The Best Medicine.

J. O. WILSON, Contractor and Builder, Sulphur Springs, Texas, thus speaks of Ayer's Pills:

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine I ever tried; and, in my judgment, no better general remedy could be devised. I have used them in my family and recommended them to my friends and employees for more than twenty years. To my certain knowledge, many cases of the following complaints have been completely and by the use of Ayer's Pills alone: Third day chills, dumb ague, bilious fever, sick headache, rheumatism, flux, dyspepsia, constipation, and hard colds. I know that a moderate use of Ayer's Pills, continued for a few days or weeks, as the nature of the complaint required, would be found an absolute cure for the disorders I have named above."

"I have been selling medicine for eight years, and I can safely say that Ayer's Pills give better satisfaction than any other Pill I ever sold."—J. J. Perry, Spottsylvania C. H., Va.

It is safe to predict that John Goodnow did not give thanks to any great extent yesterday.

A GREAT hustle is being made by the politicians throughout the state for legislative appointments.

THE members from the 46th district have engaged quarters at the Merchants hotel for the comig session of the legislature.

THE Sixth congressional district cast many thousand more votes than any other district in the state, the total number polled being 47,698.

THE primary election law demanded by many may be a good thing for large cities but it would not meet with the approval of the people in the country.

THE Mille Lacs Indians have petitioned the "great father in Washington" through Hon. Nathan Richardson, of Little Falls, for their annuity which they claim to be badly in need of.

THE legislature will be asked to reduce the liquor licenses in big cities to $500. The saloon element of Minnesota cannot afford to tamper with this laws that govern them now, they might get the worst of it.

REPRESENTATIVE FEE wants the constitution changed so that members of the legislature will receive an annual salary instead of so much per diem, and then allow them to remain in session as long as they choose. This is the plan of most of the states and has its merits.

THE official canvass of the votes of the 46th district conferred at Little Falls on Monday, the board consisting of Auditor Ellenbecker, Chairman Stumpf, Justice Crell and Forbes. Auditor Louis Tache, of this city, was also present. The canvass did not materially change the figures published in these columns before, but in Todd county the returning board from Birnhamville left out the vote for nearly the entire legislative ticket.

"A Little Farm Well Tilled"

"Americanisms."

Many are the books on America which have been written by foreigners, and much as we do in visiting the Old World, they remark, not always in a complimentary way upon the points wherein our speech and manners differ from theirs. These peculiarities they group under the head of "Americanisms." Our English cousins have had much amusement from our use of "guess" for "think" or "suppose," and "mad" for "angry" forgetting that their early writers used the words in exactly the same sense. It is simply the survival of the old English in a new land. The terse phrases of America they look upon as slang, not realizing that a young nation, in vigorous development, and grappling with new problems, needs practically a new language. Truly, we have not always improved on the mother-tongue, but if our visitors would overlook particulars, and generalize more they would find some 'Americanisms' to admire. Among nothing would be more worthy of their attention than the extensive railroad systems, the difficulties over which they have triumphed in their building, and the completeness and luxuriousness of their passenger equipment. A tour over such systems as the Burlington Route would convince that no such comfortable longdistance journeys are possible anywhere in the Old World, running thousands of miles without change of cars, and all the comforts of a home at instant command. For information as to a personally conducted excursion of this railroad, make inquiry when next you have a trip, of our home agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent. St. Paul, Minn., and you will find that the Burlington can take the best care of you to almost any point

A Touch Crow Wing County Citizen.

About the first of last month a passenger train was wrecked on the Soo road, by the sawing in two of bridge timbers, which threw the train into a ravine, smashing the engine and killing the fireman. After some fine detective work two men were arrested for the crime, and one proves to be a young man who has lived in this city, and whose father lives on a farm out near Mille Lacs lake, in Aitkin county. Concerning the young man, Leverett Hazelton, and the manner of his apprehension and arrest, the Pioneer Press says:

One of the prisoners was a young fellow who gave the name of Leverett C. Hazelton. The other, a much older man, said his name was Frank Williams. They were placed in jail, but in different corridors, and the task was presented itself of securing the proof of their guilt, though by this time there was no moral doubt that they were the men who committed the crime.

One day while they were in jail a new prisoner was placed in the same corridor as Hazelton. This new prisoner was a desperate character, apparently. He was under arrest for safe-breaking and looked as hard as his reputation. He took a fancy to Hazelton and patronized that green young villian, who was quite flattered at being noticed by such a desperado. He told Hazelton several blood curdling narratives of crimes he had committed and made the youth believe him a tremendous ruffian. Then Hazelton commenced to brag a little, modestly at first, but with a little judicious encouragement he improved, and finally he told the safe-breaker how he and Frank Williams had tried to wreck a couple of trains.

