Efforts are being put forth to organize a brass band in Brainerd. The citizens should take hold of such matters and not let Brainerd be so behind every one of her sister villages in a little enterprise like this. We should have a good band as well as an efficient fire company.

Considerable dissatisfaction has arisen over the amount of poll-tax levied in this precinct. A great many declare a personal and aggressive war in opposition to its payment, while others are willing to abide thereby providing the entire amount shall be judiciously expended in local improvements, and not unnecessarily squandered where it will result in little or no benefit to any one.

The Stearns county Tribune thinks we indulge in too many personalities to succeed. If we are say more flip in this direction than Bro. Bowser, we have thus far failed to discover the fact. We aim to deal in plain and reliable facts, and this is a far more creditable manner of operating than to beat around the bush and endeavor to smother crime and actual realities because they necessitate an atom of personality.

There is to be an entertainment given in aid of The Ladies Guild, St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of Brainerd, on next Wednesday evening. Arrangements have been completed for a literary feast of rare attraction, consisting chiefly of dramatic readings by Mrs. Woodhouse, whose reputed talent alone should insure her a good house. Refreshments will be served in connection, and everybody is to be prepared for a general good time. Let the people of the town here attend show their appreciation of matters of this kind, and evince a spirit of enterprise in its behalf.

Oh, that we had a thunderbass mounted in this office on a revolving pivot, that would carry a thousand miles! The first thing we would do would be to aim it at the hoary head of the ass-tute Conkling and his leech-like "scogs" and blow the last cuss among them into h—purgatory. This tampering with the administration has developed into a species of "dimplocht-hesnes" that can't be tolerated any longer by those having the welfare of the government at heart.

A party of Northern Pacific officials arrived here on Tuesday evening, from St Paul; Gen. Manager Haupt, Supt. Towne, Mr. A. E. Taylor, the roadmaster, and Mr. S. D. Mason, engineer of the Minnesota Division. Mrs. Haupt, who quite frequently accompanies her husband on his trips, was also in the party. On Wednesday morning they went to Superior to look over matters pertaining to the completion of the road to that point, work on on which will commence, it is expected, about the first of June. Mr. H. W. Shaw, chairman of the Superior board of supervisors, accompanied the party from Brainerd to Duluth, and it is to be supposed that he gave them valuable information in regard to the other side of the bay.—Duluth News.

MORTUARY.

The Angel of Death and the Sickle of Time.

MRS. OLENA EKKLOM.

The subject of this sketch was born in Trondhjim, Norway, in 1838, and died in Brainerd, May 4th, 1881, aged 22 years, 7 months and 2 days. The deceased, whose maiden name was Olena Peterson, was married to Joseph Ekklom, on the 21st day of August, 1880, the ceremony taking place in this village, where they have resided ever since. She had been sick for a period of some four or five weeks, and although everything possible was done for her recovery, the bereaved husband was forced to part with his chosen companion, and is again left alone in a cold and merciless world. The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. R. A. Beard at the Methodist church, and the remains were interred in the Brainerd cemetery. The husband desires to say that he has great reason to feel thankful for the kind attention and interest manifested in behalf of his beloved wife during her last illness, and the friendly aid rendered in the last solemn rites.

JOHN R. PEGG,

Who died May the 10th, 1881, was born in England, Dec. 22d, 1826, and came to this country in his early years, stopping in Pittsburg, Pa., where he resided for several years. Mr. Pegg came to Brainerd about ten years ago, and for a period of six or seven years held the position of foreman in the blacksmithing department of the N. P. Railroad shops, but about three years ago severed his connection therewith, and turned his attention to the more quiet avocation of a tiller of the soil, he having a good farm of several hundred acres located about four miles east of town. Last winter he again commenced work in the shops, resulting in an over strain of his physical endurance and prostrating him in a severe spell of sickness from which he never fully recovered. The best medical skill that could be secured was brought into requisition, but all to no avail, as a steady decline in health was observable from the time of his previous illness. Last Tuesday he had as was his custom, gone out to the barn to attend to the wants of his stock, and one of the members of the family having occasion to go to the barn shortly afterward, discovered him lying on the floor in an unconscious condition. He was immediately taken to the house, and expired in a short time. His disease was pronounced by the physician to have arisen from an affection of the heart. Mr. Pegg was always recognized as one of the leading spirits of the community, and universally respected and honored by all who knew him. An attentive husband, a kind and indulgent father, and a benevolent and obliging neighbor, his loss will be deeply felt throughout the entire neighborhood. He was one of the councilmen of Brainerd at the time of its incorporation, and a prominent member of the Methodist church at this place. The funeral ceremonies were observed at the Methodist church with Masonic rites, and the body interred in the Brainerd cemetery. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn his demise.

