MINNESOTA FOR BLAINE.

That Blaine is the favorite candidate for president of the republicans of Minnesota, has long been evident to all who have had an opportunity to sound public sentiment, or to ascertain its general drift. But all doubts on this subject, if any existed, were dissipated by the action of the republican state convention yesterday. The convention was almost unanimously for Blaine. Though the convention, wisely, as we think, declined to bind the delegation to positive instructions, a resolution was adopted with but four or five dissenting votes, declaring the strong and earnest preference of the republicans of Minnesota for Blaine, which the delegates will doubtless respect as the moral equivalent of positive instructions. Of the ten delegates elected nine are positively for Blaine, while one, Mr. Langdon, of Minneapolis, is supposed to be for Elihu B. Washburne, though he will doubtless vote for Blaine. At Minneapolis there is a pretty strong local feeling in favor of Washburne, due, doubtless, to the fact that several of the Washburne brothers have large interests there, and that one of them, William D., resides there and has a large political influence and following there. It is not unlikely, indeed, that in the event of a fruitless struggle between the candidates now in the field Washburne will loom up as a successful compromise candidate, for he has a strong record on the pending issues of retrenchment and reform, when it required more courage to champion them than now. But next to Blaine, and only after him, it was evident that Bristow was the prevailing choice of the convention. This was manifest in the tone of the resolutions adopted which pointed significantly to the need of a candidate of the Bristow type, which Blaine was assumed, however, to be—and we do not doubt he will prove himself to be, if nominated and elected. But the current talk of members of the convention disclosed a much wider sentiment in favor of Bristow than we had supposed possible; and if Bristow, like Blaine, had been supported by the power which directs the political machinery of the party, he would perhaps have been the first, as he is now evidently the second, choice of the republicans of Minnesota. But who will be the choice of the delegates after Blaine, it is not now easy to determine, as it is evident that they don't know themselves. They are men of good judgment, however, most of them, and may be safely left to exercise a wise discretion in the premises.—[Pioneer Press and Tribune.

ST CLOUD has caught the consolidation mania, and the Journal has swallowed up the Press. Imitation appears to be the prevailing rule of action.

THE eighteenth annual convention of the State Sunday School Association of Minnesota will convene at Stillwater on Tuesday, June 13th, and continue in session for three days. All schools in the State are entitled to two delegates for an average attendance of 100 or less, and one for each additional hundred or fraction. Pastors and their wives are ex officio members. Entertainment will be furnished all delegates whose names are sent to H. B. Prince, Esq., Stillwater, before June 1st, and arrangements have been made for reduced railroad fare.

ATTORNEY General Edwards Pierrepont has been appointed Minister to England to succeed General Schenck; Judge Taft, Secretary of War, has been appointed Attorney General in place of Mr. Pierrepont, and J. Donald Cameron, of Pennsylvania, has been appointed Secretary of War vice Judge Taft. The two first are considered good appointments, but the latter is not, as Cameron is a man of questionable standing and no ability, and only known as a son of Senator Simon Cameron. He possesses no qualifications whatever for the position he is called to fill.

A Two Rivers, Morison county, correspondent writes: "The Tribune is not received here until it is a week old. What is the matter?" [The Tribune is mailed here on Saturdays and goes to Little Falls on Sundays, and should reach Two Rivers by the first mail leaving that place thereafter.—Ed.] Our fields are looking quite green. Corn planting is nearly done. On June 1st a cattle and horse fair will be opened at Batal's Store, and will be held on the first day of each month thereafter. Preparations are being made for an elaborate celebration of the Centennial Fourth of July at this place.

THE space assigned to the Tribune in the Pavilion of the Centennial Newspaper Exhibition is designated by the number 3488, and visitors from this or any other section at Philadelphia wishing to refer to it for any purpose will find the Tribune at its post, a complete file and the latest numbers. This exhibition will be a complete representation of all American periodicals, and as there cannot fail to be among eight thousand publishers some who from neglect or other causes will fail to send their editions regularly. Yet in such cases omissions will be made good as far as possible by such copies as can be obtained from advertising agencies or other sources, so that neglect of any paper will not be permitted to mar the completeness of the exhibition.