Hazelton told his story circumstantially, telling how he and Williams broke into a section tool house and stole a saw, wrench, spike-puller and other tools, also two rubber coats. Then they made their way to Prentice and sawed the timbers of a bridge, but they did not saw them enough and the train passed over safely. They hid the tools for a day or two and then tackled another bridge near Headford Junction.

The young villian told how they ran the engineer and the negroes, sawing chunks out of them, and while they were at work they heard the eastbound passenger train approaching. They lifted ont the saws chunks and calmly waited for the train to come to destruction, when, Hazelton said, it was the intention of himself and Williams to shoot the passengers who were not killed and rob them and the express car. But the bridge was not sufficiently weaken and the eastbound train passed over it in safety.

Then the fiends set to work again and sawed through more of the bridge timbers, received spikes and fish plates from the ties and rails, and once more sat ghoulishly waiting their harvest of death.

The westbound train came along at a rate of about eighteen miles an hour. The locomotive struck the bridge, plunged through the timbers and struck the face of the ravine, throwing the engineer onto the track in front, but pinning the fireman beneath the wreck and crushing out his life. The passenger coaches remained on the rails. Then the two wreckers made for the train, but hearing men shout and seeing several approach, Hazelton lost heart, gave up his schemes of murder and fled, followed by his companion, Williams, who wandered through the country for a week or ten days and then were arrested near Merrill.

Such in substance was the story told by Hazelton to the safe-breaker, and after he had told it and detailed his movements, also telling of buying cracked coffee at a store in Rhinelander and leaving it in the pocket of the brown coat beneath the wrecked bridge, the safe-breaker horrified him by saying he was a detective, Hazelton broke down at this disclosure and he subsequently expressed a desire of making a clean breast of the whole affair to the authorities in the hope, no doubt, that it might go easier with him at the trial. This was allowed to do, and his confession was made and sworn to on October 26th, and the substance of it was published in the Pioneer Press on October 28th.

When arraigned in court Hazelton pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree and expressed his willingness to testify when the case came to trial. Williams, however, remained sullen and pleaded not guilty. Both men now await trial.

Leverett Hazelton, the younger of the two train wreckers, is one of a family of four children, who were deserted by their parents near Independence, Iowa, years ago, when they were very young. Their father, who, it is said, was weak minded, ran away, leaving his wife and children destitute. The woman left the children with the avowed object of pursuing him and bringing him back, but neither ever returned. The children were placed in a poor house, but were soon taken out by neighbors, who adopted them in their legal form, Peter Hazelton adopting Leverett, who was then only three months old. The fact that he is an adopted child was never revealed to him, and he always thought Hazelton was his right name. The Hazeltons lived on a farm and a few years later moved to Minnesota and settled on a farm near Aitkin.

So the boy was brought up on a farm. He was sent to school, but was very slow to learn. He was called by his father, to be weak minded. Twice he was sent to Aitkin to school, but was by fear that he would do no chores for the families with whom he was stopping, and was soon sent home. He was a lazy boy and a poor boy, but otherwise seemed to be all right, beyond an occasional exhibition of a very dangerous temper. His foster mother idolized him, and Mr. Hazelton always thought a great deal of him and treated him as well when he began to become a great nuisance. They never chastised him but twice, once for throwing a stick of wood at Mrs. Hazelton, and once for stealing currants from a neighbor's garden. His foster father tried to coax him to do better by promising to give him a deed to half his possessions when he became of age and to the whole of them when he was thirty-five, but all to no use.

On last Decoration Day his foster parents went to the cemetery to celebrate the day. Mr. Hazelton giving him $1 and leaving him at home. But when they returned he had disappeared, taking with him what clothing he had and a new rifle that his foster father had purchased for him, for he was fond of hunting and had all the time he desired for that sport. His foster mother was nearly crazed by his disappearance, but calmed down when she learned that he had simply gone to Fred Hazelton's, a brother of Frazer, who lives on a farm ten miles north of Brainerd. He went to work for a farmer named Campbell, who lives near Fred Hazelton's, but was so worthless that he was soon discharged and returned to Fred's place. Fred tried to persuade him to go home, but he would not do so. He then hired him to work for him two months, but had to discharge him after he worked a short time, because he was no good. His foster father finally went after him, but when he arrived the boy had gone, and nothing more was heard of him until the report of his arrest reached them.

At Brainerd it was learned that he had loafed about there for a time, disposed of his rifle and bought a revolver, which he afterward pawned for $2 to get money to pay for his meals. He disappeared very suddenly. The Hazeltons are all well known and highly respected throughout the entire community in which they live, and so far as the home influence with which the young criminal was surrounded are concerned they were certainly of the very best. But he was evidently born with a weak and tainted mind. His two brothers are said to be weak minded also.

Since the above was put in type it is learned that Hazelton has been sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary at hard labor.

