The Tribune.

On the 4th day of last March, the first number of this paper, under the present administration, was issued to its patrons and the world in general. In assuming the proprietorship and editorial control of the Tribune, we fully realized the fact that while we might be able to cater to the wants and wishes of some of our patrons, we would be unable to universally recognize and conciliate the ideas of others, a task which an intellect proportionately capacious in comparison as the muscular powers of Hercules might have been to the strength of a common man, could not do. It has been the object and aim, universally, to labor in our respective capacity, toward the general welfare and particular benefit of the vicinity in which we are located, as well as to assiduously proclaim to the general commonwealth of this broad land the just claims of the great Northwest a considerable appreciation from those of our fellow mortals who may never yet have tasted the animated experience to be realized in this rapidly developing portion of the vast domain over which floats the immortal banner of justice and liberty. Although we often feel a significant longing for the old Buckeye state of many presidents, we soon smother it with the genuine pride which has rooted us in this thriving young state, upon whose fertile soil we are at present privileged to shake the dust of our editorial brogan. Of what is to redound to the welfare and particular benefit of the community at large, we are disposed to claim a diminutive portion, and where, in our feeble way, the efficacy of the tripod may be brought into advantageous regulation, may favor and fortune speed its efforts. We have at no time intended to offend any person, and it is, we believe, anything may have been said, we are disposed to make any reasonable amends, and are inclined to the opinion that grievances contrivable should be observed with similar disposition. With this issue the Tribune launches forth upon the broad sea of Journalism, enlarged, re-modelled, and we trust editorially improved. Some of our energetic people have ventured forth in a judicious advertising of their respective business and occupations, and we feel confident that many more will follow in this certain path to prosperity and success. Our time has been so occupied during the past few weeks with week outside our editorial duties, that we have been unable to bestow proper attention upon our charge, but by future progression we hope to atone in a measure for any past transgression. As heretofore, we propose to exercise judicious scruples and plausible justice in our editorial labors, and hope to merit the approval of those who in the past we may have failed to imbue with the spirit of appreciation. So long as we may be favored with a sufficient support to warrant the publication of an eight-page paper, we will the Tribune be issued in an enlarged form. It has cost money and labor to make this change, and we hope our subscribers will be a little more prompt in paying up their arrears or subscription in the future than they have in the past. License we are compelled to submit to in a certain measure, but the house we buy our paper from requires prompt settlements, and our office help require their pro rata every Saturday night. This should receive more than a mere passing thought, and we think "a word to the wise should be sufficient." All accounts on subscription, barring those who may have had previous open accounts with the former proprietor, and all accounts dating from March 1st, 1881, are now due and payable at this office. Please bear this in mind, and give us a timely acknowledgment. With this rather abrupt secondary salute, we submit the Tribune in its new form.

Northern Pacific Matters.

Mr. W. H. Starbuck of New York, the confidential agent of Mr. Henry Villard, now the principal and controlling power in the destinies of the Northern Pacific road, arrived in St. Paul last week. Thursday morning, accompanied by General Manager Hunt and their wives, they started out on the line of the road, and returned, arriving in St. Paul last Monday morning. About the purpose and plans of Mr. Villard we could tell nothing, but said upon being interrogated. He knew nothing about Mr. Gould's operations in building a branch line from the Union Pacific at Granger, to run to Boke City, Parker City and thence to Columbia River. He could not tell whether Mr. Gould had any affiliations with the Northern Pacific, or was working in antagonism. He said that he was the general agent of the Oregon Railway & Navigation company with residence at New York; that was not a general matter of that company, but the election of Mr. Oakes to the vice-presidency of the Northern Pacific, at the expense of $50,000.

From inquiry elsewhere it was learned that Mr. Starbuck had been sent by Mr. Villard to examine the country traversed by the Northern Pacific road. Mr. Villard intended coming himself, but other engagements prevented, so he deputized Mr. Starbuck to take the trip and report verbally. The latter gentleman departed for New York Tuesday evening. From that city he is learned, Mr. Starbuck was very much pleased with what he had seen, and the marked evidence of prosperity of the country traversed by the road. The trip was so arranged that they traveled by daylight over the whole road; that is, the country passed in the night, going west, was seen by daylight on the return trip. They went to the east of the line now, tracked to within eight miles of Gladwin, which point will be reached by the track in a week. The distance from that point to St. Paul was 1,400 miles. No doubt Mr. Starbuck's report will be favorable, and it will probably have weight in determining the direction of policy in further support of measures to insure the speedy completion of the road and the quick building of branches that will give it the future trade. It is said that the company has and can control all the capital needed. The same man who is so readily backed by Mr. Villard in his "bold" pool are equally ready to help him consummate his further plans.