[Washington Telegram, 22d, to New York Herald.]

A gentleman here, familiar with the frontier, says that in case the government shall not be able to defeat the Indians during the present operations, there is great danger that the town of Bismarck will be attacked by the hostile Indians, and that unless the settlers and others can be massed, there is every probability that the place cannot be successfully defended. There are but few arms of good quality in the place, and the population is not of good fighting quality. Another gentleman residing at Bismarck, who is in town to-night, has great fears of this result, since in times not very remote raiding parties of Indians have frequently appeared on the opposite side of the river, and have threatened the place.

WADENA.

Bro: Hartley:—Wadena is enjoying a beautiful spell of weather and nature is assuming its floral garb and livery of green; ever and anon on the twilight breeze comes the dulcet strains of the indomitable "ske" as he winds his merry horn and admonishes us mortals that we had better commence to "bar" our doors and windows. "Sketer" bars for sale cheap at Dan Pineo's, for cash, or tamarac ties.

Wadena is about to lead the van on this our Centennial year in the wonderful discovery of the great and long perplexed question of "perpetual motion." We are about to exclaim, "Eureka!" One of our worthy citizens, Marion Going, who for the past 15 years has devoted much of his time to the study of this great question, has at last obtained the thing. He already has his model prepared, and claims to have discovered a new scientific application of the lever for motive power, to the extent that his machine once in motion, or the power once applied, will run until it wears out. He further claims that this power can be applied to all branches of machinery, from a watch to a railroad train. Mr. Going informs us that he will start for Washington in a few weeks to secure his patent and then make known to the world the wonders of his invention. If he succeeds in producing what he claims he can, his wealth is as sure as the rising of the sun. We shall await with eager interest the development of this wonderful machine, and will keep your readers posted in regard to it.

We learn from C. H. Peake, Esq., who has just returned from court attendance at Fergus Falls, that J. H. Sanders, who was on trial for the shooting of one Wm. Bronson in town of Deer Creek, was acquitted.

The passenger trains of the N. P. pass each other here at 12 m. each day since the new change of time; for the past two days they have run with such exact nicety that each train has whistled for the station at the same moment.

The passenger trains present a very nice appearance this summer, the engines and cars are resplendent in bright and shining colors, fresh from their shops; in fact, every thing looks nice and inviting, even down to those model conductors and courteous gentlemen—Capt. Spaulding and "Corp'l" Glann—than whom none better wear the "blue and gold." We may well feel proud of our Northern Pacific Railroad, and it speaks volumes for its present management.

We were pleased to meet our old friend and co-laborer of last winter, M. Brinkerhoff, on Wednesday's train, westward bound, to "punch tickets" on the "Fargo Division." He also was resplendent in the blue and gold livery of the N. P. Success to you, old boy.

We were also pleased to meet at our sanctum last Friday Mr. Prescot, "business man" for J. Dean & Co., of Minneapolis, he deposited a handful of stamps with our County Treasurer, just to keep the county government wheels in motion and assist in fattening Wadena "porkers."

FOR NOBBY HATS, go to

H. A. Campbell's.

AN exchange says: "We are in receipt of two poems, one on the 'Throbbing Brain,' the other on a 'Bleeding Heart.' We will wait until we receive one on the 'Stomachache,' and publish all three together."

THE second night after her husband died she sat by the open chamber window 'five hours waiting for the cats to begin fighting in the back yard. Said she—'This thing of going to sleep without a quarrel of some kind is so new that I can't stand it! Let me alone till they begin, then I can dose off gently."

A SMART Illinois girl who had been cruelly jilted, rose up in her wrath and recovered $5000 for breach of promise,—and she had no sooner got this suit out of the way than she took some of the proceeds and went right to work on another—a handsome black silk made after the "Domestic Fashions."

BRAINERD, May 22, 1876.