"I Think Very Hard

That the buffet smoking library coach on the Northwestern Limited between St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago is the greatest institution in modern railway travel ever run across—or rather rode in—and I have traveled a few thousand miles in my time, at it alone. That coach means solid comfort to a fellow and makes long journey a delightfully short one. By all odds it is the best feature of the best train I ever rode in.—The Globe

Celebrated Man On a Celebrated Railroad.

Gen. Lew Wallace, the renowned soldier, statesman, traveler and author, pays this compliment to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway in the St. Paul News Record, Oct. 6, 1894:

"I have traveled all over the United States and Europe, but never before have I seen such elegant train service as I enjoyed on 'The Milwaukee' between Chicago and St. Paul. The luxurious appointments of the coaches, and the speed of the train [illegible]."

The trains referred to by the author of "Ben Hur" are named Pioneer Limited, heated by steam, lighted by electricity and arranged with the famous electric berth reading lamp.

Brighton, Eng., is experimenting with armored trains, protected by steel plates and carrying gatling guns. Here is a hint for railroad and express managers in the Southwest.

There is an old superstition that those who invent new modes of execution are apt to be among their victims. It is not true that Dr. Guillotin was executed, but it is certain that the Chinese are sorry now that they invented gunpowder.

A belle of Manhattan Beach wore a fancy bathing dress well padded at the shoulders. A rival had secretly removed the padding from the right shoulder, and substituted salt. When she was five minutes in the water she was a fright. One of her graceful shoulders had melted.

A New York rogue caught a Chinaman asleep in a hallway and stole his outer garments. These he donned and, perambulated Mott street, a Chinese quarter. One of the celestials proceeded to be deceived and led the sham Chinaman to an opium joint, where he was despoiled of all he possessed and badly beaten.

An international telephone system, to cover all Europe with its network, is one of the latest movements to bring the nations into more intimate and more peaceful relations with each other. The cities of Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Brussels and Antwerp are already connected by telephone, and the extension of the lines is a question of only a little time.

Champagne ought to be cheaper. In the quiters of the Marne district in France there are now stored 150,000,000 bottles of the sparkling fluid, enough to supply the whole world for six years. This does not include the vintage of 1894, nor all the sparkling wine product of France. There is an immense quantity of all French wines on hand, a result of the vintages for seven consecutive years.

The prince of Wales suffers from various aches, which necessitates him taking the utmost care of himself, and there are periods of the year when his knee is in such a bandaged condition that he have to be bandaged up several times a day. It is owing to the prince's afflicted extremities that knee breeches are so far more worn now at state entertainments, where royalty is present, as was the case up to 1870.

China's foreign trade amounts to about $238,000,000 a year, of which 60 per cent is with Great Britain. The proposition of Japan to attack our empire into three parts, which is supposed to be approved by Russia and France, involves the pocket of England to the extent of $138,000,000 a year, and no flouht this is the important matter occupying the attention of the British cabinet.

Pittsburg has been counting the people within a radius of sixty miles of that city and finds that the number is 1,608,964, or 92,000 more than 1894, five within a like area around Chicago. It appears that the Armenians are becoming quite common in Massachusetts. Most of them are engaged in factories, and some in trade. They are said to have excellent business talents, and to make successful bankers and merchants. The situation of their race under Turkish rule is peculiarly hard, and those who can get away are mostly coming to this country.

The reported butchery of Armenian Christians is shocking to those who have believed that the proximity of a higher civilization had permanently established an improved condition of life in Asiatic Turkey. The sultan should be prompted to make an example of the blood-red leaders who are responsible for the butchery of the Armenians.

A Boston writer who appears to speak by the card, says that the doctor alluded to in Dr. Holmes' poem "The Boys" was Dr. Chandler Robbins; the judge, George T. Bigelow, of the, supreme court; the lawyer, Jeremiah Smith; the mayor, George W. Richardson of Worcester; the member of congress, George T. Davis of Greenfield; the governor, James Sullivan; Clarke of Boston; the mathematician, Prof. Peirce; the squire, Benjamin Curtis; the youngster of average intimate acquaintance, "Dr. Sam" Smith, author of "America." all members of the Harvard class of 1829.

Odessa, which is frequently described as the Liverpool of Russia, and which in point of trade and prosperity ranks as the most important city of the empire, has just been celebrating the centennial anniversary of its foundation. Built on territory ceded to Russia by Turkey in 1792, the foundations of the present city were laid only in 1794, but when, at the beginning of the century, the French emigre, the Duc de Richelieu, arrived upon the scene to assume his duties of governor general, a post to which he had been appointed by Emperor Alexander, there were only 400 houses and about 8,000 inhabitants in the place. To-day the population is over 500,000, of whom no less than 150,000 are Hebrews, and there is no city in the empire more bountifully endowed with magnificent public buildings or where the inhabitants are possessed of greater wealth, mostly amassed by commerce.