Teach Your Boys.

Teach them that a true lady may be found in calico as frequently as in velvet.

Teach them that a common school education with common sense, is better than a college education without it.

Teach them that one good honest trade, well mastered, is worth a dozen beggarly "professions."

Teach them that honesty is the best policy, that it is better to be poor than to be rich on the profits of "doctored whiskey," and point your precept by the examples of those who are suffering the torments of the damned.

Teach them to respect their elders and themselves.

Teach them that, as they expect to be men some day, they can not too soon learn to protect the weaker than themselves.

Teach them by your example that smoking in moderation, though the less of vices to which men are heirs, is disgusting to others and hurtful to themselves.

Teach them that the best way to avoid a lie or disgrace best to scorn it with eye & lip.

Teach them that God is no respecter of the sex, and that when he gave the seventh commandment, he meant it for them as well as for you.

Teach them that labor is honorable, and that the boy who does not love work, never makes a man who loves anything else.

Teach them that politics is the science of government, and that it is their duty to inform themselves upon the leading questions of the day.

Teach them that the Sabbath was made for man, and that it is a day of rest, and not of dissipation.

Teach them that the best men are those who love their mothers.

THE WANDERER'S RETURN.

Charles Vitalis, The Missing Man, Back On His Native Heath.

It will be remembered by readers of the TRIBUNE that mention was made some time ago of the mysterious disappearance of Charles Vitalis, of Franconia, who was afterwards heard from in Sweden, whither he went to visit his parents. Vitalis returned to Franconia last Saturday. He has been absent about eighty days, and is much improved in health and appearance. He was thirty-two days on the return trip, coming by the way of Liverpool. So great was the tide of emigration several days' delay occurred at both Gothenburg and Liverpool.

In regard to his unexpected departure from St. Paul last February, Mr. Vitalis says he was greatly troubled with his health, which was again broken down, and the conviction that remedies he had been taking, and in which he had previously had great faith, were killing rather than curing him; also, that his unfortunate wood transactions and business complications so annoyed him that it seemed as though his affairs must be wound up and settled soon, an undertaking which is much disliked. Mr. Costalin, who owed him a large amount of money, ran away, making matters worse. During the few days he was in St. Paul he frequently felt tempted to escape from his business and take a much needed rest. Once he went to the depot, but was too late for the train. The following night he purchased a ticket and was off for Chicago. Arriving at that place he was undecided what course to take, but finally decided it was just as well, if not better, for him to go direct to Sweden, as in his present state of health he was altogether unfitted to adjust his affairs, and matters could be no worse with him away than if he was here.

At the home of his childhood he met a cordial reception, the sea voyage had caused his health and spirits to revive, and after a short visit with his parents he became restless and anxious to return, believing he might be of assistance to his creditors, and possibly save something from the wreck. He accordingly cut his visit short, and arrived at Franconia, as mentioned above, accompanied by the youngest of the family, a brother named Eliof. Mr. Vitalis' mother and father, three brothers and three sisters yet remain in Sweden, while Charley and three brothers now have their home at Franconia.

Mr. Vitalis says that he intends to make Franconia his home; but, as regards future business operations, he is, of course, as yet, somewhat reticent. His affairs are closed out by the sheriff, or if he is compelled to make an immediate settlement, the sacrifices would be such that probably not more than fifty cents on the dollar, if that much, would be realized by the creditors. It is understood, however, that if Mr. Vitalis can make a suitable compromise, he may be able to raise sufficient money to continue the business.

