THE WALWORTH PARTRIDGE.

Some of the Causes which led to the Marriage of the Partridge.

A Saratoga special gives the following account of the causes which led to the Walworth partridge:

"Mansfield Tracy Walworth was thrown into the society of his step-sister...

"Good-by, Kittle; good-by, Lu!" I heard him say; "don't be nervous. The line and Gaudin the most careful engineer. I would not be afraid to trust every mortal to their keeping. Nothing could happen wrong with the two together."

"I said, 'We'll get through it somehow, and Joe shall never talk to me again. After all it was easy enough. I rested as I spoke. I kept the signal. We are off. Five hours from L. to D.; five hours back again. I saw a flutter, and never guessed what it was, until we had passed the train at the wrong place. Two minutes more, and we should have had a collision. Somebody told me, and I laughed. I heard the shareholder say, respectfully: 'Of course, Mr. Gaudin, you know what you are about.'"

"Then I was alone, and wondering whether I should go faster or slower. I did something, and the cars rushed on at a fearful rate. The same man who had spoken to me before was standing near me. I heard the question— 'How many miles an hour are we making?' 'I didn't know. 'Tis a matter of life and death, Mr. Gaudin. I could not remember what I should do—was it this or that—faster or slower? I was playing with the engine like a child."

"Suddenly there was a horrible roar—a crash. I was flung somewhere. I was in the water. By a miracle I was sobered and saved from the shore, and there I lay on my back."

"The engine was in fragments, the cars in splinters; dead and dying and wounded were strewn around. There were groans and shrieks of despair. The maimed cried out in pain; the unharmed bewailed their dead; and a voice, unheard by any other, was in my ear, whispering: 'Mind!'"

"The news had gone to A., and people came thronging down to find their lost ones. Searching for an old man's daughter, I came to a place under the trees and found five bodies lying there, all in their rigid horror—an old woman, a young one, a baby and two tiny children. Was it fancy—was it pure fancy, born of my anguish—they looked like—oh, Heaven they were my wife, my children—all cold and dead!"

"How did they come on the train? What chance had I brought about? No one could answer. I groaned, I screamed, I clasped my hands, I tore my hair, I gazed in the good face of her who gave me birth, on the lovely face of my wife, on my innocent children. I called them by name; I tried to touch the hair of their heads. There never could be—there never would be."

"A whistle! Great God! Onward up the track thundered another train! Its red eyes glared upon me; I threw myself before it; I felt it crush me to atoms. 'His head is extremely hot,' said somebody. 'I opened my eyes and saw my wife—' 'How do you feel?' said she; 'a little better?'"

"I was so rejoiced and astonished by the sight of her that I could not speak at first. She repeated the question. 'I must be crushed to pieces,' said I. 'For the train went over me; but I feel no pain. There he goes about that train again,' said my wife. 'Why, I tried to move—there was nothing the matter with me. I was in my own room; opposite to me a crib in which my child was asleep. My wife and child were safe. Was I delirious, or what could it be?'"

"Joe," I cried, "tell me what has happened here?" "It's nice o'clock," said Joe. "You came home in such a state from the club that I couldn't wake you. You weren't fit to manage steam, and risk people's lives. The San Francisco is half way to A., I suppose, and you have been frightening me half to death with your dreadful talk."

"And Joe began to cry. 'I was in a dream. But I had lived through it as though it were a reality. 'Is there a Bible in the house, Joe?' said I. 'Are we heathens?' asked Joe. 'Give it to me this moment, Joe.' 'She brought it, and I put my hand on it and took the oath (too solemn to be repeated), that what had happened never should be repeated again. And if the San Francisco ever comes to grief, the partridge will not be, as it has so often been, 'The engineer was drunk.'—Romances and Humor of the Rail."

Frands in the Old Freedmen's Bureau Management.