KENT TO BE HANGED.

THE JURY IN THE MURDER CASE RETURNS A VERDICT OF GUILTY.

With the Recommendation That Kent Be Hanged—Kent's Crime Was Employing His Hired Man to Murder Mrs. Kent.

Mandan, N. D., Nov. 23.—The jury in the Kent murder case left the court with a verdict of guilty, and they decided that the prisoner should be punished by death. In this state the jury fixes the punishment in capital cases when they find a verdict of guilty. The defendant listened to the verdict without any concern.

Myron R. Kent was born in Burlington, Ohio, in 1846. He spent his boyhood in that place. He studied law in the office of H. G. Blake at Madison, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar. In 1871 he was elected prosecuting attorney for that county and served one year. He engaged in the banking business, and in 1872 was made bookkeeper of the Painesville National Bank of Medina. He married the beautiful daughter of A. L. Newhall, a prominent citizen of that place, and the young wife died inside of two years. The bank closed its doors May 2, 1874, and an examination showed that $100,000 had been appropriated 60 per cent by Pancoast's (Kent) dishonesty. The defendant he had made his escape and was never punished for his peculations, which are supposed to have aggregated $40,000, consumed in high living. When he disappeared from Painesville he called himself M. R. Kent and represented himself as a single man, and had succeeded in covering up all traces of the past. He managed to ingratiate himself in the best society in the Mill City, and, among others, became acquainted with Miss Bird. Shortly after he married Miss Julia Laird, for whom he soon felt the penalty upon the scaffold. The parents of the lady were not pleased with the match, and refused to make the best of a bad bargain, and Kent was given a position in the lumber business of his father-in-law. He said he embezzled $20,000 of the firm's money. When discovered he was given $5,000 and told to shift for himself. He and his new wife then separated, Kent going to Chicago and Minneapolis. Mrs. Kent continued to correspondend with his wife, and a reconciliation was effected.

On the night of August 12, 1894, Kent went across the river to Bismarck, telling his wife that he would return the next day. On this night his wife was shot and killed under what seemed to be circumstances of mystery. However, there was a risk on her life for $24,000, and Kent failed to return. The true story of her death is as follows: Kent met John Swidenski, the hired man, inside Mrs. Kent on the pretext that some one wished to see him. He was asked to appeared at the win ow a shotgun in his hands was discharged, apparently by accident as at the time he pretended to be looking for revolvers. The shot took effect in Mrs. Kent, killing her instantly. Swidenski gave himself up, and told the story as above. Later, however, he confessed that he had been hired by Kent to kill his wife, to receive $1,800 for the deed. Detectives were placed upon the case, and Kent was brought back to Mandan and tried, with the result ch-ve stated.

WANT THAT BOUNTY.

Louisiana Sugar Planters Sue the Government.

Washington, Nov. 25.—The controversy between the sugar growers of the states and the United States government, growing out of the repeal of the act providing for a bounty on one-half a cent a pound upon all sugar grown in the United States or territories by the new tariff bill and the subsequent refusal of the treasury department to pay the bounty on sugar grown in the present year, reached the first step toward a definite legal settlement today. J. Archibald Murray, an attorney of New York, filed today in the court of claims three suits, identical in character, and of the same character as the government sums of money alleged to be long due the plaintiffs as bounty upon sugar raised by them in the year 1894. The Ohio alley Sugar company of Hunterdon, Jersey sues for $43,121; the Norfolk Sugar company of Norfolk, Va., sues for $3,093, and the Oxnard Beet Sugar company for $19,000. These suits will probably be pushed to an early hearing in the court of claims, and will then be taken to the United States court for final settlement. It is understood that the decision in these test cases and will be vigorously contested, as an amount reaching from $1,000,000 is at stake in the controversy.

CONDITION OF TRADE.

Business Is Better Owing in Part to Cold Weather.

New York, Special.—Bradstreet's today says: The features of the general trade are the continued large increase in distribution of holiday goods, heavy clothing, hats, seasonable dry goods, and the opening of fall hardware and shoes. This was stimulated by seasonably colder weather and a consequent revival of confidence in a near-by improvement in demand. At the South a favorable influence is the continued advance in price of cotton, due to the greater favor with which lower estimates of the size of the crop are now being received, and to the prevalence of the opinion that the bottom of values has been reached. Some shippers of Southern lumber complain that Southern mills are already shipping freely, and the rebuilding of burned districts will be slow

THANKSGIVING DAY 1894

TOOK TO THE WOODS.

'Twas the day before Thanksgiving,
And the farmer, wise a living
Long had engaged in raising poultry for the market, sailed out.
But, alas! amidst the pleasures
Quickly turned to consternation,
For his fairest, fattest turkey was not anywhere about.