Editor Tribune:—Do the good folks of your town know just what is being done by certain residents of Brainerd? It is bad enough to rob the Indians outright; but to give them whiskey for their furs is indefinitely worse. This is in effect, not only robbing the Indians, but their traders too, who in good faith furnish the spring outfit relying upon these very furs. But this is not all. Many of these Pillagers are terribly ferocious when crazy drunk. A few days ago a transaction like this occurred not far away from this place. A small party of Indians who had been "loaded" at Brainerd got drunk. One of their number seized an axe, demolished two canoes, cut up two blankets and threw a piece of sheeting into the fire. He next laid hold of a gun, and it was no fault of his that murder was not added to his other work.

On the reservation at Leech Lake I am told that a young fellow, last week, in a drunken row, seized a knife and made a savage cut in the arm of one of his companions. Murder in this case was barely avoided, as the cut only just missed the artery. It is said that the traders there took care to barricade their stores and sleep prepared for the worst. The lives of the whites of course are equally in peril whenever such fiendish carousals are going on.

Now, the question to be considered is just this: Can respectable citizens, property holders of Brainerd, afford to wink at this business of selling whiskey to the Indians? The writer was told by a resident of the town that he had sold all the oil cans he had in his store to Indians, and he suspected they were bought to be filled with whiskey. He said they started out with the cans in that direction, pointing towards a well known concern in town. Whether that concern is in this dastardly work while industriously engaged in charging the crime upon others, the public will be able to judge.

Once more I beg leave to enquire: Can this kind of traffic work anything but harm to Brainerd? Order-loving men, good citizens the world over can make but one answer to such a question. Brainerd surely owes it to her fair fame to frown upon all such business, and to take earnest measures to stop it. What must be the moral sense of a man, who, while robbing a foolish Indian of his furs pretends to pay him in poison? Who but a crazy man would think money got in this way was worth having? Is not highway robbery more honorable? So it seems to your correspondent.

A LOOKER ON.

J. C. DODGE, of Bismarck, was attacked by the Indians at the Black Hills resently and wounded, and took his own life rather than fall into their hands.

THE St. Paul papers give an account of the death in that city this week of Mark Hendricks, an old resident of this State, and well known in this section. He died of Consumption and leaves a wife and two children.

J. D. LACHANCE, auditor of Morison county, comes out in the last issue of the St. Cloud Times with convincing proof of the falsity of the charges of the Little Falls Courier upon him, and gives Bro. Wood a chance to explain some tings.

THE Democratic-Republican State convention of this State has been called to meet at St. Paul on Thursday, June 1st. In the convention Crow Wing county is entitled to one delegate, Aitkin one, Cass one, Morison two, and Wadena one.

The county convention in this county met at the county auditor's office on Thursday evening, and elected Dr. J. C. Rosser delegate.

HENRY WARD BEECHER is expected to lecture before Baylies Great Mercantile College, Keokuk, Iowa, this season. Theodore Tilton lectured last November. We would call attention to the advertisement in another column. It will pay any young man, whatever his future occupation may be, to spend from three to six months at Keokuk, Iowa, under the instruction of Prof. Miller, obtaining a thorough knowledge of business matters. Parents should send their sons. Baylies College is an old and permanent institution, and guarantees a substantial, useful education to every student that enters.

Personal.

E. L. Strauss took a trip to Bismarck this week. He reports times lively at that point.

Jonathan Taylor, of Little Falls, County Treasurer of Morison county, was in town on Thursday night, and gave the Tribune office a call.

G. G. Hartley returned to Brainerd Thursday, having run his drive into the boom at Minneapolis and sold his logs at a good figure.

J. S. Campbell, of Moorhead, formerly of Brainerd, went to St. Paul this week as a delegate from Clay County to the republican convention.

T. P. Cantwell and family started east this week on a pleasure trip, intending to visit La Crosse, Chicago, and possibly the Centennial grounds ere they return.

THE Republican county convention at Bly's Hall on Monday evening elected Capt. C. B. Sleeper a delegate to attend the State convention at St. Paul on Wednesday, with power of substitution.

CERTAIN parties in our town who visit the Free Reading Room, whose names are withheld at present for good reasons, are in the habit of carrying away papers and periodicals from the room, which is nothing short of petty larceny, and will be publicly exposed and examples made of the thieves if it is not stopped.

