STABLE MANAGEMENT IN WINTER.

There are few farmers now-a-days but like to drive a fine team of horses and get, as a class, their horses in winter do not carry the coats that animals in high health should. The reason in nine cases out of ten is inattention to stable management. They are fed and watered regularly and liberally, but as a rule they suffer from cold and want of cleaning, and too often from a too liberal use of the carry-comb. This implement should be principally used to keep the brush clean, applying it only lightly to the mane to loosen the dirt—never about the limbs, and, especially the points. A liberal use of the brush will give the coat that peculiar glossy appearance so much admired in a well-kept horse. The stable should be as warm as possible, consistent with ventilation, and good blankets should be provided for each working horse. It is not only conducive to comfort, but it also saves feed and of ton the health of the horse. Plenty of soft bedding should also be given at night, and the rack and mangers should be so arranged that the animal can take its hay without danger of filling its eyes and mane with the seed. The stalls should be roomy enough so that the animal can lay down at ease, and the halter strap so arranged that the horse can get up and down easily, and without danger of casting itself; above all things do not allow the stable to go without cleaning at least twice each day. After bringing in the team at night, sweating perhaps, do not go to bed without first thoroughly cleaning them. A partly worn broom, cut square, is an excellent thing for cleaning the limbs from dirt, if not too harshly used. It is attention to little matters about the stable that go far to make up the economy thereof, and it costs less time to do the work regularly and at proper times than to have an occasional general cleaning up.—Western Rural.

SHRINKAGE OF CORN.

On the ninth of last October, a committee of the Hampden County Agricultural Society examined a field of corn belonging to William Mattoon of Springfield, and harvested an average portion containing two hundred and sixty-two feet, being ten feet less than one square rod. The corn was taken to the agricultural store for sale keeping and drying. At the time of harvesting it weighed forty-five pounds. Being suspended from the upper part of the store it was left until the twentieth day of November, when its weight was thirty-one and one fourth pounds. It was now shelled and cleaned. The result was twenty two and one-half pounds of corn, and at the rate of seventy-seven bushels and thirty-five pounds per acre. It will be readily observed that the shelled corn was just one-half the original weight of corn and cob. This corn was of the Dent variety but appeared to be well ripened. We believe it to be quite common to estimate the corn crop by calling seventy pounds a bushel. Had the above named crop been decided on this basis the result would have been one hundred and five bushels instead of seventy-seven.—New England Farmer.

SALAD DRESSING.—This is also excellent over sliced tomatoes in the summer. Take the yolk of one fresh egg and mix with it two tablespoonfuls of olive oil very slowly, add one and one-half spoonfuls of mustard, three spoonfuls of salt, a little pepper, and last of all two spoonfuls of vinegar. Beat the white of an egg to a stiff froth and lightly stir in.

—Miss Maggie Cunningham, of Terre Haute, Ind., determined to take advantage of the privilege supposed to belong to leap-year, and invited her friends to her wedding before she concluded the young man whose name she had concluded to take. The wedding party proceeded to the residence of the gentle youth and found him in bed, but he, recognizing the situation, gathered his reindeer about him and silently stole away. The rest of the girls are discouraged.

—It is estimated that there are in England and Wales two thousand seven hundred and forty Congregational churches.