Mr. Vitalis is now in St. Paul, trying to arrange his affairs.

The Ideal Dramatic Company

Will offer the citizens a rare treat at Bly's Hall, on Monday and Tuesday evenings, May 16th, and 17th, by giving them the two great dramas of the day, "A Celebrated Case," and "Hazel Kirke." The latter piece has had the unprecedented run of over 400 nights at the Union Square theatre, New York. The troupe is an eastern company bound for Montana, and stop here to break the journey. Wherever they have performed in the larger cities the press has universally praised not only their artistic merit, but the decided elegant appearance of the company off the stage. There are numerous companies made up all around and "sprung upon us"—something unbearable. But on this occasion the theatre-going public will have a chance to witness a strictly first-class company in all respects. They carry elegant scenery and magnificent wardrobe expressly for the dramas they present, and can only remain two nights, as they must reach Bismarck in a week to catch the boat. The Northwestern, of Oakoal, declares it is the best company which has visited that metropolis in years. Those who fail to witness these unique performances will ever regret it. Reserved seats on sale at Smith & Co's store, price 75 cents. Secure them in time and avoid the rush.

Something New.

Sheriff Morris has recently been down to Minneapolis for the purpose of stocking up his livery stable on Laurel street. He has purchased several fine horses—equines that can not be beaten very easily in this country. He has also added to the numerous attractions his establishment affords, two of Fottell & Sons' finest make of buggies, costing alone the sum of $415. He is now prepared to furnish the nobbiest and most stylish turn-outs that can be found in northern Minnesota. The sheriff desires to make the fact known that if any of the boys—our girls either, desire a horse and buggy that they may experience the spirit of pride in riding behind, they should call on him, and he can not fail to satisfy them.

Sample Minstrels.

The troupe known as Spaulding's Georgia Minstrels gave their first entertainment of this season at Bly's Hall, last Thursday evening to a large audience. The entertainment was a fair one, but nothing that part of the programme of a first-class hall not been on the road a great length of time, hence not as perfect as it might have been. The singing was good, and the dancing was very good indeed. The performance was given in full dress, and the boys looked very nice. On Friday night they gave an entertainment at Little Falls, and on Saturday night at Sauk Rapids. They left for Fergus Falls on Sunday morning.

Attempt to Break Jail.

Two of the prisoners confined in the jail at this place have been making several attempts to escape of late, but the watchful eye of the person in charge has thus far prevented the accomplishment of their designs. One of them, James Regan, is in on the charge of forgery, while the other, Newt. Nelson, is held on the charge of housebreaking, and both of them are rather tough characters. They had procured a couple of old case knives, and filed notches in them, until quite sharp saws had been prepared. These, with the aid of a couple of old pen-knives, were the only means to which they could resort to work their way out. With these tools they would work steadily during the night, while in the day time, the place was kept covered up with a copy of the Police News, several copies of which were posted around in the jail. They were just on the eve of getting their freedom when Sheriff Morris discovered their work, and warned them that a repetition of the offense would result in a diet of bread and water for a week or ten days, since which time no further attempts have been made.

Boy Drowned.

The following is from the St. Cloud Times of the 11th inst: "On Sunday last, a boy named Albert Schmit, about twelve years of age, who was living with the family of the late Jos. Perry, went down to the river fishing, accompanied by two boys, sons of Mrs. Ponitus. Upon reaching the river at the railroad bridge, the last named boys discovered that they had forgotten something and returned home, telling young Schmit they would soon be back. Upon returning they could not find Albert, and since that time he has not been seen. What became of him is a mystery; but the theory is that he fell into the river and was carried off by the current. Indeed, a little daughter of Mrs. Elch says she saw a boy fall from the bridge into the river. The little fellow was an orphan, and had no known relatives in this section. He was living at Weber's because of the good old doctor's generosity in giving him a home."

As of Old.

Jefferson Davis, in his speech at the recent unveiling of the statue of Stonewall Jackson, at New Orleans, took occasion to use the following treasonable language: "From the academic shades of the military institute Jackson went forth to battle for the cause of State rights, self-government and constitutional liberty. He lived for his cause, believing it was righteous and trusting in it. He died, as I live to-day, feeling that the confederacy ought to have succeeded because it was founded on truth and justice. He gave his life for the valued country, and the country gave its heart to Jackson. You men upon whom he leaned in the hour of danger, in honoring him also honor ourselves."