END OF THE WORLD.

Fulfillment of Mother Shipton's Prophecy for Last Saturday.
Promptly at high meridian last Saturday, says the St. Paul Dispatch, the world came to an end, according to the famous prophecy of Mother Shipton. The Archangel Gabriel made his appearance over Dayton's Bluff, horn in hand, about 11 o'clock and 20 minutes. Making his way through the throngs of small boys who were captured with the sheen of his glistening robes, he put up at the hotel for refreshment and was set to No. 53. On reaching his room he threw off his robe, stood his trumpet up in the corner, wiped the perspiration of his brow, and was disposed to claim a diminutive portion, and where, in our feeble way, the efficacy of the tripod may be brought to advantage, may favor and fortune speed its efforts. We have at no time intended to offend any person, and it is, we believe, anything may have been said, we are disposed to make any reasonable amends, and are inclined to the opinion that grievances contrivable should be observed with similar disposition. The stalwarts water

WHEELER is running in ahead on the Albany race course.

We said GILMAN once before, and this time we say GILMAN.

Gov. FILLISBURY made an excellent governor, but he positively declined a re-nomination.

CONKLING has a little speech which he repeats to his few followers twice a day, with regularity and precision.

JEV DAVIS' new book should be eradicated from the universe. It is a disgrace and an insult to America.

The early Conkling declined the proffered hand of Representative Madden, whereupon Madden came near tendering his foot.

We have been preparing for some two or three weeks to write an editorial on the "Situation at Albany," but it has become so monotonous and ordinary, that we refrain.

The Whittaker trial has not yet come to an end, of course, but it is understood that the court finds him guilty of mutilating his own ears and recommends his dismissal from the service.

SHORTLY after 3 o'clock last Wednesday afternoon, as an east-bound train on the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad was about twelve miles from Cleveland, Ohio, it struck a buggy in which were riding Thomas Garfield, uncle of the President and Mrs. Alonzo Arnold, a cousin of the President. Mr. Garfield was instantly killed, and Mrs. Arnold's skull fractured so that her life is despaired of.

It is rumored that Gen. Grant says he will not call on President Garfield until he apologizes for or explains away his conduct towards him in the removal of Cranmer and Roudsaw from office, and the appointment of Robertson. It is to be hoped that Garfield will not demean himself so far as to pay any attention to the mouthings of this egotist who still fancies that his wish should be the law of the land.

The Northern Pacific is using up 10,000 tons of steel rails for its Dakota division, a large amount of which is already laid in the track and more arriving daily. Within the last year, nearly the whole division has been refitted with the best oak ties brought from Minnesota. For the last three months several hundred men have been engaged in rasing the tracks in low places and in making general improvements.

ADAMS, clerk of the house of representatives, has placed the name of Cannon, the polygamist Mormon, on the roll of members, though the governor of Utah gave the certificate of election to Campbell. But as Cannon had a clear majority of 8,000 votes, and the governor had no authority to disfranchise the people of Utah, the action of Mr. Adams is endorsed by Democrats and Republicans alike. Murray, the governor, seems to be a well meaning person, but he is young yet.

The Supreme Court of Iowa has recently made a decision which is of interest to "innocent purchasers" of notes obtained by fraud. A suit was brought upon a promisory note made payable to bearer and transferred to plaintiff. The defendant admitted the signature, but avers that he was induced to execute it by fraud. The note appeared to have been a part of a contract signed by the defendant, and to have been cut so as to form a negotiable note. The jury found for the defendant and the Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the court below.

