CHAS. & FRATER, Proprietors. ARTHUR E. CHASE, Editor.

SATURDAY, JULY 16th, 1881.

Gutreau wants the district attorney to write his biography. He can find a million men who would willingly write his epitaph.

"God bless you, Arthur! I will be with you Thursday," said Conkling, as he parted with the Vice-President at the Jersey City station. He didn't keep his word. The President lived.

When Carl Schurz was Secretary of the Interior, smoking was forbidden in the department building. But now from "Old Kirkwood" down, every body smokes either "long nine" cigars or Virginia cut pipes.

It is always best to pay the minister. Two lovers were united in marriage by a Philadelphia clergyman, the man promising to call at his house the next day and pay for a certificate. They departed, however, without doing so, and the clergyman prints a marriage notice, with the added words: "No cards, no cake, no cash, no certificate."

The ridiculous disparity of punishment for various crimes is illustrated handsomely by the recent sentence of two men in New York to twelve years in prison for knocking a man down and robbing him of forty cents, while Gutreau, who shot and nearly killed a President of the United States, if found guilty, can be imprisoned but for eight years. The latter penalty is too light, no matter who the victim of such an assault may be. A private citizen should be protected by a heavier sentence. It is coming to be a serious question whether all penalties for crimes that imperil human life are not altogether too light. The law fails to be a terror to evil-doers, and the value set upon human life by a weak and sentimental sympathy for murderers is constantly exposing society to lawlessness and bloodshed.

The comet now swinging around the circle is not only one of the first-class travellers of its kind, but will enjoy the honor of a closer study than most of its predecessors have had, as hundreds of astronomers have now drawn a bead on it. Meanwhile the claimants for the credit of its first discovery are becoming numerous. Soldiers, sailors, policemen, brakemen, and other people whose duties lead them to tramp about at night, are telling stories of when they saw it; but it is strange that they did not mention their discoveries at once. The small reward of $200 which an enthusiast offers for each comet bagged this year has also stimulated the variety of claims. Perhaps it would be well to withdraw this prize, suggests the New York Sun, as some people who keep too late hours already may justify their conduct on the pretence that they are hard at work hunting comets for money.

CONKLING'S evening organ in New York City, is the Commercial Advertiser, of which Hugh Hastings is editor. This journal has never attained such prominence as its unexpected and inconsistent advocacy of the dying cause of Bossism now gives it. The editor has been one of those simple-serviceable men whose reputation was earned in the last generation, when there was a great deal of importance in "what the editor said." To-day he is the mouth-piece of ex-Senator Conkling and his utterances are noteworthy only as indicating the mental state of his chief. The Advertiser's latest volley is trained on the editors who plainly charged the Machine with the moral responsibility of Gutreau's crime. The ideas advanced in this utterance are so similar to those of Mr. Conkling's letter to Attorney General MacVegh that taking them in conjunction with the charge against the editors in question it appears that Mr. Conkling was more than ever personal in his theory that high executive officers need protection from their enemies. The Advertiser says: "There must be, even under existing law, some punishment for the instigators of such crimes; and if so, it must be the duty of the United States or State District Attorney to institute proceedings against any person or persons who may instigate assaults on or the murder of the President or the Vice-President of the United States. If such is the case, why are not the authors and publishers of the infamous articles that have appeared in the New York Tribune, Louisville Courier-Journal and other sheets, which have, without the slightest reason or excuse, named the Vice-President and charged him with complicity in this infamous murder, amenable to such a law, and why are they not indicted? The Tribune and Times, whose hirelings invented the idea of a conspiracy to kill the President, have been compelled to take back the wicked sensation. "It was an infamous attack on the order-loving people of the United States. These hiring serpents care nothing for the public good if they can only succeed in exciting prejudice and bad blood against the Vice-President and Senator Conkling. The fellows, if they had the courage of the lunatic Gutreau, would use his weapons; but, being sneaking poltroons, they try to murder with the pen. Their venom is more devilish than Gutreau's." This is vigorous writing and is a symptom of that infatuation of the mind which has so often attacked State and politicians during the past few months. The charge made is that the men and newspapers who have said the political system represented by Vice-President Arthur and Conkling was morally responsible for the attempt on the President's life are criminals and should be indicted. Just what their crime is, or what specific counts should be placed in the indictment the Advertiser does not say. The difficulty which stands in the way of this definition of their offense is that the opinion that Mr. Conkling's system is guilty is unassailable as long as free speech is possible. If Mr. Conkling has a case against the editors who are so obnoxious to him, then Jefferson Davis has a case against men who charged the system of which he was the figurehead with the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. The editors did not say that Conkling and Arthur were conspirators or assassins. They were simply charged with giving counsel and leadership to a system which, as a cause of a cause, was morally responsible for Gutreau's crime. That charge was most natural and spontaneous. Not only newspapers but the people declared it openly and unmistakably. The fact was so visible and monstrous to the minds of men that it could not be passed by in silence. That it makes Mr. Conkling and his newspaper assistants angry was to be expected. Gutreau was angry when he found that his deed was a failure and that he would be held to account for his crime.

