WILL CONGRESS HELP THE NORTHERN PACIFIC?

This is a question that is agitating the mind of the inhabitants of this region at present, and should be a matter of great solicitude with everybody in the west, and in fact of the whole country. There is no use of any great or voluminous argument being offered in defense of the proposition that Congress should, in its duty, devise means by which the Northern Pacific Railroad could and would be shored to completion from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean without delay. So far as we here are concerned we shall not suffer if the Road is not built through for five or ten years to come. The Road is in successful operation a distance of nearly six hundred miles now, to the Missouri River, and is not only keeping up all expenses of its operation but is saving money. The country is being filled up all along with a thrifty, intelligent people, and in short the people are established and the resources of the Northern Pacific region are proving to be far in advance of the hopes of its most sanguine friends. But so far as the general good of the State, the Northwest, and the whole country is concerned, we believe that the success of the bill soliciting aid now in the hands of Congress, is a thing to be devoutly wished. From a military standpoint alone, millions of money would in a very few years be saved to the country by its completion, and the government would at once become master of the country and its dusky contents from end to end. The untold wealth of the continent would at once be developed—its mineral, agricultural and grazing resources—and the immense addition to the revenues of the country would soon wipe out the indebtedness of the Government. The necessity and importance of the completion of the Northern Pacific, to the country, is so plain and palpable that it will not admit of discussion at all. It is a plain, simple matter of business, wherein the Government is to be the principal beneficiary. There is no project that has ever been undertaken of more importance to the nation than a railway across this portion of the continent, and no project has ever been entered into whereby the Government will realize so speedily a return nor so large a dividend as by the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. All that is asked of Congress is, that the Government may stand security for the bonds necessary to complete the Road, and take for its security all the land grant and property of the Road which is tendered by the bill as security to the Government by the company, and which is more than doubly ample to secure it in any possible event. We think if Congressmen reject this proposition, they will have proved themselves too short sighted, too narrow minded, to be worthy their positions. Any congressman, from whatever quarter, can consistently advocate and support this measure at the next session and justify himself completely before the most prejudiced constituency; for in advocating the completion of the Northern Pacific and supporting any reasonable measure for its assistance to that end, they will be conferring a lasting benefit on the country as a whole, adding to the strength of the government, and working to the advantage of those whom he represents in the most effective manner that could be possible. We have sufficient faith in the sagacity of Congress, and in its stamias as a body of representative men, to fully believe they will give the Northern Pacific the indirect aid asked for, early in the coming session.

The editor of the Pine County News evidently sees in the same light as does the editor of the Brainerd Tribune in regard to the prepaying of postage after Jan. 1st, at least the last issue of the News contained a verbatim editorial, under the head of "Notice," on that subject, of that which appeared in the Tribune of Nov. 6th.—Perham News.

The above is not the first instance where the Pine City fellows have appropriated our thunder to themselves. If the thing is to continue, we shall insist on them fixing our salary as editor of their paper.

There is a fair prospect that the proud Francis Du Puy Moulton will go to the Penitentiary for his atrocious and unprovoked assault on the character of Miss E. D. Proctor. He is a fit companion piece to the old "Boss," and should be set up alongside of him.

Our city hotels are doing a lively business.

Some Curiosities.

Dropping into the office of our friend, Dr. J. C. Rosser, the other day, we enjoyed a most pleasant hour. The Doctor, wherever known is esteemed a man of culture and refinement, a master in his profession, a social lord, and a gentleman in the finest construction of the term. Dr. Rosser has charge of the Northern Pacific Medical Department, and during his occupancy of their fine medical office he has added many rare specimens to the museum thereto attached. Among the latest additions, we notice a fully developed skull of a white man, found close to Crystal Springs, which are located on the Northern Pacific in Dakota, about midway between Fargo and Bismarck. The skull gives every evidence of having been at one time, many decades ago, the "cap-sheaf" to an intelligent anatomy, and is certainly the finest specimen in the collection of skulls. Tradition among the Indians in that region leads to the almost positive fact that it is the skull of an English Lord, who many years ago made a tour to the Selkirk Settlement, and who with his party, undertook the exploration of the country across from the Red River to the Missouri River, but who, about midway in that unexplored country, fell into the hands of the hostile natives; the Chief (the Lord) of the party was taken into captivity and was massacred at the verge of the wonderful springs mentioned, and his body left to decay and his bones to bleach on the bosom of the plains, until the onward progress of civilization came along and found this relic of a once highly intelligent and adventurous man; while the remainder of the party shared a similar fate in other directions; but the superstition of the natives taught them that the most important of the party of strange white beings should, of right to the Great Spirit, be slaughtered at the most sacred spot in their domain, which was at what is now known as the celebrated Crystal Springs, on the Northern Pacific. A hole through the right side of the crown of the head, seems to show that he was killed by the stroke of a pointed war club, made of flint stone, occasionally seen among the Sioux even at this late day.