Long he searched, but unattended
With success; therefore he ended
Soon the lives of those remaining, and to market brought his stock.
Oft the missing bird berating,
And he mused the while debating
What ill-fortune had deprived him of the jewel of his flock.

Do not doubt some fowls can reason
Since a turkey proved all wise; pates are not stupid as has been known.
Oft he'd seen to town his kind sent,
So he knew what knives a-grind meant
And bethought him that 'twas the end time for taking to the woods.

THANKSGIVING BEAR.

A Story of the Season From the Michigan Woods.

It was to fight fire and not bear that John Nelson started for the woods bounding his clearing on the west side, on the day before Thanksgiving. The weather was clear and dry, though sharp, and no snow had fallen. John had no turkey for the next day, and not believing in any of the superstitions he took his gun along, thinking he might sight a bird or two. John hooked his horse to his buckboard and drove up the road a piece, and took him within two or three hundred yards of the burning bush, where, by back firing judiciously, he could save the house all danger from the advancing flames. He had to drive about a mile and a half before he came to the narrow piece of woods lying between the road and the burning timber, and which he intended to cross to reach the latter to fight the fire. Just as he reached that narrow strip he saw two little bear cubs tumble out of the bushes at that side of the road and continue the rough-and-tumble play they had begun in the woods.

At the sight of the cubs Nelson stopped his horse. The black and shaggy bears looked so cute that Nelson could not resist the temptation to capture them alive. He got out of his wagon, leaving the lines and horse standing, and started on the run for the cubs. But the cubs didn't want to be captured, and, at the approach of Nelson, ran into the woods on the side of the road opposite the one they had just appeared on as far from the fat little legs would carry them. Nelson followed, but the cubs got two or three rods into the woods before he overtook them. He grabbed one of them, and was about to seize the other when he heard a savage growl in the bushes ahead of him, and the next instant the mother of the cubs came crashing along toward him. She was not forty feet away when Nelson dropped the cubs and made double-quick time for the road, the bear only a few jumps behind him.

There are not many horses that will not become terror-stricken at the proximity of a bear, and the mere scent of them will throw some horses into a panic. Nelson's horse was one of the timorous kind, and its owner reached the road just in time to see the frightened animal tearing down the road, and the buckboard rattling and jolting over the rough way in a manner that left very little of it or the fat little boy behind him, getting nearer at every jump. Nelson cleared the road almost at a bound, for he knew he could not outrun the bear if he kept in the road, taking the first tree he came to, was up its branches out of the reach of the bear before he got to it, and without any clear idea of how he got there.

The tree was not more than eight inches through, and consequently too small for the bear to climb. That increased her fury. Ordinarily a she bear with cubs is satisfied with encompassing the safety of her offspring by putting to flight the foe that endangered them, and loses no time in putting distance between her and her family and the threatening foe. But this one was not inclined that way. Her temper was evidently naturally ugly; the interference with her cubs had increased that ugliness ten-fold; the treeing of what he had come out there to do had left him helpless, and at her mercy. Finally he saw that his enemy had been laid low and was no more. He noticed that a strong wind right out of the west had sprung up. The air had been full of smoke all day, but as that had been the case for many days, it had not caused him any unusual apprehension. But as he gradually recovered from the excitement of the bear's pursuit, seeing that he was safe from her in the tree, he noticed that the smoke had grown much denser. It was so dense at the height he was from the ground that it was becoming stifling. He noticed with increasing alarm that it was charged with heat, which came in puffs and waves somewhere from the woods behind him. He knew what that meant. The wind had fanned the wood fires to greater volume, and was driving it forward with increased rapidity upon the spot where he had killed the cubs and the bear, so that it was likely to be an intolerable place to remain in.

The heat increased so that Nelson could breathe only with difficulty. Burning leaves and glowing twigs began to fall upon and about him. The dull red smoke was less than that of the bear, with her cubs at her heels, had crowded low with her nose close to the ground. She was evidently going to wait for vengeance to the very last. The wind became stronger. The roar of the advancing flames grew louder and louder. To stay longer in the tree was impossible. There was no chance for life there. There was a fighting chance for life on the bear. Taking his jack-knife from his pocket and opening it, Nelson slid quickly to the lowest branch of the tree, and swinging himself from it struck the ground three or four feet beyond the bear and made a dash for the road. The bear, with her cubs at her heels, was close upon him when he struck the ground, was taken by surprise but she was on to him after Nelson, of course, that he had but four or five yards the start of her. But terror almost gave him wings. He gained on his implacable pursuer. Burning leaves and branches fell thickly about him.

The heat was intense. But on he sped, gaining slowly but surely on the bear. To his horror the heat grew fiercer as he increased. There was but one explanation for that. The fire had greater headway in that direction, and was approaching nearer the road there. Suddenly in turning a sharp bend in the road Nelson stopped. There was no thoroughfare further. The bears had evidently not felt the fury of the blast, leaped across it, and a wall of roaring flame barred the way. Nelson turned and looked behind him. The bear was still slouching in tireless gait upon his trail.