A Prediction And a Suggestion.
The present hour is not the time to obtrude upon the public thought any consideration of mere partisan politics, as affected by the events of the past few days; and happily no one is disposed to turn into a narrow channel the prevalent and overspreading flood of sympathy and good will which flows from fifty million American hearts toward the president who has been so sorely stricken simply because he is the chief servant of the republic, but it would be puerile to bandage the eyes and attempt to ignore the decrees which recent occurrences have written across the heavens in the sight of all. Nothing can be clearer than that, if God gives the president back to us in health as well as life, the next presidential battle has already been fought, and won. The assassin declared that he meant to solidify the republican party. He has done so, and builded not only better than he knew, but better than he wished. He has solidified the nation. His foul blow put Garfield side by side in the popular heart with Abraham Lincoln. "He that was dead is alive again." Garfield can never be an ordinary person. His passage through the shadow of death, accompanied and upheld by the prayers of the Christian world, will leave upon the remaining years of his life a sacredness which will set him apart from all other living citizens, a sacredness which will demand and compel that fair criticism of his future official acts shall not degenerate into unfair cavil, much less into factional abuse and slander. This result may be illogical but it will conform to that higher and truer logic which ever controls the masses, moves great people in their greatest epochs, transcending but not contradicting their best judgment, the logic of the emotions. The journeys of the Reformed President will be omissions such as America never saw, and they will generate an enthusiasm which will beat down all insupportable opposition, while his words, as replete with wisdom as with eloquence, will have in the popular mind something of the virtue that makes the heart the conscience of the world's most illustrious patriots. Not a few will believe that this man of heroic mould has been divinely rescued from the portals of the grave to lead his people to a higher level of political life and political action than would else have been possible through decades of sluggish ascent. Politicians, managers, rivals will scout at all this, but that great ruler, the people, will see to it that their will is obeyed. If members of the cabinet have ever held presidential aspirations they will cheerfully stand aside till 1888, while the elect of destiny walks over the course. "If the assassin's shot has not blotted the word 'stalwart,' from our political lexicon the resuscitated Garfield will fully eliminate the evil thing itself from our politics. His noble tenderness will give to that late branch of the party more than its due share of recognition, not as a matter of policy but to manifest his comradely confidence in them and to rebuke the few who would unfairly connect them with the wretch who hid beneath their mantle while firing the assassin's shot. James Abram Garfield is as sure to be his own successor in the presidential office as he is to live in respectable health and maintain that record which now endears him to the nation. No other result need be looked for or schemed for.

Since fate has so decreed, what could be more fitting, more patriotic, more politic, than that A. D. 1884 should mark the flood-tide of that second "era of good feeling" which was ushered in through the gateway of a common and an overwhelming sorrow on July 2d? What would better serve to weld all our communities into one people, remove the lingering bitterness of a discordant past, break down the partition walls between North and South, heal the local and family feuds which breed of political estrangement have engendered and kept alive, than for all parties to unite in choosing Gen. Garfield as the people's president for a second term—not for his sake, but because the country wants him? In no other way could the democratic party with such grace and self-respect relinquish a contest which has for a quarter of a century been one continuous mistake and defeat, and which has for them in the future only aggravation of a deplorable past. In no other way could that party so easily and so promptly put itself alongside the nineteenth century, and open into veins the life current of the throbbing present. In no other way could that party so effectually unload that Old Man of the Sea, its history, and prepare itself, under whatever name and leaders Providence might decree, to set an honorable and potent part in American affairs. Will the democratic party rise to the level of its opportunity? Shall Garfield be the sole presidential candidate in 1884?—Tribune.

Crook City Correspondence.

CAOUC CRY, JULY 8, 1881.

FRUITS THINNING—Many days have passed since my last to you, the fact is this has been a season of unusual toil in this country. Our spring came in so late, and our winter being of such severity, that we have had all our work in a heap. Well, you want to know about the present, and not the dead. In the first place it is hot; hotter nor Li; dry, sultry, parching winds with little or no rain; with telephones or cyclones or what ever you call 'em; then fearful hail storms, sweeping up all productions in its course, going to the grass which at best was very light, but now scarcely any can be found. What has been known as a "dry" season, is now, to all appearance, a dry desolation. One ranch in particular, which three years ago had seventy-five tons of hay cut on it, will not have two tons this year. This native grass will not last with yearly cutting. Two outtings end the business.