Another skull is of a young native, which belonged undoubtedly to the pre-historic race of this vast country, or in other words, the Mound Builder's period. The reasons for this conclusion are these:

The skull itself differs in several respects from those of the natives of the present day, and exhibits a much higher degree of intellect and cultivation; a stronger reason is, that this one seems to have been regularly interred—a mode of burial generally accorded to the famous Mound Builders, while the natives of more modern times "bury their dead in a tree-top or on a scaffold."

Many other fossiliferous specimens are to be seen, which excite the wonder of the intelligent mind; some human bones that have been buried so long that they have turned into solid stone, but are perfect as may be in their form. One bone in particular, was well worthy the study of those who understand the human anatomy. It is a bone, the Doctor informed us, that belonged to the arm from the elbow to the shoulder. Its peculiarity was in the raised ridges extending along its length, which never appear in any degree whatever on that bone unless the man be a Hercules of strength and physical power; this being the case, the possessor of this petrified bone must have been a terror, and had a muscle upon which could be cracked anything from a hazelnut to a quartz rock, without breaking the skin.

Several most wonderful geological specimens ornament Dr. Rosser's cabinet, which for real merit in the kingdom of geology, surpass anything we have ever had the pleasure of examining, all selected from along the Northern Pacific.

Speaking of the practice of the natives of the present day, in "burying their dead in the tree tops," calls to our mind an item we had forgotten to mention. Dr. Rosser has some billets of wood cut from a tree recently, that contain bones thoroughly imbedded in the sound wood, having been placed in the fork of the tree many years ago, the tree as it grew enclosed and preserved them as perfectly as though petrified, until the tree was cut down and split open, disclosed them in their wonderful tomb.

More Greenbacks, or "Bust!"

That's what's the matter! Money! Green-Back Money! We want money. We want it bad! We must have money, you know. This thing of sitting on the corner and trading jack-knives with every man you owe, allowing "boot," in hopes to wear out a hundred dollars of a balance due, has become most fearfully "played."

That's what everybody knows, and that's what scratched their ballots so, at the recent Republican "unpleasantness" in twenty or thirty States.

We are a Republican! That is, we want to be a Republican. If we are not, what are we? And if not—why not? That is the conundrum now in order.

We have been able to applaud all things thus far done by the Republican party, from top to bottom, front to back.

But when it goes back on the greenback, we become stirred—that act brushed our feathers the wrong way, and we are riled.

If Grant mistook us for a Judas, and believed our penchant was in the direction of gold, he mistook his man, that's all.

And judging from the word they sent him on the 3d inst., the woods are full of not Judases.

And now he's scared about it, when it's too late; and the gold-bottomed aristocrats that got him to veto the currency bill last winter, and in whose interest he seems to be running the machine, are flocking to Washington with more timber to splinter his back on the greenback question during the coming session of Congress; and they will doubtless try to splinter lots of weak knees in Congress, too.

But the West is at the present time standing on its ear, with General JOHN A. LOOAN in command.

Our banners bear the inscription, "More Greenbacks, or Bust!"

Not a few more, either, but "eternal slathers of 'em," you know.

The last election jarred Grant and all these eastern nabobs' teeth loose, and now if the next Congress don't set the greenback mill going, and keep it grinding till the West yells whom! the next time we'll shake the whole crew out of their breeches.

We are out of meat, and must have that woodchuck!

There isn't money enough to-day in all the western States to run a pea-nut stand, on a cash basis.

If Congress does it, and Grant does it, why the Republican party will elect another President. If they don't do it, they will not elect another President, nor another constable, nor another anything.

Death of Mrs. J. M. White.