To remain at that spot ten minutes, perhaps less, meant the most horrible of deaths. In a short time the flames would reach the road along the part of it that he had come, and shut them off from escape in that direction. The woods on the opposite side offered no chance of escape, for they were but a narrow strip of slender growth between the road and a ragged, low perpendicular, and nowhere less than ten feet high. The only way for Nelson to get out was to run the gauntlet of the burning wall of fire. There was no time to think of plan. Nelson, who had held onto the knife, pitched blindly into the flames. He could not know how it all occurred, but he remembered a fierce, brief, but hand-to-hand struggle, from which he emerged bleeding and battered to find himself in full flight again down the road, the bear close behind, the air sifting with hot sand and ashes, and the crackling of the burning wood falling about him in thicker showers than ever.

He had not run long ere the air grew cooler, and he knew he had passed the danger line of the fire. But he was nearly exhausted, and the bear was still on his trail, and, of course, tireless. No one ever saw a tired bear. It was a mile to the nearest clearing, and Nelson knew he could never hold out to run that far. He resolved to stop and fight it out with the bear then and there. At that moment he almost fainted with joy. In the swaying and jolting of the buckboard as the terror-stricken horse had dashed over the road, the ride had been thrown out, and there it lay, ready to Nelson's hand, as the gun had been put in the bed. He reached for two cubs came bounding up to it, and he could not have turned them alive, after all.

Nelson found his horse at the clearing, a mile ahead. He went back and got the gun, the buckboard, and literally dragged its lively trip with-out mishap, strange to say, and reached home by a roundabout way, for he determined that he would never mix his self with another bear fighting again.

John didn't have turkey for his Thanksgiving dinner, but he had bear meat. It can be imagined that he was thankful from the bottom of his heart that he could eat instead of being eaten.

HORSEFLESH FOR FOOD.

The Taste for It Spreading in Europe—Sentiment and Science Against It.

Hippophagy, or to speak less euphoniously, the habit of eating horseflesh, is spreading in Europe. While savage man is known or have acted his ravenous hunger on horseflesh or any other variety of flesh he could find, the modern origin of this peculiar taste dates from the siege of Paris during the Franco-Prussian war when the popular taste compelled from dire necessity to sacrifice this noble quadruped to sustain life. Many acquired a taste for the meat, and the demand for it did not cease with the capitulation of the city.

"It was to be seen on sale at many of the butchers' stalls, and has been ever since a staple article of diet in thousands of the poor of the French capital. For horseflesh is much cheaper than beef. Beef in Paris is worth 2s per lb., while horseflesh can be had for 8 cents a pound, which affords the reason why the barbarous custom should take such a firm hold upon these people when once necessity gave it root.

Once planted in Paris the practice spread to other continental cities, especially Berlin, where horseflesh is now consumed in considerable quantities by the poorer classes, and the medical authorities and humanitarians are making their voices heard against the prejudice which is shared with man since the dawn of the human race, of eating the dead beast in preference to the contingent to be eaten. Quite a number of supplementary equines are exported for that purpose.

GRANDMA'S THANKSGIVING.

She Draws a Picture for the Young Folks.

"Thanksgiving Day in New England in the olden times then was a rare holiday dearie," said grandma, with a wistful smile on her sweet old face, for the children who asked her to tell them a story. "There has been a going to the King's Country. Well, on that day our cousins, grandpa's and mine, was the palace, and we gave a banquet, where gathered the knights and the ladies of our families—Dorothy, Susies and Prudences Obadiahs, and Jonathans in their pretty frocks, kerchiefs, and long snuff-colored

Long the children in the palace hugging her close, and eight little knees pressed against her soft skirts, and eight little eyes looked up at her with loving confidence. These were the forest of the book of references in the nuts for they will also include one set of each of the standard 12 volumes. The card ordering device to be used in the proposed conduit will also be furnished with every day work in the new library building itself. It will be so constructed that it will be possible to send the designated floor or section of the huge structure and deposit the book on the spot, thus saving an immense amount of time to both reader and library employe.—Washington Post.

Meteorology Not a Science.

A weather prophet is a failure, and is the Meteorological Office played out? This was the question incidentally raised by Mr. C. Harding Bourne, the secretary of the King's College School, in a lecture last night on the recognition of the evening classes. He declared that during the past twenty-five years he had really done nothing toward making meteorology an exact science. Something was doubtless accomplished in the way of giving early information of the coming of storms and disturbances which were already in progress, but that was a very different thing to predicting the occurrence of storms.—London Telegraph.

MAKING A MAN OF FOWLER.

It Is First Built on Paper, Then of Wood, and Lastly of Steel.