Adelphi Theatre.

Energy deserves success. Manager Tom Flannigan has made a great success of the Adelphi Theatre, and deserves the patronage of our citizens. Monday evening four of the best artists in the Vaudeville stage appears. Miss Queen Atcherson, a vocalist of rare ability appears, and is highly recommended as first-class. Tom Casaday also makes his bow to a Brainerd audience, and is sure to score a success. Sullens and Harrington, two worthy artists, are also billed to appear, so we can expect an immense show at the Adelphi Monday night.

Idle Rumor.

Some person, probably interested more in some other village than in Brainerd, is circulating the story that quicksand has been found in the vicinity of the additions to the railroad shops at this point, so that a secure foundation can not be had. We wish to say, from authority, that upon excavating about six feet, a solid clay subsoil is found that will support 10,000 tons of brick or stone, the bed of solid clay being over forty feet thick. Strike in some other direction boys. You have not hit it right this time.

Look Out.

Sheriff Morris has discovered that the law relative to the selling of intoxicating liquors to Indians is being continually violated, and desires to give warning that should he discover the guilty parties, he will remind them of the Highland Jig on hot bricks.

CURRENT PARAGRAPHS.

A HERD of forty camels belong to a Frenchman living in Nevada. Thirty-seven of them were born in that state. They are to be used this summer in carrying goods from the terminus of the Carson and Colorado railroad to camps far out in the wilderness.

THE total number of immigrant arriving at New York for the month of April, was over 40,000—nearly 1,600 more than arrived here last April. The arrivals so far this year amount to about 106,000, an excess of 25,000 over the same period last year.

PROFESSOR CHANDLER reports to the New York board of health that oleomargarine is superior in all respects to the poorer grades of dairy butter, that there is nothing objectionable in its material or manufacture, and there is no need of legislation to protect public health.

THE most gushing diplomatic address to which President Garfield has listened was that of the new Spanish minister, who alluded to this country as "the splendid and fortunate land of America, which was dreamed of for the service of God, and human progress by the greatest of all Spanish women.

THE highest prices for yearling thoroughbreds ever realized at a sale in the United States were those at Belle Meade farm, near Nashville, where General Harding offered thirty fine animals at auction. A brother to Luke Blackburn brought $7,500, and a brother to Gildella $5,000.

IN a glass case in the Winder museum there is a section of an oak which stood inside the rebel entrenchments near Spottsylvania Court-House, Va., which was cut down by musket balls. To know just how many shots were required to accomplish this might be an interesting problem to figure upon. Another curious relic of the late war are two minnie balls fired from the opposing forces, and which met in mid-air. They were flattened, and are as firmly united as if they had been wielded, together. They were found near St. Petersburg, Va.

DR. J. L. LAUGHLIN, instructor in political economy at Harvard, is engaged in the preparation of of a "History of Bimetallism in the United States," which will cover the monetary history from 1792 to the present day, so far as it affects the double standard. The aim will be to present in accessible shape, in the text or by notes and references to other works, all the facts and statistics bearing on the subject. For the periods after 1834 there is no lack of material; but for the period between 1792 and 1834 there are difficulties rising from imperfect quotations of silver.

MRS. MOTTASHED, of Hamilton Ont., had long been a sufferer from various diseases which had kept her in bed for eight months. She read a little book by a Buffalo lady, entitled "The Prayer Faith." Having done this she wrote to the author, and engaged with her to join in prayer at a certain time. At nine o'clock on a certain evening Mrs. Mottashed felt suddenly invigorated. She leaped from her bed, arranged her pillows, and walked across the room. It is gravely stated that this not a romance, but that a number of prominent Hamilton people stand ready to attest the genuine character of Mrs. Mottashed's restoration to health and vigor.