A. T. C. PIERSON, of St. Paul, Grand Secretary, and J. C. Braden, of Litchfield, Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge of this State passed west on yesterday's train en route for Bismarck, D. T., where they are called to organize a lodge. They expect to pass this place on their return on Tuesday next. Mr. Braden is also Register of the U. S. Land Office at Litchfield.

A PARTY of our youthful Spartans and their charming dulcinas planned a little fishing excursion and romp in the woods on Wednesday last, and boarding the 2 p. m. passenger train going east they were promptly set down at Withington, whence a few minutes walk brought them to the beautiful Serpent Lake, where they reveled in sports to their heart's content, some sailing on its sparkling, rippling bosom robbing its depths of its finny inhabitants, and occasionally taking a ducking, and others promenading in pairs through the extensive natural groves that surround it, gathering bouquets, admiring the scenery and each other, and indulging in the sweet but old, old story of ——. The curtain falls; we were not there and cannot tell what occurred, but they returned on the evening accommodation apparently well satisfied with their trip and happy.

FOR anything you want in Boots and Shoes, cheap, go to H. A. Campbell's.

OUR Republican (!) friends in this county, of the Democratic stripe, are the subject of a little joke that is not generally known, and our readers will be kind enough not to mention it if we tell them, for you know it would not do to make it public. Here it is: It appears neither of the trio wanted to go to St. Paul to attend the State convention, and they were a little nonplussed how to be represented in that body, when a certain legal gentleman with mischief in his eye but solid candor on his Washingtonian countenance button-holed one of the trio and whispered confidentially in his ear that "Dr. J. C. Rosser was a Democrat, that he was going down to St. Paul any way about that time, and had signified his willingness to take the credentials." This was hastily and exultantly communicated to the other members of the convention, and was greeted with, "Dr. Rosser a Democrat?—Good," and would have been followed by cheers, but there was no boys around to do the cheering. But of course Dr. Rosser was at once elected the delegate to St. Paul, and credentials prepared, and the convention adjourned and hastened to the Doctor's office to shake hands with him as they never had done before and give him the credentials; but it soon became evident that the Doctor did not understand them, or they did not understand the Doctor, or both. The doctor told them he was not a Democrat, that he was not intending to visit the Saintly City, but that he would consider their proposition, as he probably saw they were feeling badly, and would aid them if he could.

The Tribune reporter having of course obtained an inkling of the matter, called upon the Doctor this morning, when he substantiated the above, and stated further that he could not accept the credentials or represent them in St. Paul either in person or by proxy. He also said that he had never authorized the statement made by the legal gentleman recited above, or any part of it, but was very emphatic in his assertion that he was not a Democrat. What action will be taken by the party here in the premises we have not learned.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Six of the chief rioters at Salonica have been put to death, but not the idiot who conspired to provoke the riot.

The country owes much to Thomas Jefferson for the inauguration of Fourth of July celebrations, but we are compelled to pause, reflect and hesitate about canonizing him when we think that he gave us Louisiana.

The general conference of the Methodist church, at its late meeting in Baltimore, appointed a committee to meet a committee of the church south and adjust all differences between the two on a basis permitting a re-union at once.

There is a proverb sometimes heard which says, "make hay while the sun shines." Our agricultural readers may forget this in this bright, sunshiny weather, or they may say there is no hay to make. The proverb says, however, "MAKE hay."

Chicago has developed the two champion whisky thieves of the country. Its coat of arms, which has always contained a cradle and a baby, should now have a double cradle and two babies—children of corruption—which it has nursed for so long.

There is considerable difference between the right man in the right place, and the wrong man in the wrong place: illustrated by the estimates of Belknap and Taft as secretaries of the U. S. War department. Taft signifies his willingness to run the department for $5,607.605 less than Belknap wanted for the same purpose. Judge Taft deserves to be let alone as long as he manifests qualities so rare.

Artificial clouds of smoke are often used in France and Germany as a protection against frost. One plan which has been very successful, consists in carefully mixing gas tar with sawdust and old straw and piling this mixture in large heaps in the vineyards, and when morning approaches fire is set to the mass. This plan would not work well on the prairies of the northwest, where the atmosphere is so buoyant and pure.