A man-of-war is built upon paper before a single plate of steel is forged. Not only is the design and model made and a sketch to show how she will look when she is floating on the stormy deep, every piece that goes into her construction, whether it be of iron or wood or steel, is measured and drawn out with even greater care than an architect exercises in designing the details of the mantels and door jambs and plumbing of a house. Not only is the length and breadth of a ship decided on in advance, but she naval constructor must come to an answer how much water she will displace when her armor and guns are placed upon her, how many tons of coal she will carry in a minute with a given pressure of steam, and how many tons of coal an hour must be consumed to drive her at a certain rate of speed.

The science of shipbuilding has reached such perfection that of the forty ships that compose the new navy of the United States only two have not fulfilled or exceeded the plans and promises of the men who designed them, with reference to horse-power, speed and other qualifications. The Atlanta and Monterey did not develop quite the horse-power that her engines were designed to give, and their builders had to pay a forfeit. The Castine and the Machias were found to be top heavy when they left the builders' hands, but that was an error of judgement. They have been too many guns for their tonnage, but the defect was easily repaired.

When the frame of a ship are given to a contractor, the first thing he does is to reproduce the design, or at least a cross section, full size, with chalk on the floor of the shed in which the operations are made from the chalk marks for the use of the founders in casting the keel and frame. Then a wooden template is made for every steel plate that is needed, and marked with white paint to correspond with that it represents on the ground-chalk drawing. Then the keel is laid and the skeleton ribbed together until it stands out in the air like the steel ribbings that are now being constructed fifteen or sixteen stories high above a brick or stone is laid for the outside walls.

When it comes time to put on the plates the contractor's men are called in to see if it is a perfect fit and to mark where the holes must be made. The steel plate is then laid upon it, the places for the rivet holes are marked, each drilled, and finally it is fastened by red-hot steel bolts where it belongs. In a ship-of-war like the new ones progress, the long, hard New England winter, with November frosts and snows, the sickness which set in and carried off nearly half the number, and it was not until spring that the weather set in that could be relied upon for working out of doors. The waste products should be quickly got rid of, the local sources of trouble relieved and the system invigorated with the "Prescription," which acts directly upon the "female complaint" and the nervous disorders arising therefrom. The "Favorite Prescription" is a powerful uterine tonic and sedative, and is adapted to the various delicate wants for it regulates and promotes all the natural functions. 37 Big Buffalo, New York.

I tried three doctors before I did me so good I thought I would write you. I tried three doctors before I did me so good I thought I would write you. I tried three doctors before I

Monday night four engines were held off of the passenger runs, and the remaining engines are run from St. Paul to Fargo without change, a distance of 226 miles. Engine crews change here as usual.

O. T. Wright, formerly a fireman on this division and an engineer on the D. & M. division, died in the hospital for the insane at Fergus Falls the first of the week, to which he was committed about two years ago. The remains were taken to Brainerd for burial, where his people reside, and the funeral was held on Tuesday. He was a member of the Red River Valley Division B. of L. E., of Grand Forks, N. D. He leaves a family. Among the engineers who went to Brainerd Tuesday to attend the funeral of Mr. Wright were Geo. Hass, M. Durkin, Walter Scott, James Stuart, Mr. Best and others.

Engine 262 was on a rampage Monday evening. It had been left standing on the coaling track, and in some manner the valves opened and she started forward. The turn-table chanced to be set for that track, so it did not leave the rail until it crossed the pit. It bounded over the frozen ground and never stopped until it had broken through the wall of the round house. The round house and engine were badly disfigured, but no persons were injured.

The Otis Cass County Court House Burned.

On Monday evening fire destroyed the old frame building on the west side of the river known as the old Cass Co. court house. It was a relic of a past attempt to organize Cass, which was perfected, the court house being built, a complete set of books purchased and other arrangements made, all at a cost of several thousand dollars, and then the county organization collapsed for want of a population to support it. Since then the building has stood empty, being used occasionally as a barn, until about two years ago, when Messrs. P. & E. Waite established an industry there for the manufacture of lumbermen's supplies, such as logging sleds, tote sleds, snow plows, and cant hooks, etc. These gentlemen had succeeded in establishing an industry that was a credit to the city, employing almost constantly seven or eight men at good wages, and business was constantly increasing, but the fire will be a heavy blow to them as they had about $2000 worth of manufactured goods in the building when it burned, including 10 sets of logging sleds, two snow plows, about 40 tote sleds, besides all their tools and machinery. Their loss will aggregate $2500 with only $1100 insurance. The building was owned by Richard Ahrens and was insured for $1000. An alarm was given, but it was useless for the department to go as there is no hydrant within using distance, hence the building and contents were entirely destroyed. It is thought the fire originated from a defective chimney. The factory will be re-opened in a building owned by D. D. Smith at No. 150, 6th St. south.

Benefits of Game Protection.