We are sorry to chronicle the death of Charlotte Edwards, consort of our estimable citizen, Mr. James M. White which occurred on Thursday last week, after a lingering illness of eleven months, of dropsy of the heart. Mrs. White was sixty-two years old, at the time of her death, and was a most excellent Christian lady. During her long illness she was patient and resigned and went to sleep in death enjoying a bright hope of a glorious immortality. The funeral took place on Sunday last, and the remains were followed to their final resting place by a large cortege of our citizens. Mrs. White was the daughter of Captain Edwards, of East Hampton, L. I., (a man of considerable note in his time), and her parents were members of the Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher's church and were married by that distinguished divine. Mrs. White had been the loving mother of seven children, and leaves, also, twelve grand children. Mr. White, with his family, has the sincere sympathy of his many friends in Brainerd, in this his sad bereavement.

CARD OF THANKS.

I hereby tender my heartfelt thanks to the many kind friends of myself and family in Brainerd, for their generous assistance and sympathy during the illness of my beloved wife, now deceased. My gratitude is more than I can express; and it is my prayer that when each of them comes to arrive at the verge of time, and the door of eternity, their lot may be cast among such friends as I have found here during my sorrow.

JAMES M. WHITE.

SHIPMENTS OF EVERGREENS.—Our fellow townsmen, Messrs. Keating & Hallett, have shipped a car load of beautiful evergreen Christmas trees—principally balsam of fir—to Chicago, and also some twenty sacks of running pine and prince's feather, with which to make wreaths and other ornaments. The car contained a thousand trees, which will unquestionably be the finest Christmas trees ever introduced into Chicago, and the enterprising firm will doubtless realize handsomely on their venture. Mr. Keating accompanied the trees, and will retail them out.

A BOY HUNTER.—Master Lawrence Reynolds, twelve years old, went out hunting on Monday last, and when about a mile from town, came across a fine deer. He took a "dead rest," with the front end of his gun in the direction of the animal, pulled the trigger, and killed the deer in its tracks. To say that he is proud of his wonderful feat would not half express it, and he has a right to be. All the boys in town are wearing guns now, and speak nothing but the lingo of the wild hunter.

VENISON is so plentiful in this town now that one can scarcely get along the streets without stumbling over the carcasses. Not less than two hundred deer have been killed in this immediate vicinity within the past month, besides some bear. The venison this season is of the very finest quality, savory, of a delicious flavor, and is extraordinarily fat.

THANKSGIVING DAY brought with it a heavy fall of snow, and the first real cold, windy, awfully rough day of the season. Towards evening the snow blew in clouds, and it was freezing cold.

O. J. JOHNSON, ESQ., one of the gentlemanly Mail Agents of the N. P. R. R., dropped in to see us on Saturday evening last. O. J. is the same jolly sort as of yore, and makes a good officer.

A big turkey shoot was enjoyed by the sharpshooters on Thanksgiving. It was given by Messrs. French & Hare, of the New Le Bon Ton Saloon.

MR. J. E. POWEN, Land Commissioner N. P. R. R., who has been east for some time, accompanied by his family, returned a few days ago to St. Paul.

MR. KINDRED, Chief Clerk in Mr. Powen's office, left on Monday last for a visit of a week or so to Chicago. We are not positively informed as to whether friend K. will bring his family back with him, or not—hope he may, however.

THE NEW HOTEL at Fargo, Messrs. Hubbard & Tyler, Prop's, will be completed Dec. 1st, and will be opened in a formal manner on the evening of Dec. 8th, by a grand ball, etc. It is a magnificent hotel, and will come as near being first class, in all its appointments, as any public house in Minnesota. May it have a long and prosperous run.

CHARLEY WILSON had a great raffle for turkeys, chickens, etc., on Wednesday evening last, and thereby very many persons had their palate tickled with poultry (during the process of giving thanks on Thursday) that otherwise would not, and it is presumed their thanks were proportionately strengthened.

JUDGING from the way that many people of the west spend a National Thanksgiving Day, we calculate that if there was a remarkably this year for temporal blessings to come along, they would get up an indignation meeting, and read the riot act, instead of returning thanks.

We were pleased at receiving a call from our friend Orrin Elliott of Duluth, one day this week. Orrin is always welcome to our earthly dominions, as he happens to be one of the "whitest headed" boys in these parts.