The Secretary of War, according to a special from Washington, has submitted to the Department of Justice, a statement of the condition of affairs found by the War Department to exist in the division of the late freedmen's bureau, charged with the settlement of bounties to colored soldiers. The statement sets forth that the claimants for whom treasury certificates have been issued by the Freedmen's Bureau for payment of bounties, never received their money, although they were marked on the records of the bureau as paid; reported to the treasurer by the disbursing officer of the bureau as paid and so credited in the settlement of his account. For this reason the Secretary of War wishes to know the degree of responsibility, and the law, of General O. Howard and his disbursing officer, General Bullock. When the War Department took possession of the records of the bureau, unpaid claims were found amounting to $700,000, and $38,000 were found unpaid, although reported to the treasurer and there credited as paid.

The Arkansas River.

The Arkansas river, one of the longest in the Union, in its winding course measures nearly 2,000 miles. Its source is in the Rocky Mountains, at an altitude of about ten thousand feet. One peculiarity of this stream is, that it banks so often full of water, that it is a flood. This is accounted for in that it is composed of sand and gravel, and the sand of the adjacent lands spreads itself through the ground, instead of overlying the country, as would be the case if the soil was composed of clay. Water for family use is abundant, pure and soft. A pipe is driven into the ground twenty or twenty-five feet, a pump attached, and in working order, in a few hours, at an expense of from fifteen to seventeen cents, this soil will produce, in great abundance, corn, oats, wheat, cotton, sugar, potatoes, broom corn, peanuts, tobacco, and fruit.

THE INDIAN'S WRONGS.

Some of the Cruelties of Frontiersmen.

J. Lovejoy, of Pittsfield, Ill., writes the following to the Chicago Times:

"I was among the first of the whites that entered the country of the Indians, which was in the year 1811. I remained in that country ten years. The Indians at the time the whites entered the country were in a powerful tribe, noted for their warlike propensities. Nature had blessed them with abundance of game; they had their deer snares, and all this was an easy matter for them to entrap all the game they wanted. Also, Rogue river and its tributaries abounded with a plentiful supply of fish, and they had no trouble to obtain all they wanted. The white man with his gun killed and spared their game, also, the miner maddened their streams, so that they could not catch any fish."

"Starvation stared them in the face. The result was that occasionally they would kill a beef or a pork mule, and then the whites would kill an Indian. The Indians would retaliate, and kill a white man; quite a number of whites and Indians were killed in this way until the summer of 1838, when the Indians proclaimed war against the whites, which war lasted about three months, and then a treaty was made; the substance of the treaty was that if the Indians killed a white man, the murderer was to be delivered up to the whites, and should be tried by law, and if found guilty, was to be hung."

"About two months after the treaty, a white man was killed on the Skakon mountain, between Yreka and Jacksonville. He had a pack train, which was laden with miners' supplies. The Indians took the pack train, and when it was found out it created quite an excitement, and the whites, through the Indian agent, demanded the murderers. The Indians brought in three young warriors, delivered them up to the whites, and they were tried and hung."

"A short time after that, a white man killed an Indian. They demanded justice, wanted the white man tried and hung, which was not done. The Indians became very much dissatisfied. Quite a number of Indians were killed by the whites, but the whites were never punished for it. Several Indians were hung for killing one white man, which was on this way until the fall of 1853, when the Indians made a general outbreak, and commencing at the head of Rogue River Valley, killed men, women, and children, burned all farm houses, and ran off the stock, then the cry was war to the knife."

"The Governor of Oregon issued a proclamation calling on all volunteers, which, with the aid of 300 or 400 regulars, was sent in pursuit of the Indians. The war lasted for about nine months, then both parties were tired of fighting, and peace was made. The Indians moved on a reserve away from the whites, and we had no more trouble with Indians."

"I will mention one fact to show that whites in some instances were as depraved and base as the Indians could possibly be. During the war of 1855 (I think in November) thirty volunteers were detailed to guard a pack train from Fort Vanney, on Rogue river, to Illinois Valley."

"I was among the number. We were six miles on our way when we discovered an Indian hut—a smoke coming out of it. It was only about a quarter of a mile off the road, and some five or six of us rode up to it, and surrounding it, demanded that the occupants come out, the result of which was the capture of two squaws, one having a child of about two years old. They reported that there was a large body of Indians on ahead of us; so we concluded we would take them on to the command."