The value of game protection to the state in a financial sense can scarcely be realized unless one is acquainted with the excellent result obtained in other states as well as our own. At a recent meeting of the game commissioners of the New England states the question was asked of the representative from Maine what figure he estimated the amount of money brought into that state by sportsmen in the course of a year, and his answer, based on a careful and conservative computation, was $3,000,000. The members of the commission from other state were somewhat surprised but the figures were produced to prove the assertion. Continuing the gentleman said:

"We regard the game as a great financial factor in the state's resources, and our recommendations are made with that in view at all times. Selfish interests prevail for a time, but the body of the people are growing to see the importance of protecting the game."

It will thus be seen that the preservation of game is brought into the light of one of the legitimate business resources which no state canafford to overlook, especially the great state of Minnesota where game is abundant and while there is yet time to save the same from the slaughter that has been going on but which has been checked to a great extent during the past two years. The aspect is such that it should appeal to the good common sense of the people and create a keener interest in the enforcement of the game laws. If sportsmen bring $3,000,000 annually into Maine, our own state can look for a goodly sum in the years to come provided proper attention is paid to the matter as no state in the union offers better opportunities to the hunter or fisherman. The coming legislature of Minnesota will do well to give any recommendation made by the game commission their close consideration.

The Calhoun Opera Company.

On next Wednesday evening Dec. 5th this excellent organization will present for the first time in Brainerd. The New York Casino's, most popular and pleasing success "Amorita." This season the opera has been greatly improved by magnificent staging effects by new and expensive costumes, and produced upon grander scale than ever before giving to it, even at the metropolitan theatre at which it was first produced.

The company is a large one numbering 45 artists, carrying their own orchestra special scenery and calcium effects which will make it one of the grandest productions ever attempted in Brainerd. The seats are now on sale at the McFadden Drug Company's store, and judging from the advance sale the house will be crowded which the management deserves, as he is providing the people of Brainerd with first class attractions.

Paper Hangers' Pastes.

A trade journal says the foundation of good paste is good flour. The best white wheat flour is the cheapest in the end, as it goes further and works smoother.

To make a bucket of paste take about four pounds of sifted wheat flour and stir in enough lukewarm water to make a stiff batter. Keep on stirring until all lumps disappear and the batter is smooth. Then pour in boiling hot water briskly until the batter swells and has a cooked appearance. When ready to use, thin down with cold water until it can be spread on the paper easily.

Some paper hangers add about two ounces of powdered alum, but do not use alum in paste when made for felts or solid gold grounds.

To make rye flour paste mix enough sifted rye flour with cold water to get the consistency of cream. Stir until all lumps disappear; then place on fire to boil. Keep stirring until it thickens and becomes yellowish in color. When cool, add enough cold water until quite thin. Do not use until cold.

To make a strong size for very rough walls dissolve one pound of good ground glue to a bucket of hot water. Stir and use while warm. Apply with an old pastebrush or whitewash brush. For ordinary sizing on new walls and walls that have been papered a half pound of glue to a bucket of water will be sufficient.

The Effect of Change.

The Philadelphia Record says: "An experienced old housekeeper in charge of a large down town mansion with few occupants is noted for a queer manner of dipping out each meal daily between intervals of thorough cleaning. Sometimes she merely changes the chairs about in the unused rooms or transposes articles on the mantelpiece, or taking a broom circles it once or twice around the floor. The result is an absolute freedom from mice and rats. She says she learned years ago from a frontier hunter that all such animals avoid places which, to their acute senses, show signs of recent disturbance. He informed her that always before lying down at night on the prairie he stuck his hunting knife in the ground and drew it entirely around the place where he was to sleep. A snake or any other dangerous prowler would stop as soon as it came upon the freshly disturbed earth and beat a hasty retreat."

Tough Paper.

The tough paper which comes from China and Japan is made from manilla fiber. The paper or fresh fiber is not used, it being too expensive, but after it has served its purpose as rope or cordage and has become old it is carefully picked to pieces, made into a stringy pulp and manufactures into paper. The paper is singularly strong. When rolled up into a ball or cord, it is a very good substitute for cotton or flax twine. Its strength is solely due to that of the manilla, which is one of the strongest fibers known to the manufacturer.—Indianapolis News.

Even With Him.

A young fellow, just admitted to the bar, was walking down town to his office one morning when he was joined by an old high school friend.

"Good morning, John," said the second man, taking him by the arm.

"Well, you've really put out your shingle, and you've taken to carrying a bag, I see—like Judas Iscariot."

"Yes," said the youthful lawyer, "but I've got better company than I do."—Youth's Companion.

A Deep Laid Scheme.

"No," sobbed the pretty girl. "Harold and I never speak now, and it is all through the machinations of that deceitful Sallie Simmons."

"Why, what did she do?"

"She persuaded us to join the same church choir."—Washington Star.