The Car of Russia is reported as completely broken down. Correspondents who visited Gatchina recently say it is pitiable to see what a wreck this man of herculean frame has become since his father's murder. It was thought at first he would defy the nihilists, and when he appeared once or twice at reviews and other public ceremonies his brave, manly bearing elicited hearty applause from the people; but since he issued a proclamation of autonomy and called in Ignatieff, Alexander III, has almost withdrawn from the public view. It is not grief for his father but sheer fright. The book of the assassination completely prostrated the Czar, and her nervousness has affected the Czar. His palace at Gatchina is a perfect arsenal. Gords of trusty Cossacks surround the whole district, and the palace itself is guarded night and day by police and picked officers of the line.

Police at Washington is agitated over the development of a scandal involving one of the attaches of the French legation, one of the attaches of the Spanish legation, and a young lady of high social standing. One of the foreigners is the secretary of his legation. These two young foreigners, according to the story, attended a brilliant reception or evening party at a fashionable residence in the west end of Washington, during the latter part of the social season. They paid special attention to the young lady spoken of, and managed to engage her at the supper-table. After all the other guests left the supper-room they plied the young lady with wine, and when she was well under its influence they induced her to accompany them to a private dressing-room, where the three remained some time. The young men spoke of these matters subsequently at their club, and from this the facts got out. They were members of the Metropolitan club, but have been out entirely by the club because of their conduct. The young lady's family found out the secret and have taken her from the city. There is great indignation here, and both attaches of these legations will undoubtedly have to be dismissed from their positions. The young lady's name is suppressed because of the standing of the family and a desire to protect her as far as possible.

The Pioneer Press of yesterday has the following: "The bitterness between the half-breeds and stalwarts was never at a more feverish point than to-night. Quarrels are numerous, and one between Senator Madden of Orange county and Conkling, who returned from Uca to night, came near resulting in blows. Conkling and Platt were walking through one of the Delevan corridors and met Madden, who extended his hand to Conkling, who refused it, saying: 'I do not give my hand to men like you, sir! But that you are a senator I should treat you as I think you deserve. Madden was furious and retorted that he would throw off his senatorial cloak for Conkling's benefit and meet him on any terms he desired. Conkling berated Madden for offensive terms used in his speeches, and Madden replied that he had never referred to him in person, but had only alluded to his political conduct, which he considered scandalous. A crowd gathered and the two were separated. The encounter created intense excitement, and the hotel corridors were thronged by adherents to both factions. Madden at the half-breed caucus later in the evening, denounced the stalwarts and bitterly denounced the occurrence, and their leaders for their building tactics. He subsequently returned to the hotel and repeated his denunciations publicly, calling the stalwarts "fools, and got into an altercation, from which he was removed by his friends before either he or the stalwart adherent, with whom he was quarreling, had an opportunity to strike a blow."

Rapid Increase in Population. Information comes from Tennessee to the effect that a woman residing in Jackson county, that state, had given birth to seven children at one time. After the first child was born the pain of labor continued, and an examining physician convinced the physician that there were two instead of one, and the woman was soon delivered of the second child, both girls. The physician gave directions as to the care of both mother and children and prepared to take his leave. Before reaching his horse he was recalled and delivered the woman of another girl baby. Again he took his leave and was again recalled, bringing to light another girl baby. This was considered remarkable and the physician was generally regarded as the master: "His wife's good fortune was the husband's good fortune," said one of his neighbors. "He has got gone more than half a mile before he was overtaken by the excited husband of the woman, and in great haste told him there was still another child to be born. Hastening back the physician arrived in time to aid in delivering the woman of her fifth child. The physician was then prevailed on by the husband and father to stay during the remainder of the night. He was not slow to accept the invitation and sat down to wait developments. In the course of fifteen or twenty minutes he was again called to the bedside and soon the sixth child was breathing the breath of life. Morning dawned and the doctor took his leave. Having had no sleep during the night he threw himself across the bed on his arrival home, and was soon sound asleep. About 8 o'clock he was aroused by his wife, who stated that Mr. B. was at the gate and wanted to see him immediately. "What's the matter now?" asked the doctor. "Mary says you're going to go to you know," replied Mr. B. "What, another one?" exclaimed the doctor. "That's it," said Mr. B., smiling. The doctor got on his horse, and was soon at the house of Mr. B. He was too late to be of service, as the seventh child, a girl, was born a few minutes previous to his arrival. The doctor remained about the premises during the day, but his services were not again needed. The gentleman who made the above statement, and it is almost in his exact words, says he has seen the seven babies several times, and while not large—weighing from four to five pounds each—they appear to be healthy, developed children. The occurrence has created excitement in the neighborhood, and people for miles around flock to see the mother and her seven babies. The husband is described as being of small stature, in fact exceedingly small, while his wife is said to be strong and healthy. Physicians here are considerably excited over the affair. The most singular feature of the children is, that they all have blue eyes, and so closely resemble each other that it is hard to tell them apart.