Philadelphia will have six Centennial Fourths of July, this year, as a sort of supplementary attraction to the Exhibition not down in the bills. Everything possible must now be done to make the show draw, as the souls of all true patriots of that city are sorely vexed and their pockets loudly groaning at the lack of visitors.

Massachusetts will undoubtedly long retain the position of the nursery of some of the worst criminals the world has yet produced. Jesse Pomeroy and Piper are monstrosities in the line of murders, while Winslow stands as the unparalleled clerical thief; but just now it is announced that the successor of this fraud has absconded with $300,000 of the funds of the city of Natick, and thus the list of her criminals is again enlarged.

Much comment has been occasioned by the failure of the Supreme Court to decide the "granger case" at its last session. The Chicago Times now asserts that the decision has been concurred in by all the judges and that its nature is positively known to be against the constitutionality of the Wisconsin Potter law and the Minnesota law. It asserts that the decision places the railroads entirely beyond legislative control. This rumor is published for what it is worth.

The prospect is good that everybody on American soil will become heartily sick of the word Centennial before the close of the year. We not only have the Centennial show at Philadelphia, but Centennial theatrical, concert and magic lantern exhibitions, Centennial cigars, jacknives and toothpicks, Centennial mint juleps, chocolate and soda-water, besides an undescribable amount of other Centennial nonsense, all of which easily illustrates how many Centennial fools there are in the country.

Philadelphia should have taken a lesson from the Indians, in getting up the great exhibition. The Indians are always shrewd enough to detail one man to keep sober whenever they have a grand pow-wow, and the drunken fellows look to him for sober-minded guidance. But the sober old Quakers were neglectful of such precaution and when all became intoxicated with the idea that all the world would come to their show, the remainder all took in the subtle draft and commenced to build hotels. Alas, how will the aching heads be counted?

In the near future the Great Northwest will be the center of wealth and progress, as well as of population and power, of the entire continent, and it already has a history of great interest and importance. Prof. Tuttle has written a very entertaining and concise work on the settlement and progress, agricultural, mineral and manufacturing resources, personal, political and social history of the several northwestern States, which is entitled the Centennial History of the Great Northwest, and is published at Madison, Wis., by the Inter-State Book Co. A. R. Clark, whose office is No. 2, opera house block, St. Paul, is superintendent for Minnesota. The book is far ahead of any book heretofore published on the subject, and should be in every household.

THE GRANGER LAW.

From the Chicago Times.

There has been considerable conjecture in railroad circles during the past month as to the decision which would be made by the supreme court of the United States in the case of the granger railroad law. It was expected that a decision would be rendered during the May term, and it appears that the court has adjourned until October, so that a decision cannot be promulgated before that time. It is claimed by certain interested parties that a decision which had been concurred in by all the judges had been prepared previous to adjournment, and that its nature is positively known. According to these statements, the supreme bench has decided in the Wisconsin case that any attempt by state legislation to govern the establishment of rates is unconstitutional. As this case virtually covers those of Illinois, Minnesota, and Iowa, this would make the legislation in these States of no effect, and place the roads entirely beyond the control of the State legislatures. This rumor is published for what it is worth, but it appears that it has received credence among some of the leading western railroad managers, who believe the information to be sufficiently authentic as to insure that all legislative restrictions in the matter of rates will be swept away soon after the pending presidential campaign, as it is not believed that the decision will be rendered until after the close of the campaign.

CALIFORNIA VAQUEROS.

San Francisco Call, May 2.

A troupe of California, equestrians, numbering eighteen performers, left this city on Sunday morning's train, bound for Philadelphia, where they propose to set up business as a side-show to the Centennial Exhibition. The company includes ten lady riders, who scorn the usual adjuncts of padded saddles, safety straps, and carefully-trained horses, and who will perform the most daring and difficult feats of the sawdust-ring upon the bare backs of good-tempered mustangs and who defy man, woman, or child to produce a horse that they cannot or will not ride in the same manner. Eight male riders are also on the list, selected from among the most skillful of the vaqueros of the plains, who will ride acts of skill and daring never before seen in the circus ring, but which are every day occurrences at home with these masters of the horse. The equine part of the establishment consists of 60 horses, all California bred, some of which are as fine specimens of the genus mustang as were ever seen and ten Spanish mules, which will probably be pronounced donkeys by our Eastern friends. With these mules it is proposed to revive the donkey races of the olden time, and introduce some other business that will make them a lasting fund of amusement. Accomodations have been secured for the troupe at the Belmont Race-Course, where Mr. Ritiker, who is somewhat known to fame as the "California Boy," will issue a challenge to all comers to ride against him in long races, his distance being anywhere from 10 to 300 miles.

