Andrews, N. York Mills, has been taken means to, St. Peter. He thinks he is King Oscar of Sweden and Norway.

The bullet has been extracted from the head of Fred Sohlen of St. Cloud, who attempted suicide in Montana. He is gradually recovering.

Old Fort Washington, on the Potomac, is garriaged by one soldier, Sergeant R. F. Joyce. He lives in the old ivy-covered house that was once occupied by the commanding officer.

New York thieves took a stout Dutchman and checked him head first into a bathtub, then they washed through his money drawer.

May 17th is the Norwegian "Day of Independence." It is the anniversary of the independence of Norway from Denmark, and union with Sweden. It is, in fact their "4th of July."

At a meeting of wholesale butchers' employes in New York, it was decided to mail each retail butcher in the city a notice that he will be boycotted if he handles Chicago beef in any way.

Citizens of Huron, Mich., observed Thursday last as Arbor Day. The schools were closed, a procession, with a band marched to the school house and other public places. At least one thousand trees were set.

Ten Hungarians returned yesterday from Cuba, where they were taken and set at work like slaves. They thought they were being taken to a place in New Jersey.

The American consul obtained their release.

A Morris, Minn., young lady named Winslow, on a way and went to Fargo, where she expected to meet her lover. They did meet, but at the same moment she was forced to confront them and induced the young lady to return home.

The river and harbor committee has completed its bill, which makes the following allowances for Minnesota improvements: "Reservoir system, $80,000, Duluth harbor, $48,000, Grand Marais, $5,000, Two Harbors, $8,000, reservoir for the connection of the Red River and Minnesota river $16,000."

A Georgia postman has sent to Washington a letter enclosing a circular requesting contribution of $24 for campaign purposes. The circular was shown to Postmaster General Gresham, who said he would protect any postmaster who refuses the contribution called for by the circular.

There appears to be little doubt that the State line steamship State of Michigan will be purchased by the New York for Glasgow April 10, having on board thirty-three cabin passengers. Two of her life boats have since been picked up, and a sailing vessel has been broken, which is supposed to have had her crew on board. At the time of her sailing, it was rumored that several dynamites were among her passengers, and it is feared that the disaster was due to premature explosion.

Terrific Explosion. St. Cloud, Minn., Journal. Engine No. 58 exploded in the Manitoba yard Saturday morning. It had just pulled out from the round house and was coupled to a train of flat cars to go out with the working crew when the explosion occurred. The crowd, shouting, ran, some and top of the cab were blown off, the whistle being hurled several hundred feet into the air, and a barrel two feet in diameter was hurled into the ground. The steam gauge at the time registered 140 pounds but is thought to have been steady when blown.

Both the engineer, J. Cooke, and fireman, Jack Carey, were in the cab, but fortunately neither was injured.

Two Minutes Too Late. With his good bye ringing in her ears, Drucie Miller scattered the little black office and dropped into the cab before the clicking instrument. Glancing at the clock above her head, she noticed that the hands were only two minutes past the hour.

The rumbling of the train which had just left the station was given her ears, and she felt that she had listened to it though it was the voice of a friend who was leaving her for a long time.

She did not expect any more messages that night, the engine breathing heavily from its great iron lungs on the track near her window, would not move until the night express had moved up; and the engineer, knowing this had sought his sweet-heart, who lived in the village.

Tom Gray, the engineer of the train just starting, was Drucie's lover, and his intimate friends knew when the wedding was to take place. He had not known her long but that did not matter here; he was a true fellow, who loved her with all his heart, and when she left he loved Tom.

The rumble of the train at length drew away, and Drucie was about to shut off current and leave the office, when a message brought all attention to her.

"She started, for the first word drew the color from her cheeks, and standing over her instrument, she heard the message.

"Number ten switch at Colby just starting six passes. Six just starting!"

"Six just starting!" My God, they will not!" cried the operator starting from the table. "What can I do to save him—them!"

"And with her eyes fixed at the clock the good in the center of the room, thinking of the two trains approaching each other through the darkness almost hid the moon.

The real situation, enough to blanch a young girl's cheeks, was arising. The order for the train which had just left Fletcher to switch at Colby could not be obeyed, for the telegraph could not stop it.

For there was no night effect at Fletcher, and the engine was for six to leave Fort Wayne before the arrival of number ten.

"The engine was running on the track, and when Drucie looked at the clock, she saw the hands pointing to six, and she knew that it was now ten minutes behind time on that particular night, six, anxious to leave out before the connections, she telegraphed the message to Fletcher, which so started Drucie Miller, who had just completed a double track switch, when she finished to Fort Wayne and obtained the message.

"Drucie recovered her self, possession she started from her seat, and her message in her hand. It had arrived just two minutes too late, and Tom Gray, unconscious of his existence, standing by his engine ahead and thinking of the girl he had lately kissed in the car, and who was now waiting for him, he was unexpectingly behind time, and thought that the time he had spent in pressing waiting there would not more out until he arrived."