Neatness in Women. A woman may be handsome as remarkably attractive in various ways; but if she is not personally neat, she cannot hope to win admiration. Fine clothes will not conceal a slattern. A young woman with her hair in disorder and her clothes hanging about her as if suspended by a prop, is always repulsive. Slattern is always written on her person from the crown of her head to the soles of her feet, and if she wins a husband he will turn out, in all probability, either an idle fool or a drunkard. The bringing up of her daughters to be able to work, talk and act like honest, sensible young women, is the special task of all mothers, and in the industrial ranks there is imposed also the obligation of learning to respect household work for its own sake, and the comfort and happiness it will bring in the future. Household work is drudgery; but it must be done by somebody, and had better be well than ill-done.

Prejudice. Prejudice works great harm to a community, as it often does to individuals. Some pique or personal dislike from one cause or another has often prevented the consummation of an enterprise which would have been of vast benefit to the masses of the people. Only a few days since a remark was made by Brown in our hearing similar to this: "If Jones or Smith are to have anything to do with that enterprise count me out, that's all." Now that is all wrong, when the enterprise in question was to be for the public benefit and uncontrolled by one, two or three individuals. Besides, Jones and Smith are both reliable men in every sense of the term—even as reliable as Brown; but that everlasting prejudice caused the remark. Out on such nonsense and folly in a community where men need each other's help and cooperation, although they may not all belong to the same church or political party. Let your prejudices, if you have them, and you probably will, be your enemy. You are human, and are permitted to carry you away beyond reason, lay them aside when the good of the public demands it. Be reasonable; that good may come thereby.

Home Influence. It was Napoleon who said that the character and fate of the child was the work of the mother. Largely this is true, though not in a sense to exclude the influence of the father, especially in the case of boys. The child is often left to the mother's care. A doubt is here; to that which God gave is added, that which man shifted upon her, and with her rests the whole work of preparing her child for the grave encounters of life. In how many homes does a mother's intercourse with her children alternate between careless indulgence and petty fault-finding? In how many are the children pampered and dressed, children used to mere ornaments to gratify parental vanity, while the affections are thwarted, and all the highest possibilities of the mind either uncultured or repulsed. Girlhood and boyhood, the old home is left, and the new thrown away from old scenes and associates, restrained no longer, but altogether free, still you trace childhood influences. When your boy steps into the street he opens all the doors of his home; he carries out a photograph of his parents to be seen of their neighbors. When the little girl goes into the next house she carries the domestic newspaper abroad. Dear reader, is your domestic newspaper readable?

An effusive exchange states that some of the woodshed of Leonard, of the Jamesville Recorder, a few nights ago, stole his scythe and his gun. The blow falls with crushing force upon Mr. Leonard, just at the time when the laying season is setting in, and he is crippled in consequence. His scheme was to ride along in his buggy till he came to the farmer who was moving, when he would get out, strike in and carry a swath around, letting the farmer beat him about four rods on the "bent" and then take the farmer's subscription for a year to the Recorder. It was better than the politician trick of wearing hayseed in the hair.

Thomas Butler, of Bloomington, Ill., was to be married on Tuesday, but during the day he overturned a hive of bees and the insects stung him so, in so many different places, that he had to expect to the bride, and all his were declared off. There is nothing much more unpleasant to an expectant bridegroom, than to tip over a hive of bees. The bride felt awfully sorry for it, but said a few bees need not make any difference, but when he was brought face to face with her intended, and saw how the bees had walked over him with their tarpoons, she concluded he wouldn't be either ornamental or useful about a wedding.

The impalpable line which divides England from America is having all it can do this summer to preserve itself from total annihilation. Not only our horses are English, but our actors. The English actor claims Booth as a product of English soil, and as a consequence assumes to call the attention of France and Germany to the glory of England in his great actor. Berton Booth our Edwin's ancestor, was a popular actor at London in the seventeenth century. When he died he was buried in the poet's corner of Westminster Abbey, where his bust is still to be seen by the side of Shakespeare's and old Ben Jonson's.