THE government is wrestling with the question of its right to inspect exports. It has been unsatisfactory to the government began. Inasmuch as we impose duties on imports they are inspected; since we do not impose duties on exports they are not. The treasury department, however, publishes from time to time statistics of our exports as well as of our imports. The former, like census statistics, are compiled on declaration. A party, supposed to know says that certain boxes and bales contain certain goods, and they are set down in the export statistics. Statistics of imports, are, of course, accurate, because they are derived from facts obtained by actual inspection. The attempt to straighten out this perplexing question grows out of the growth of the trade in oleomargarine and butter. Had this trade not sprung up it might have gone undecided indefinitely.

MR. TUKE, writing to the London Times on the Irish troubles, shows that the emigration from Ireland, which embraced 998,857 persons in 1880—a number only twice exceeded since 1051—is not of the kind most likely to benefit the island. Of the total number of emigrants of the last year, 52,178 were between twenty-five and thirty-five, or, in other words, seventy-five per cent. were in the flower of life. Nor is this all. While Connaught, where poverty is most rife, contributed 20,549, prosperous Ulster contributed 28,519; and, coming to the counties, although during last winter 60,000 persons in Donegal were in receipt of daily rations, only 3,400 emigrated during the year from that county. Mr. Tuke concludes that emigration needs to be guided by a judicious organization, that every possible facility ought to be given for emigration from the districts within the "belt of chronic poverty on the westerghores of Ireland," and that the government should largely confine itself to assisting the people of these districts.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

WASHINGTON.

Bull Run Russell declares that he never saw a more remarkable assemblage than that which has taken place in Washington since the outbreak of the war.

News from Washington to May 16, says that Mrs. Garfield is seriously ill with a delicious intermittent fever. She is regaining her robust health for some time, and the duties of her new position as mistress of the White House have weighed heavily upon her. A few days since she went to New York, and the social pressure there was even greater than in Washington, to which place she returned to take her bed. Her physicians assure the President that no danger is to be apprehended, and that careful nursing and entire freedom from all annoyance and worry will work a cure.

A most profound sensation was created in Washington political circles on May 5, caused by the withdrawal, by the President, of all the New York nominations except that of Judge Robertson, for the position of Collector of Customs at New York and Richard Kisner, for Second Assistant Postmaster General. This action on the part of the President was determined on by reason of the course of the Republican Senatorial caucus in refusing to consider the nomination of Judge Robertson who, of all the New York nominations was singled out for destruction. The persons whose names were withdrawn were all personal friends and political adherents of Senator Conkling, and this action of the President renders absolutely impossible any future compromises between the statesman from Utica and the President. Nothing has transpired in Washington for years of so grave a political nature as this, and it is impossible to foresee the outcome. The "back-bone" of the President in this fast-growing down the gage of battle, can no longer be doubted, and his future success depends on his staying qualities in this direction.

The National Republican of May 6, says' regarding the withdrawal of the nominations:

"The remarkable action of the president in withdrawing all the New York nominations except that of collector of customs at New York, is attributed to his desire to secure a record all the appointments of that state, or it is an open announcement of his unrelenting war upon the two senators, the vice-president, the state organization, and the main body of the Republican rank and file in the Empire State. It is too serious a matter to be discussed without further information. The situation is a grave one and can only be relieved by the president himself. All Republicans desire to see a safe delivery of the party from the present peril. The president has been urged to withdraw the nomination of Robertson by many of the wisest and most moderate of the senators. If this fails it will remain for the caucus to agree either on the rejection or the postponement of the nomination. Confirmations cannot be agreed upon. The administration can prevail only by a coalition of Democratic senators and a portion of the Republicans. The country will not believe that any great public exigency exists requiring so unnatural an alliance."

The New York Times thus comments on the President's action;

"The withdrawal of these nominations for the mere purpose of reserving them until Judge Robertson's name is acted upon, condemns the President for both of them. If Garfield hopes to gain any advantage over Senator Conkling by such tactics, he only descends to that eminent politician's level and renders himself far more vulnerable to these modes of attack in which he excels such an expert. Mr. Garfield's action greatly magnifies Mr. Conkling's importance, and it gives him a reason where he had little or none before, to claim that the difference between him and the President is a personal one. It is time that we see what the President has to gain by giving such an aspect to the situation."