A YOUNG LADY SCIENTIFICALLY INCLINED.

Special telegram to Chicago times.

A young lady in Baltimore who must die of an abdominal affection requests that after death her body be dissected for the benefit of science. In a letter to Resident Physician Ashoy, she says: "As my death must speedily result from causes which have baffled science and confused the best medical minds, I desire that you shall perform upon my body, after death, an examination and ascertain what it is that has terminated my life. I request that such examination shall be made privately and respectfully by yourself and a few of your medical students and medical friends. I have furthermore urged my parents and friends to allow such an examination, and to inform you at once as to my death in case of such an event, since I shall go to my home from the hospital to pass the remainder of my days. A post-mortem examination can do me no possible harm, and it may benefit science, and through it some other unfortunate affected like myself. Moreover I desire to express in this manner the gratitude I feel to the many medical men who have labored for my relief. Lastly it is a duty I owe to my sex and my God." She will leave the hospital and return to her home in the city, and in the event of her death her request will be complied with by the physicians named in her will.

LION LOOSE.

New York Sun, 16th.

Old Parker, a lion that is shown in Howes & Cushing's circus, which had pitched its tents at Flatbush and Fifth avenues, Brooklyn, got out or was let out for a few moments into the dressing room yesterday. The animal has had a bad reputation. He was captured when apparently about four years old in Africa, and taken to London, and for some time was part and parcel of the menagerie attached to Astley's Amphitheatre in that city. It was while performing in this theatre, that Old Parker killed his keeper, Thomas Jarvis. Mr. Jarvis was discovered dead one morning in the theatre, and the lion lying over the corpse, toying with it as a cat toys with a mouse. When approached, the lion growled, and made a spring at the one nearest to him. He was afterward brought to this country.

When the circus men heard that Old Parker was loose yesterday, they made a rally to put him back in his cage. The animal put his claws into the clothing of one of the women attaches, and, tearing it severely, gave her a great fright. He then "stepped" on a pet dog, and hurt it so badly that the circus men killed it afterward. The men with poles, and the keeper, with his whip, worked away at the beast, and soon had him in the cage again.

LOWERING THEIR CHARGES.

Philadelphia Special, 15th.

The reaction in public sentiment regarding the numerical success of the exposition is best shown by the action of one of the leading hotels, the Grand, which to-day reduced its price to $3.50 a day, the old rate. The hotel-keepers throughout the city are astonished as the days pass by without bringing any of that vast crowd of foreign visitors they have been confidently expecting. The high rates have been adhered to tenaciously, but this move on the part of the Grand may cause a general tumble in prices. It is probable, however that the large hotels will hold out as long as possible. There are to-day scarcely more outside people stopping in Philadelphia than can be counted in Chicago any day in the week. There was a large gathering here on the opening day, but the people all went home the next day. If they come back before the 4th of July it will be wonder.

FACTS ABOUT FORESTRY.

In all that has yet been said about forest culture, in the east as well as the west, no attempt has until lately been made to start at the foundation and inaugurate a system of restoring to our country its natural clothing of timber, but now the subject bids fair to take practical shape and waste places be made to bear burdens of wealth not second even to the mineral wealth of our land.

In an argument for the appointment of a forest commissioner, made before the House of Representatives, recently, Hon. M. H. Dunnell gave a collection of facts to show the great importance of immediate action, and he proposed the appointment of a competent man at a salary of $2,000, making it his duty, after complete investigation, to submit to the commissioner of agriculture an exhaustive report upon the needs of the country and how best to supply them.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Dunnell referred to the $30,000,000 trees required annually for railroad ties, the 6,500,000 cords of fuel for railroads, the $98,000,000 of fencing used annually, and of the almost unimaginable quantities used in making furniture, machinery, boxes and in building.

