and dale greatly adorned by the mist of Indian summer, made a picture in which I delighted as much as I did in the beauties of any other season.

But in this year the late autumn fall was more than I had ever known it before. Van Dyke never dreamed of such beauty as I saw now, and the curtains of distant mist seemed ever about to the open windows of the earth, lighted up here and there by some sparkling spire in the air which it would have been impossible for other people to understand, even if I had pointed it to them.

The high was dark, the stars of Kali shone above the highest peak of the mountain and the Cemetery of the Kings. This moment, quiet which had been the terrible scene of St. John Malcolm's assassination, appeared calm, solemnly deserted, suddenly a woman form, almost indistinguishable in the misty shadows, penetrated the narrow dell which led from the plain into the sacred inclosure, glided among the rocks, avoided contact with the majestic skeletons and reached the base of the statue of the god Siva. There, in a form, or rather this man, remained for several seconds, motionless, attentive, listening to the silence and questioning with his glance the depths of the void.

Continued by the explanation that he found himself in the heart of profound silence, he drew from his belt a flint, a piece of steel and a morsel of tinder which he placed to the fire.

With this spark he lighted a pipe, and in hurried fashion he inhaled a puff of a slower of opium, accompanied by a blinding smoke.

The momentary brilliance of the incense that he drew from his belt, he saw, the faithful services of the priestess.

GOSE BEYOND.

David E. Slipp, aged 48 years, died at his residence on Fourth street north on Sunday morning of paralysis, after a lingering illness of over two years duration. Mr. Slipp was one of the oldest residents of this city, having come to Brainerd in 1872 and established the hardware business of what is now known as Slipp Bros., and conducted the same for many years. A year ago last March Mr. Slipp made a trip to the Arkansas Hot Springs, hoping to improve his condition, but he steadily grew worse, and on his return was a confirmed invalid and confined to his bed a greater portion of the time. The funeral services were held on Tuesday morning from the residence, Rev. Clowse officiating, the services being in charge of the local lodge of A. O. U. W., of which the deceased was a member, and the remains were followed to their last resting place in Evergreen cemetery by a large number of sorrowing friends. CHURCH NEWS.

The usual services will be maintained in the Presbyterian Church next Sunday at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

Thanksgiving exercises will be held in the Presbyterian Church Thursday, November 29th, at 10:30 o'clock.

United Thanksgiving services will be held in the Baptist church at 10:30 a. m. Thanksgiving Day. The Rev. Mr. Gulow, pastor of the Methodist church, will deliver the address.

The preparatory service of the Presbyterian congregation will be held Wednesday evening, November 29th, instead of Thursday, so as not to interfere with family plans on the National holiday.

The subject of Rev. G. W. Gallagher's discourse on next Sunday morning will be the practice of the Sower. He will continue in the evening his admirable series of sermons to the young people, the topic of the evening being "Honesty Before God and Man." These discourses are carefully prepared, their illustrations are drawn from everyday life and wide reading and the young people who do not hear them miss a rare treat. The public are cordially invited to all these services.

The Watch Fund.

If the children of other sections of the city would come forward with pennies as enthusiastically and generously as those who live near the Lincoln school Brainerd would soon be classed among the leading contributors to the Dewey Watch Fund. One hundred and eleven names is the week's total, so far as the boys and girls of South Brainerd are concerned, a record of which each young patriot may well be proud.

But activity has by no means been restricted to the pupils of the Lincoln school. Sixty certificates have been taken out by children who appeared personally at the Treasurer's office. One applicant wrote from St. Paul, Frank Sherman formerly a resident here.

Suppose the boys and girls of East Brainerd should start out for a record this week, how the coppera would roll in. Try it boys and girls and see what you can accomplish by united effort. Give the fund a boost that Brainerd may do its share to uphold the testimonial for "Uncle George."

The following are the contributors to the fund for the past week:

- Paul Anderson
- Ben Henson
- John Johnson
- Ed. Herley
- John Jones
- John Smith
- John Brown
- John White