H. G. RISING, formerly editor of the Glenwood Eagle, has begun the publication of the Ledger at La Harpe, Hancock county, Ill.

Tax bog-land which sailed into the Duluth harbor, some time since, has already been staked off into town lots.

For two years past Mr. T. H. Glenn, editor-in-chief of Our FERRIS FRIEND—a journalist of long experience and extensive general information—has been engaged on and has completed a book of great interest and value, entitled THE HOME GUNS. As its name indicates, it is intended as a guide in all matters pertaining to the Home, and as it is one of the most complete and valuable books ever published, it must have a very large sale. We shall have more to say of this important and useful book at another time. It is sold only by agents, and published by The Beverly Company, Chicago. An advertisement of THE HOME GUNS will be found in another column of this issue.

"A SELL ON THE OLD MAN," THAT DIDN'T STRIKE.

At Charley Wilson's poultry raffle on Wednesday evening last, the chief attraction was a splendid young porker, weighing a hundred pounds or so, which was to be given to the person throwing the lowest number during the evening. The young rooster fell to the lot of one of the principal hotel keepers in town, but upon going out to shoulder his pig, it didn't seem to be present in its accustomed place, in front of the store, to any great extent; in fact it wasn't there, no how, and the "old man," who won the pig wended his way home and went to bed.

As soon as it was determined who had won the pig, some three or four of the boys—who sometimes collect the tickets, smash baggage, and twist up the breaks on a railroad in this part of the country—saw that this was just the moment to play a severe joke on "the old man," an opportunity they had long been waiting for. So, slipping quietly out, they shouldered Mr. pig and toted him off to an oyster saloon where they pawmed him for a big oyster supper for the party, including all the etceteras, and after having a magnificent time they went to their boarding houses and turned in. The rising sun of Thanksgiving Day found the "old man" stirring, and after performing his usual ablutions, straightening his hair, and eating a square meal, he called down at the Justice's office, procured a warrant, placed it in the hands of Sheriff McKay, with a request that he bring forth the hog, and the hog feeds, if they were to be found anywhere in this end of the State. Then he went home, to smoke his cigar and read the Tribune. In less than an hour the porker was found, intact, and about that time four of those who had eaten oysters and things the night before, got wind of what was in the wind, and they became very nervous, like; for they saw the "old man" had about him a decidedly "business" look that morning. About that time a lawyer kind of hinted to the boys that he positively knew the "old man" wasn't into a very jolting humor that morning, and he advised them to slip right over to the Squire's office, plead guilty, and dough over a "U" cack, before the Sheriff struck their trail, for the old man was bound to find out who it was, if it took him all summer, and put them through to the full extent of the law. The boys were now scared in earnest, and galloped over to the Squire's office, acknowledged the corn, paid in their money, and then rushed across through the alley to the oyster saloon and paid up the big bill they had contracted to pay in pork, and then "entered all in a row up to the train that was just ringing its gingle, preparatory to starting west. They went out as far as Motley and stopped off to enjoy a day's rabbit hunt, and figure out, if possible, who the joke was actually on in that little pork transaction. It is generally believed, however, that though they are just spoiling to get off a joke on the old man, they have sworn an awful swear that they will wait till some cheaper plan presents itself. "Yer can't beat the old man."

P. S.—That pig is a most festive pig to be sure—for a dead pig! After dinner, as we sat in our office away down town, toasting our toes and smoking a cigar, (two for a cent) our eldest little girl came into our presence, her face all aglow with the cold, and informed us, all in a breath, that there was a pig in the kitchen at home, and that her ma-ma could not get it out; and further that our presence was desired just as quickly as we could run to our domicile, and get the miserable intruder out of the house—and it had frightened the baby almost into hysterics, besides. We snatched on our coat, pulled our hat down over our ears, and went up the street at a speed of twenty miles an hour. We gathered a club on our way, frowned a terrible frown, and rushed into the gate, leaving it wide open behind us, so as to drive the brute into the street—and upon arriving at the back door, we spat on our hands and got our club into position to do slaughter upon the impudent hog that had dared invade our cot and chase the whole family up stairs. We opened the door and bounded in to the kitchen with drawn blades, and—well, yes; there lay that raffe porker in the middle of the stove, surrounded by the family, who immediately informed us amid a shower of laughter, that the pig had their consent to remain. We said "ye," you know, and then we went down town again, returning thanks as became us, on Thanksgiving Day. That hog will not "sell" any other person, that we know of; unless he gets out of the park barrel, and out of the cellar, and if he does, why, just let 'er rip!

