

LOST TREASURES

"I have done my errand," said Oliver, preparing to depart. "If the king will, I will go home and seek my reward. I have brought back the treasure you were so kind to entrust to me, and I have done so faithfully in all things. If not, you know well how to punish me. I will go home and seek my reward." He bowed low and turned to go.

"Wait," said the king, "I have a question to ask of you. How did you come by this treasure? It is not of the king's." Oliver told him the whole story of his adventures, from the time he was taken prisoner to the time he was rescued by the duke and the king.

"I will give you a reward," said the king, "for the good service you have done me. I will give you the dukedom of Normandy, and I will give you the hand of my daughter in marriage." Oliver bowed low and thanked the king.

ROLAND AND OLIVER

A LEGION OF CHIVALRY.
The city of Valence is closely besieged, for Duke Girard's host is at fever's heat. His soldiers are weary, his horses are worn, and his provisions are scarce. He has sent for his two sons, Roland and Oliver, to come to his aid. They have brought with them a large number of knights and squires, and they have also brought with them a large number of horses and mules.

"I will go to the aid of my father," said Roland, "and I will bring back the treasure you were so kind to entrust to me." Oliver went to the aid of his father, and he brought back the treasure.

THE GREAT BATTLE

"I have done my errand," said Oliver, preparing to depart. "If the king will, I will go home and seek my reward. I have brought back the treasure you were so kind to entrust to me, and I have done so faithfully in all things. If not, you know well how to punish me. I will go home and seek my reward." He bowed low and turned to go.