"When we got back to the train, and Mr. Fowler, who was superintendent of the train, and in part owner, heard the report that the squaws made, was ready to be reinforced, and requested me to go back to Fort Vanney, report to the commanding officer, and ask for reinforcements; which I did. When I got to the fort, the commanding officer would not send any reinforcements, therefore I started back to overtake the train by my own means."

"When I got some three miles beyond where I left the train, I saw the two squaws and infants lying a short distance from the road, all dead."

"Mr. Fowler had detailed two men to guard the squaws, and follow along after the train. Their excuse was that the squaws could not keep up, so they thought the best plan was to kill them."

"Some two months after this inhuman act was perpetrated, a gentleman with his wife (I think the name was Bentley) was traveling on route for the Atlantic States. They were fortunate to have a guard of U. S. dragoons. When they were opposite where these squaws were, the Indian fired several shots at Mrs. Bentley, but the soldiers surrounded her, and moving on at pretty rapid speed, succeeded in making their escape, though several bullets passed through her clothing. One white woman they took prisoner at the beginning of the war, and they never killed her until after they found these two squaws."

Three Persons Burned to Death.

From the Boston Herald (Sat.), Dec. 31st.

Joseph Dalrymple and family, consisting of wife, daughter (aged 12), and son (aged 10), lived in a story-and-a-half frame-house, situated on one of the best farms in Elkhart county. About 9 o'clock last Wednesday night the little son took a candle and went up stairs to bed. Mr. Dalrymple soon retired, and had gone to sleep when smoke was discovered coming from the upper portion of the building, by the wife and daughter who were sitting up engaged in reading. Mr. Dalrymple was immediately aroused, and they all rushed up stairs to discover the source of the smoke and to awake the boy. It was discovered that the stove had been ignited from the candle, and was rapidly burning. In his excitement Mr. Dalrymple grabbed it and rushed down the stairway, leaving an impenetrable volume of smoke behind, with the women and boy still in the chamber. At this moment a son-in-law of Mr. Dalrymple arrived, and every effort was made to rescue them from a fiery death; but the flames had increased and spread so rapidly that the attempt was futile, and they had the incredible agony of standing helplessly by and knowing that the dear ones were fast becoming food for the hungry flames. The few charred remains were gathered up, and were lying and deposited together in a coffin."

In speaking of King Mirambo, of Central Africa, the Court Journal says that a monarch, who takes the title of Mirambo, and who is a great conqueror, sent from missionary inspired ladies of Aberdeen, split them in halves, all them with sand, and make a war club of each leg, cannot be forgiven upon the ground of mere eccentricity."

Fecondity of Plants.

It is said that probably about 60,000,000 or 70,000,000 fish are taken from the sea annually around the shores of Newfoundland. But even that quantity seems small when we consider that the cod yields something like 3,500,000 eggs each season, and even 8,000,000 have been found in a single cod! Other fish, though not equal to the cod in the number of their spawn, are also wonderfully prolific. A herring six or seven ounces in weight is provided with about 38,000 ova. After making all reasonable allowances for the destruction of eggs and of the young, it has been calculated that in three years a single pair of herrings would produce 154,000,000. Buffon said that if the herring spawn were left to breed and multiply undisturbed for a period of twenty years they would yield a fish bulk equal to the globe on which we live. The cod far surpasses the herring in fecundity. Were it not that vast numbers of the eggs are destroyed by parasites, so multiply as to fill the water completely."

DULUTH!
 A THING LONG NEEDED. This pamphlet sets forth the location, advantages, resources and the unanswerable argument on which is based expectations of the rapid growth and commercial greatness of this Water Gate of the Northwest. It tells of prices of lots; Wages, Rents, Provisions, Climate, Soil, amount and character of business; of chances for investments; in short, answers the thousand questions put by those who desire to invest or live in the West. It also gives a clear account of the region tributary to the Northern Pacific Railroad.
 Three valuable maps accompany it: the first shows the Railroad and Water courses from the Atlantic to the Pacific; the second shows the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad with its locations of Iron, Coal, Timber, Gold, Silver, Farming and Grazing lands, the township divisions of Minnesota, and the entire Railroad System of Minnesota and Wisconsin. The third shows the harbor system of Duluth and Superior, location of elevator, docks, canal, surroundings, with sanitary divisions, by which every lot in either city can be designated.