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Salt for Stock.

All the herbivorous domestic animals are fond of salt; this fact, observed from remote antiquity, was acknowledged by the Greek and Roman farmers, and the Virgin, who, in his Gregees, did nothing more than to put into immortal verse the precepts of the agriculturists of Greece, recommended that adult sheep should each have ten grammes of salt, (or 150 grains), or 150-175ths of an ounce, added to the ration of their regular ration of food.

The just daily ration of salt for adult horned cattle, observation and experience has shown to be 20 grammes (or 1,800 grains, or about four ounces). For horses of average weight and size, seventy grammes (or 1,050 grains, or 24.10 ounces), is the daily ration. Salt increases the quantity of butter in cows' milk; it accelerates the fattening of cattle destined for the butcher by increasing at the same time their appetite and the strength of their digestive organs.

Salt added to fodder of the second quality corrects its faults; it will be eaten even by high-fed animals, which would refuse it, were it not lightly salted. Its utility is clearly recognized in Switzerland and Germany, where the fact has taken the form of a proverb, "A pound of salt makes ten pounds of flesh." This is not rigorously true; salt neither contributes to the maintenance nor the fattening of cattle and other herbivorous domestic animals. It does not act in the manner of a stimulant, but serves solely to make animals profit completely by the nourishing principles contained in their rations.

Rotation of Crops.

In order to sustain the fertility of the soil, and at the same time to provide nutritious food for live stock, a rotation of crops is necessary. In no country where land is plenty and the soil rich, crops of some kind may be grown for several years without much decrease in the acreable product, but, by degrees, the repetition of the same crop begins to tell on the land, and the soil is gradually impoverished after wheat, the ingredients for building up the plants, and forming the grain, become exhausted, weeds and destructive insects increase, and the necessity of fallowing or growing green crops becomes apparent.

In the improved systems of husbandry, the land is never allowed to remain idle for a year; it has been abandoned and drilled green crops substituted. In looking over the scorched pastures during a season like the present, it receives the eye to see a field of rutabagas, turnips, or low-growing crops, in the desert, promising sustenance to the suffering animals, but such fields are few and far between, and stock will continue to suffer for want of nutritious food in the fall, winter and spring, until the growing of green crops becomes general. It has been ascertained that the growth of 1,000 acres of wheat produces a rotation of answer is that he must do so or exhaust the soil. It is better to adopt a mixed system of husbandry, to grow wheat, which scourges the soil, and to substitute for it broad-leaved plants such as clover, turnips, mangolds and beets, which abstract from the soil a considerable portion of their ingredients. If wheat crops are grown repeatedly, without restoring anything that has been carried away, the acreable yield gradually diminishes, and finally the soil becomes exhausted. The use of manures to restore to the soil its fertility, by returning a compensation for the ingredients that have been carried away by the crops.

Winter wheat, occupying the ground from September to July or August, is favorable to the growth of weeds, which become very numerous if the soil has not been thoroughly cleaned by the culture of the previous crop. Root crops afford an excellent opportunity for exterminating weeds, deepening soil, and enriching it by manure. Wheat and other cereals require a considerable amount of phosphate of acid, silica and ammonia. Leguminous crops take up large portions of lime; root crops absorb lime and potash. The crops should be suited to the nature of the soil and varied with each other, so that while the greatest amount of produce is raised off the ground, still the soil shall not be exhausted but be able to produce a heart and capable of yielding large crops of cereals, legumes, roots or grasses, in systematic rotation.

Making Manure on the Farm.

Every farm should furnish its own resources for manure, for, through, near cities, the wise farmer avails himself of whatever waste matter he can get that is convertible into manure, the crops there cultivated are generally of an exhausting nature, and fully sufficient to carry off the extra fertility so added. But only a comparatively small number of farms are able to furnish their own cities so that their owners can derive themselves of this source of increasing the crops, and therefore the great number are obliged to fall back upon the resource of the farm itself. It is an English maxim that "a good farm is like a good joint of meat, that only requires basting with its own drippings."