The post, or Ft. Meade hay contract was let this year at $10 per ton, but the contractor has failed to give the required security, so now the contract cannot find takers at $20 per ton; while two years ago it was filled at $7.50. It is said, however, that much straw found its way into the government stables which was accounted for as hay, and so paid for; but who ever heard of government contractors doing such things, or a post trader making money? It is hinted that one contractor had a heap of mud on one side of his hay stack, and one man stepped on mud as fast as one loaded hay.

Little town has reached its lowest ebb, and is now growing on a permanent basis. For the past three years, it has lost a large amount of old settlers, and not one building has been put up; but now we have one great mill in operation, and a large one is building, which will be ready for the fall's harvest. You folks of Brainerd can appreciate waiting for a town to grow, and there you know our "has been" situation.

The hills generally is dull. Business is not satisfactory. Too much credit has been readily ruined all who indulged in it; but there is still much wealth here. But until the unhealthy system of credit is done away with, we shall be in a bad condition. Dead-wood is dull, but it has grown into a beautiful jelly, with some buildings as sugar can be found any where this side of Chicago, and with stocks of merchandise to match. The 4th of July celebration cost the citizens $2,500, all of which was private subscriptions. We have a luncheon of a Special P. O. Agent here who came near getting our mail changed into another route, which would have made our mail arrive every other day. Or, in other words, would have made mail arrangements bad for over 500 people, just to accommodate a stage line twenty minutes. This fellow's name is Fury. It is hinted that he was hired by a townsite agent, but his little game did not work. The route he proposed carrying the mail by, was snuffed up four months last winter.

Large herds of cattle are coming in to range on the Belle Fourche, which has already become a great grazing locality. Cattle look remarkably well, and do not indicate the severe time they had last winter.

An immense amount of freight is coming in, principally from Omaha and Chicago. St. Paul sends very little to the Hill, and freight trains do not run to Bemarck. Messrs. Harmon & Co. have a train for their own supplies, but that is all.

Our ranchmen generally have got the blues. There will not be one half a crop in any location near the Hills, and what is raised will command good prices. Oats now readily command 4c, and will not be less than 3 1/2c. per lb. Yours etc., A. QUAY.

A Voice from Ohio

The following, item from the Mt. Gilead, (Ohio) Register, we are pleased to publish, heartily appreciating the production from the pen of W.G. Beebe, editor of that paper: Recently we received from Brainerd, a town in northern Minnesota, a copy of the Brainerd Tribune, an attractive newspaper which for some time has been under the management of Mr. Arthur Chase, a son of our clerk of the court, who learned how to handle the printer's "stick and rule." In the Register office several years ago. He finished his apprenticeship in this office, we had every opportunity to judge of his good qualifications for the position in which it is now serving. Within the past few days Mr. A. W. Frater, also of this country in Ohio, has associated himself with Arthur in the Tribune. Just before Mr. Frater left this country he was waited in marriage by Miss Emma, daughter of Commissioner Brooks, and we trust the union of the two young men in business in the distant state, will be as happy and pleasant as the union lately formed between Mr. Frater and his pleasing bride near Iberia. Mrs. Frater has not yet departed for her new home in Minnesota.

MR. OLIVER DALRYMPLE, of St. Paul, the greatest farmer of the Northwest, and Mr. E. B. Grandin, of Tidon, Pa., who is interested largely in the matter of lumber, arrived here yesterday morning, looking up the question of lumber. They left for the west this evening. In answer to an inquiry as to the prospects for the wheat crop, Mr. Dalrymple said they were good, though not quite equal to last year. "I estimate," he said, "that one eighth of the grain in the Red River Valley was injured by high water in the spring. The actual loss may prove a trifle over one bushel in twenty. This is comparatively trifling compared with the total yield. The weather now is favorable.

The question of school accommodations in Duluth during the next year is looming up as the summer begins to wear away. With the Smith block rented for a boarding house it will be hard to find any sort of rooms, much less suitable ones, for the use of some of the schools next year. One suggestion that we have heard is this; that the board of education should put up a frame building on the site selected, get the inside in condition for use by November 1st, and veneer the outside with brick next season. It is claimed that this style of building would be warmer than one all brick, would be as secure as regards fire, since there will be no outside exposure in any case, and could be furnished up in its exterior so as to be entirely creditable to our town. We give the suggestion for the consideration of the public not knowing what practical difficulties there may be in the way of such a plan.—Duluth News.