It seems impossible for the modern inventor to discover anything which has not been known to the Chinese or Japanese for at least a thousand years. To the new philosopher or self-improving talent, lately discovered a Japanese refers in the account of the wonderful picture of an ox which left the frame to gaze during the day and returned at night. The picture came into the possession of an emperor of the Sung dynasty (A. D. 969-979) who sought an explanation, which none of his courtiers could give. At length a Buddhist priest showed that a certain nauseous substance obtained from opium, when ground into a coarse material, rendered the pictures painted with the latter luminous at night and invisible through the day. The figure of the ox was painted with the phosphorescent pigment, and becoming invisible by day, the supposition arose that he had gone out to graze.

Does the young man who persists in being a loafer ever reflect how much less he would cost to be decent, respectable man? Does he imagine that loitering is non-committal when generally? Anybody can be a gentleman, it is a matter of will without much cost, but it is mighty expensive being a loafer. It costs time. In the first place, days, weeks, and months of it, in fact, about all the time of his life. The man can be a first-class loafer without devoting his whole time to it. The occupation well followed, hardly affords time for eating, sleeping, drink—we had almost said thinking, but on reflection, we would except that. The loafer finds time to drink whenever invited, at the cost of friends. Once fully embarked on the sea of loafdom and you bid farewell to every friendly sail that sails under an honest, respectable flag. Your consorts will only be the buccaners of society. It costs money, for though the loafer may not earn a cent or have one for months, the time lost might have produced him much money. A plan to industry instead of idleness. It costs health, respect, comfort, all the true pleasures of living, honor, dignity, and respect, in the respect of the world when, and if, it may all right of consideration, who dead the gradations, here it is far cheaper.

How to Tell. For the benefit of my readers, many of whom are not what might be called practical newspapermen and women, I will say that if your time is very precious, and life is too short for you to foal away your evenings reading local advertisements, and you are at times in grave doubts as to what is advertisement and what is news, just cast your eye to the bottom of the article, and if there is a footnote which says "By Advertiser," or something of that kind, it is an advertisement, and if there is no such notice, it is a news article, and if there is a footnote which says "By Advertiser," or something of that kind, it is an advertisement, and if there is no such notice, it is a news article.

Quer. An exchange says that the people of that locality were considerably excited the other day by a three-cornered dog fight that occurred there. This is not surprising, as it had been simply a combat between oblong or rectangular dogs, or even a short but common-place fight between rhomboidal or octagonal dogs it would not have attracted any attention, but an engagement between triangular dogs is something that calls forth our wonder and surprise.

"What hell do you use," said a saint to a devil, "When you fish where the souls of men abound?" "For special talents," said the King of Hell. "For?" "For the good name of the fish I've found." "But for good name's sake I'd like to know," said the demon, "I angle for man, not men; And a thing I hate Is to chance upon a fish that is so fat with a woman's whole year round."

How Villard Won. The public has at last learned the true story of how Mr. Villard obtained control of the Northern Pacific railroad and how his suit against the company came to be abandoned. Capt. Alvinson, an old Pacific coast man, was the mutant friend who was chosen to pour sweet words into the ear of President Billings. He made long speeches a direct offer of $30 for that gentleman's common stock, and $80 for preferred. In all some $9,000,000. Mr. Billings spurned the offer, and insisted that there should be no compromise until all the lawsuits were withdrawn. He was successful, and his action disarmed his friends who owned a majority of the stock of the road. Then Villard began to use a little diplomacy and gradually Billings began to weaken. He was finally under great temptation, and Mr. Villard proved an arch tempter. Mr. Billings owned 50,000 shares of stock that he had paid $150 for, seven years ago. He was offered $20 cash for his stock. A plan was suggested to him that he was killing himself by hard work, and that it was time that he should retire from business, and make provision for the disposal of his estate. This argument was a potent one, and Mr. Billings' health is very precarious. Carl Schurz also used his power of persuasion on Mr. Billings, and at last that gentle man, while trying, "He would never consent to his friends' counsel. A plan of compromise was secretly drawn up and agreed upon. It involved a fair agreement for both sides and an entire disclaimer by Mr. Billings of his friends. It was generally said that there was a private agreement be-