How many who have opened new farms on virgin soils have let them go as good as they found them? The history of all countries answers, Very few. Man first impoverishes and then, by the most laborious and costly means, refertilizes the worn soil. How quickly the farmers of the West are bringing their lands to that state when this refertilization will be the all-important question, the decreased and constantly decreasing averages of grain per acre will tell.

There are two sorts of pork fat for lard. The leaf-fat, which is the best, and the fat that adheres to the entrails. These two fats should be boiled separately. They do not mean by this, that the fat we get from the West when it has become necessary to use an elaborate system of making manure and compost should be followed, although it might easily be demonstrated that in many sections such a course would be profitable.

Northwest Tribune.

What a Washington Magazine Thinks of the Future of Minnesota.

A late number of the Republic, a monthly magazine devoted to the dissemination of political information, and published at the National Capital, contains a long and well written sketch of the past, present and prospective of Minnesota, from which the concluding portion is taken as follows:

So far as the extent of a magazine article will admit, we have endeavored to lay before the reader a faithful statement of the history and present features of this young Northwest State. From a Territory twenty-five years ago, with less than five thousand white inhabitants, Minnesota has become a State embracing a population of nearly a million of hardy, robust, and energetic people, with a climate eminently adapted to preserve and perpetuate those qualities in men so essential to the State's growth and greatness in its future generations.

With a strong, rich soil and a well watered surface, covering an area nearly equal to that of all the New England States, or eight times as large as that of Belgium, which now carries a population of over 5,900,000, Minnesota has within itself the means of sustaining 40,000,000 of people. Lying, as it does, midway on the continent, and in the direct and shortest route from the great Atlantic cities and lakes to the Pacific ocean, and between England and China, Minnesota can not fail to become, in the near future, one of the most important centers, not only of continental commerce, but also on the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad, the highway and one of the main depots of a large portion of the commerce between the Eastern and European quarters of the globe. The late Hon. William H. Seward knew well the boundaries and understood the capacities of almost every foot of this continent, from Sitka to St. John's, and he knew whereof he spoke when he said, in a speech at St. Paul, in 1860:

Here is the place—the central place—where the agriculture of the richest region of North America must pour out its tributes to the whole world. On the east, all along the shore of Lake Superior, and west, stretching in one broad plain in a belt quite across the continent, is a country where State after State is yet to arise, and where the productions for the support of human society in their old crowded States must be brought forth.

I now believe that the ultimate last seat of government on this great continent will be found somewhere within a circle or radius not very far from the spot on which I stand, at the head of navigation on the Mississippi river.

The Prospective Speaker.
As Fernando Wood has aspirations for the Speakership of the next House of Representatives, it may be just as well to recall the fact that during our great rebellion he was the individual who called upon Lord Lyons, the British Ambassador, while in New York, in order to obtain the assistance of England to secure the independence of the slaveholding States. It was really an atrocious treason, but it commended him strongly to the favor of the Bourbon Democracy. Mr. Wood was also an unfinching and unrepentant advocate of the back pay grab, but that has not affected his reputation in the least with the Bourbon Democracy.

RATHER PROLIFIC.—The Green Bay, Wis., country is fully up to Minnesota in fertility as regards its productive-ness of human crops, at least. On the 20th ult., Mrs. Hart, wife of a butcher in the town of Deperre, gave birth to five well developed babes—four boys and one girl. One of the male children was born dead, and another died soon after. The mother and remaining three children were doing well at last accounts.

This is too many to suit us.

DIED!
PEACH.—At Wadena, Minn., Nov. 26th, 1874, Mrs. EMILY T., wife of A. N. PEACH, aged 39 years, formerly of Thompson, Minn.
Duluth papers please copy.
Mrs. Peach has been an invalid for many years, and suffered very much from Consumption. She came here with her husband and family last summer, in the hope that a change might result for the better. But her disease was of such long standing that there seemed to be no marked change for the better, and although it was felt she could not long remain on earth, nevertheless her death seemed to come quite sudden. But she died the death of a Christian, fully prepared to meet her Maker. She leaves a fond husband and four children to mourn her loss.

The St. Paul papers don't print, on holidays. We do, but ours is a metropolitan sheet, which makes all the difference in the world.

Old Uncle Chadbourne's composition would hardly pass muster as a literary success.