The New York Sun in its issue of May 6, says:

"Nothing is too strong for belief if conclusively sustained by evidence; otherwise could hardly credit the reports from Washington that Mr. Garfield has withdrawn all the nominations he had made of friends of Senator Conkling simply from the latter's hostility, he will renew the nomination of these candidates provided his own nominations for offices are objectionable to Mr. Conkling he first confirmed. This one act reduces the rank and position of the Executive of the United States as represented by James A. Garfield, to that of an Chatham street ward politician, or even a huckster. What! a President of the United States so open, avowed, shameless and sharp dealer in the spoils of office!

The nominations President Garfield had made were submitted to him after due time to fit it was mean, base, contemptible in him to withdraw them before they were acted upon. If they were fit, nothing was to be gained by another man to do could have made them unfit. If they were unfit they should never have been made. If they were fit they should not have been withdrawn. President Garfield has involved himself immensely and unnecessarily. He has lowered his high office, grand for its powers and glorious for its trust from a free people. He is the owl that cannot look upon the sun, not the dauntless and never-blinking eagle."

Ex-Gov. Washburn, of Wisconsin, has donated to the sisters of St. Dominics, his valuable property near Madison, known as Edgewood, containing thirty-four acres and several fine buildings. He has also used as an educational institution. The conveyance is made without consideration and the gift adds another to the record of the ex-governor's magnificent public benefactions. Ex-Gov. Washburn is slowly recovering his health and strength, and now thinks he will fully recover. He will start for Europe in May, and will visit the springs of Germany, and will not, probably return until fall. He attributes his recent serious illness to installing sewer gas in a hotel in St. Paul.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

The Modern Bride.

Take my cloak, and now fix my veil, Jenny—
How silly to cover one's face!
I might as well be an old woman.
But, then, there's one comfort—it's lace.

Well, what has become of those ushers?
Oh, ha, have you got my bouquet?
I'll freeze standing here in the lobby;
Why doesn't the organist play?

They've started at last—what a bustle!
Stop, pa, they're not for a—ugh; wait
One minute more. Now do keep step, pa!
There, drop my trail; Ganey, is it straight?

I hope I look timid and shrinking;
The church must be perfectly full—
Good gracious! now don't walk so fast, pa;
He didn't seem to think that twice pa!

The chancel, at last! Mind the step, pa!
I don't feel embarrass'd at all;
But, my, what's the minister saying?
O, I know, that part 'bout St. Paul.

I hope my position is graceful;
How awkwardly Sally Dane stood;
"Not lawfully joined together,
Now speak"—as if any one would!

O, dear! now it's my turn to answer—
I do wish that pa would stand still;
"Serve him, love, honor and keep him,"
How heavy he says "I will."

Where's pa? There, I knew he'd forget it
When the time came to give me away;
I, Helena, take thee—dear, cherish,"
And—well, I can't help that, pray!

Here, Maud, take my bouquet; don't drop it;
I hope Charley's not lost the ring;
Just like him—no! pocket, I'm sorry!
It's really an elegant fit ng.

I'm a statue to kneel down in satin—
And the flounces real lace—but I must;
I hope he's got a clean handkerchief,
They're usually colored with dust.

All over—ah, thanks. Now don't rise, pa;
Just throw back my veil, Maud, there—
Oh, bother! why couldn't he kiss me
Without ramming up all my hair?

Your arm, Charley, there goes the organ.
Who'd think there would be such a crowd!
Oh, I wouldn't look around; I'd forget—
Now, Charley, who was it that bowed?

Why, it's Nellie Albaire, with her husband—
She's awfully jealous, I know;
Most all of my things are imported.
And she had a lace-cloak to dance.

And there's Annie Wheeler, Kate Hermain—
I didn't expect her at all;
I vow that's the same old blue satin
She wore at the charity ball.

Why, there's Fanny Wade, Edith Parton,
And Emma as I hate—all the girls;
I knew that they'd all side in the wedding—
I hope that they'll notice my pearls.

Is the carriage there? Give me my cloak, Jane.
Don't get it all over my veil.
No; you take the other seat, Charley,
I need all of this for my tail.

