

Mary's Dream
Mary was in tears at the dining bay,
And her heart was sad and her eyes were dim;
And her lover was gone for a year and a day,
And she looked out the waves and prayed
For him,
And still she heard by the land or the sea
The wail of the mourning sea.

She dreamed that she saw him one stormy night,
When the billows were high and the wind was loud;
The ship was tossing, the waves were white,
And the black hull seemed like a drifting cloud.

The sun shone out on the morning morn,
And Mary went down to the quiet shore,
To see her lover all white and torn,
And kiss the lips that would speak no more.
And still she hears by the land or the sea
The wail of the mourning sea.

FARM, GARDEN AND HOUSEHOLD.
Prevention of Hog Cholera.
The Rural World says one of the largest hog breeders in Missouri, who frequently loses several hundred head at once never has any cholera. He gives a special occasion to remark that the cause of his success is that he does not stock in cooking food for hogs—he has all the coals and ashes thrown in the boiler and boiled with the food. He also sometimes puts in salt and sulphur. The wise burns charcoal for food and they eat it as freely as they do corn. He likewise has moveable sheds for his hogs, and keeps them sheltered from the cold and storms.

How to Prevent Clover from Growing
It is sometimes objected to clover that it is too coarse as a feed—this being the case where it is grown on strong ground, making a large stalk. This can be remedied by sowing thick, and thus getting a fine stem crop, also shorter in length. In sowing clover on poor soil, it is best to use a heavy fertilizer of 15 to 25 inches, according to the quality of the land, the season, and whether the soil is rich or poor. The point is, to sow thick—from ten to twelve quarts per acre, evenly scattered on level, mellow soil, and brushed in with a rake. This forms a close growth, and the clover must be cut before it lodges much, and this is generally about the time of flowering. Else, if lodged badly, and permitted to remain so for some time, it will partially rot, and lose much of its quality as a feed. But harvested in time and well cured, the clover with which this article has obtained among our best dairymen. Three tons per acre may thus be realized, and if the season is a good one the amount may be doubled by two cuttings; and clover should always be cut twice, each time at about the blossoming period. We prefer the medium size or June clover, and also the finer-stemmed than the large kind, and less apt to lodge, and always permits of two cuttings. On poor land clover may be grown successfully, improving the soil. But it may be raised on the richest of land with the most gratifying results; only get it close, so as to have it fine-stemmed, and cut it in time.

Cheese Factories.
A practical cheese manufacturer at the East gives the following suggestions in the Maine Farmer concerning these institutions:
1. In opening a cheese factory it is very essential that the patron should understand that much of the responsibility rests with them. The manufacturer should be held responsible for the proper manipulation of the milk and curd, and the care of the cheese, and that all that can be imposed upon him. It is impossible for any manufacturer to make a good article of cheese from impure tainted curd or sour milk. Unless patrons exercise the utmost care, the probabilities are that the cheese will be below par, and, as a matter of necessity, all the blame must fall upon the manufacturer.

Improvement of Rancid Butter.
According to Land and Water, rancid butter can be greatly improved in quality by washing it thoroughly in lime water, and allowing it to remain in the lime for a few days. The lime water is made by allowing a lump of lime, the size of the fist, to slack in a bucket of water, stirring it well, and afterward allowing the lime to settle. It is said that a large business is now done in Europe by sunny persons, who purchase rancid butter, wash it in lime water, and sell it again at much higher prices. We have seen the oak leaves dripping with the precious saccharine matter. In 1866 it was very abundant in the Sacramento valley—more so than in 1862. In 1868 it also fell in abundance. Mr. Brennan was probably the only man in the valley in the years mentioned, and that accounts for his wonderful discovery.

Abandonment of Shea Culture in the Savannah River.
The Augusta (Georgia) Chronicle says: We regret to learn that Mr. Green, son of the famous Dr. Braxton Green, and his assistant, who were left here by the latter last week to ascertain the chance of obtaining a sufficient number of ripe shea nuts to initiate the process of hatching, heretofore abandoned in these sections, to increase their harvest, and to abandon the project for compelled to do so. After a thorough test of the shea nuts—having fished four nights without other success than a catch of two indifferent male shea nuts—and the examination of our fishermen that they have reluctantly abandoned the field for the present season, and left last night for Newbern, North Carolina, where the prospect is reported to be far more promising for the success of their process than here.

The question has often been asked me, "Is there any harm in feeding cows to milk cows?" I have always used my influence against this practice, but have not until lately seen any authority. Mr. X. A. Willard, doubtless the best authority in the United States, in a long editorial in Moore's Rural New Yorker, makes a strong argument against the practice, both as making the milk very poor and also as impairing the health of the cows. He gives the analysis of whey as follows: Water, 93.12; butter, .35; casein, .47; albumen, .38; milk sugar, 4.54; lactic acid, .45; ash, .69. Total 100.

Among the numerous instances of cruelty to the lower animals, we have special occasion to remark that the neglect of breeders in sending fowls away on long journeys ill provided, or not at all, with food and drink. The negligence is culpable, and, moreover, foolish, for thereby the injury is done to the fowls themselves, and if the fact that the animals will suffer painfully has no influence upon the owners it would seem as if the selfish wish to avoid loss would have some weight. For a prolonged abstinence in an animal fed so long so frequently as the domestic fowls, or the like, is a very serious strain, on the system is often followed by irremediable injury to the constitution. We would avoid breeding from a bird that we knew had been thus treated, just as we would avoid one that had any great defect, such as a bad form, producing weakly chicks and the like. The evils of all underfeeding are well enough understood; in this case, however, the difficulty is increased by the suddenness of the shock, the fowl not having time to accustom itself to it. What is said of feeding is also true of the supply of water. A healthy fowl will drink fifty or twenty times a day, and in a close coop, or in hot weather, still oftener. Therefore all possible means should be taken to properly fasten water-cups in the traveling cages.

Household Hints.
Mix pans should be first washed in cold water, then in warm soap suds, to take off all particles of grease, and then scalded in very hot water, and dry well in the sun or by the fire.

California Manna.
The Alta states that S. Brannan has read an article on manna and honey dew before the Academy of Science, stating that honey-dew had fallen in California twice in the last decade, viz: 1862 and 1872. If Mr. Brannan was posted on what he was writing about, he would not have called the falling of honey-dew to the year in the Sacramento Valley. The Indians gather it in large quantities, and the honey-bees fill their hives with the rich manna. We have seen balls of the manna as large as apples gathered by the swarms, and not confined to any particular time, but coming in at various times, and more extensively than other years. We have seen the oak leaves dripping with the precious saccharine matter. In 1866 it was very abundant in the Sacramento valley—more so than in 1862. In 1868 it also fell in abundance. Mr. Brennan was probably the only man in the valley in the years mentioned, and that accounts for his wonderful discovery.

MANOING A WOMAN.
The following is a true story, as given by the writer of the article in the London News.
To-day was the accident over which was written in Georgia. Susan Eberhart, aged 19, was married to a man named William, on the 29th of May, 1872. She was a beautiful girl, and her husband was a very good man. He was a carpenter, and he had a very good business. He was a very good man, and he was a very good father. He was a very good man, and he was a very good father. He was a very good man, and he was a very good father.

BREACH OF PROMISE.
A Practical Joke in England.
The London News tells the story of a young gentleman in Lincolnshire, who was engaged to marry a certain young lady in Lincolnshire. He was a very good man, and she was a very good girl. They were both very good people, and they were both very good friends. They were both very good people, and they were both very good friends. They were both very good people, and they were both very good friends.