The Reason Why.

It was a Boston girl who asked:
"Why is it that two souls, mated in the impenetrable mystery of their nativity, float by each other on the ocean currents of existence without being instinctively drawn together, blended and beautified in the assimilated alembic of eternal love?" That is an easy one. It is because butter is 45 cents a pound, and a good seal-skin sacque costs as high as $500. The necessaries of life make the experience a fail in price before two souls will readily blend in the assimilated alembic and so forth.—Norristown Herald.

Hints to Young Lady Riders.

If a young lady be possessed of good nerve, teach her to ride by all means—not otherwise, as it is trying in the face of Providence, but do not allow her for a moment to imagine that in the curb-bit, the pommels and the stirrup there is safety.

First let her learn to sit square upon the saddle, with a light hand upon the rein—the lighter her hand the less her horse will pull, and vice versa (a using force against force as no chance), and let one of her first lessons be to ride without stirrup, so that at any time she may be independent of it, and never so much as think of it, and never so much as think of it, and never so much as think

THE property of Peter Lathom, once a beggar, of Maudsley, near Preston, England, which cost a few hundred dollars, but, which owing to the discovery of coal on the land, proves to be worth over two millions, has been left by him to the thirteen townships through which he had begged for philanthropic uses.

AN ethical lady has opened a school of "æsthetic" cooking in Chicago, and although all of the names of the dishes are French it needs no interpreter to get the general idea of æsthetic hash that the lady is dishing up. One of the most satisfying and substantial article on the bill of fare is fried grape leaf, garnished with two carroway seeds, one of which is to be eaten and the other left for manners. There is no doubt that a fried grape leaf is very filling, and if the gormandizer should be left to indulge his appetite unrestrained, his sense of taste might overcome his digestive powers and he would waddle from the table with three, or even four fried grape leaves stowed away in his stomach, and seek the first opportunity to loosen his waistcoat. This, however, has been provided against by a preperation of lighter dishes, which tend to dilute the grape leaf and lighten the task of the gastric juice in its work of assimilation. There is "brunoise soup" which is made by confining the brunoise in a tin kettle and placing it near an open door. When soup is called for the window is raised, a draft is thereby established between the door and window and by sitting in this draft the æsthetic person takes soup. If too rich, the atmosphere of the room should be heated and thus rarefied. A still lighter dish is vacuum waffles—glass balls from which the air has been exhausted. The ball is broken by a sharp tap of the dinner knife, and the inside eaten with a spoon as dessert. Æsthetic cooking, while it is highly relished by skeletons, and regarded as a splendid thing to set out to a tramp, is hardly nutritious enough for a harvest hand or man working in rolling mill.—Peck's Sun.

CAPTAIN WILLARD GLAZIER.

A Brief Biographical Sketch of the Great Soldier Author.

The following particulars relating to this adventuresome gentleman, who purposes launching his canoe on Itaska Lake on the 1st of July, and paddling down the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico, are gleaned from a work entitled, "Men of Mark," (New York Publishing Co.) This valuable quarto gives an elaborate biography of the gallant Captain as one of the progressive men of the day, who is thought worthy of a niche in the temple of fame by the side of the most prominent men this country has produced. We gather that Captain Willard Glazier was born August 22d, 1841, and was reared and nurtured in the midst of some of the wildest and grandest scenery in the rugged country of St. Lawrence, close by the "Thousand Isles," where New York best proves her right to be called the "Empire State through the stamp of royalty on her hills and streams." His father was a farmer of excellent character and repute, but of small means, and his son Willard asisted him in the cultivation of a few acres in his native State. Untiring industry marked his early years and he was never idle. When not at school or at work upon the farm, he was engaged in the pioneer occupation of trapping along the wooded banks of the swift-flowing Oswegatchie, or perhaps making the role of the village schoolmaster, thus adding to his slender means an income which he meant should take him through a college course. He had a fixed ambition to rise, but felt that the task would be difficult of accomplishment—that he must not only be the architect but the builder of his own fortunes. But just as in after years, in the battle of the storm, the dungeon or the swamp, he was full of such earnestness as led him to surmount difficulties instead of sitting down before them, helpless—so, now, in his early youth he proved afresh the adage that 'the boy is father to the man.' Willard Glazier worked hard until the year 1861, when "the tidal wave of rebellion swept up toward the North, and a spirit broke forth among the people which infested even the peace-loving inhabitants of his native State." On the tide of this deluge his own little barge of fate was swept down the swift southward current. "I was in Troy," he wrote, "when the sad news came—and I decided at once to enter the army." Being an expert horseman, he enlisted as a private in Kilpatrick's famous old regiment, the "Harris Light-Cavalry." The history of the achievements of this body of light horse, is best told by the traces of the balls upon the battle-flags; and "with all the vicissitudes of its splendid career, the name of Willard Glazier is identified." Leaving the domain of the sword at the close of the war, he next entered the field of the pen, and has acquired a reputation as a writer as marked, perhaps, as that of the soldier. The "Capture, Prison-Pen and Escape," "Three years in the Federal Cavalry," "Battles for the Union," "Heroes of Three Wars," etc., all evidence his work in the direction of literature. "The Prison-Pen" has a sale of nearly 400,000 volumes, which speaks amply for its popularity. His other books have also met with large and rapid sales.

As a lecturer the Captain has proved a marked success; and his romantic journey on horseback from Boston to San Francisco, in 1876, was a notable and unprecedented feat, "having for its object mainly the acquisition of knowledge, but embracing also the benevolent scheme of augmenting the funds of the 'Grand Army of the Republic,' by devoting the profits of his lectures to that patriotic society for the benefit of its soldiers, widows and orphans." Captain Glazier rode the same horse through the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska, as far as Omaha. Thence he proceeded on whatever quadruped of the equine species he could secure, which was capable of shaking the dust from its feet nimbly. The entire time occupied in the journey was 200 days, during which the Captain delivered 100 lectures. He visited 648 cities, villages and stations; killed several buffaloes, antelopes and prairie wolves by way of relaxation; was captured by a band of Arrapaho Indians, and narrowly escaped the scalping-knife; and finally returned to the east on the iron-horse. We understand that the gallant soldier-author is now in affluent circumstances, and in a condition to invest $10,000 in his canoe trip down the Mississippi. He will be accompanied by an eminent artist, who will make sketches of the scenery along the banks of the great river, and of public buildings, places of resort, and other spots of interest. We earnestly trust that what is left of him by the mosquitoes will reach the Gulf in safety. He will lecture in Brainerd as the first point on the route.

SENATOR DORSEY seems fated to be the first man found guilty in the postal-route frauds. The way in which this result is possible, comes as a piece of pure luck to the Postoffice Department, in a suit of a helper of Dorsey's, named Wilcox, who knew the ex-Senator in Arkansas, and to get out of politics, removed to Oregon, where the "expedited" routes are situated. There were five of these routes, some of which were, and after getting contracts placed through Wilcox, the pay was increased by the ring from a total expense annually of $25,000 to $150,000 by which Dorsey made a clean $124,700 annually. Wilcox worked up the few settlers in the regions traversed by these routes, got petitions for the establishment of the routes, and had charge of the general work of sub-letting to the lowest bidders. Dorsey's defense will have to be more powerful than any move he has yet made against the Postmaster-General to explain these charges. Wilcox seems to have simply obeyed Dorsey's directions, and the evidence comes to light by his suing for the pay for his work.

Hugging.

An exchange furnishes the following, the authority for which is vouched: The account of the Iowa girl who is said to have been hugged to death by her lover has caused quite a sensation among the young ladies of Westfield, New York, who recently held a meeting to devise ways and means to prevent another case of death from hugging. They unanimously passed the following preamble and resolutions:

WHEREAS, It is reported that an Iowa girl died recently in her lover's arms while being hugged; and

WHEREAS, Judging from experience, we believe such an event to be utterly impossible; therefore,

Resolved, That, notwithstanding said report, we are resolved in favor of hugging. We prefer to run all risks of death rather than have the beautiful, lovely, delightful, perfectly elegant custom abolished.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the newspapers for publication.