No argument can be raised against practical legislation. That which makes more certain a supply of whatever the race shall need in the future, for life and the uses of civilized life, is not only practicable but is humane. So savagely in the past, have Americans cut down the forests that stood in their way and in the march of agriculture and in the acquisition of wealth, that they should now be asked to cease the work of destruction and commence the work of renewal. Those who are to come after them have rights; they will need houses, fences, and fuel; they will need forests for health as well as use. This generation should do better in this respect than the past; that cut down and too often wasted; this should plant and preserve.

Those who are the most unwilling to look into the future and provide for it by husbanding our present timber supplies, admit that in twenty years building-lumber will be exceedingly scarce, and in many parts of the country now reasonably supplied, wholly gone. While they would put off the evil day, they do not deny its approach.

It should not be forgotten that just as the cost of the article increases, in that proportion will diminish in number and profit, many of the trades and occupations of the people. There are now many millions of workers of wood. A thousand million dollars as the value of the products drawn from the forests of the United States in a single year, indicate a fearful consumption.

Timber, as I once have said, is an element of civilization. It should be grown as well as wheat or rye or oats. How this may be done should be an object of study. The supreme importance and dignity of timber preservation and cultivation should be brought home to the whole country.

The mighty interest sought to be aided by my amendment, call for demonstrations, the facts of science, the results of experiment, methods, and specific instructions.

The amendment was adopted.

ANNA DICKINSON.

All of the dresses were devised by Miss Dickinson, and they are queenly in richness and elaborate in detail, as well as historically correct. They are four in number, one for each act, and were not made in Paris, as has been reported, but by her dress-maker in New York and under her direction. The cost of the outfit was $9,000, exclusive of diamonds and ornaments. As Anne Boleyn is supposed just to have returned from France, some license is allowed for French taste. Miss Dickinson wears a gold-blonde wig, and displays her costumes with exquisit taste. There is a marvel of feminine art in her exhibition of her queenly robes, as act after act brings them before the public eye. The first is the court dress Anne Boleyn may be said to have worn when the admiring eyes of King Henry were attracted by the girlish beauty. It is a creamy brocade, with ruby velvet trimmings and gold embroidery. This robe is bewildering in its blended beauty, and it is as exquisite for harmony as elaborateness. The second is a dress supposed to be worn at the house of her father, Sir Thomas Boleyn. It is a Metternich green satin, with a crimson and cloth of gold overdress of the Venetian style, and it may be described as unique and piquant, with a subtle suggestion of the ante-renaissance period. The third dress is a marvel of brocaded beauty as is fitting for the royal robes of an English queen. It is the azure of an unclouded sky, and is made more queenly by a train of blue velvet and ermine and a girdle of diamonds and pearls, with a diamond crown and necklace. The stomacher is of woven pearls and old lace. The last dress is not the traditional black velvet in which queens are supposed to be led to the block. It is somber, but full of a passionate suggestions of intense and smothered fire, typified by a blending of black and crimson satin under rich black lace. It is such a dress that a queen might almost wish to die at the hands of the executioner that she might be able to wear it; and this brings us to the rising of the curtain.

NOT SO BAD.

Just on the eve of his return to England, the Prince of Wales did a thing which in the opinion of subjects, has gone far to redeem the revels which he indulged in while in India. During his stay in Spain he was much feted and pampered by Alfonso and his nobles, who prepared a bull-fight specially in honor of the Prince, and invited him to be present. He declined and staid away, and this forbearance on his part is noted by many of the leading English journals as an instance of remarkable virtue. In view of the elephant hunts and other battles in which he was engaged in India, and remembering also the arena fights at Baroda, where elephants, buffaloes and other animals fought with each other, it is hard to see where the humane disposition of Albert Edward is made manifest on this occasion, especially since he had been already informed of the displeasure of a large portion of his future subjects in regard to the orgies in which he indulged. It is a queer commentary on the conduct of their future sovereign when such small exhibitions of self-denial call forth so unanimous a burst of enthusiasm, but if the British are satisfied, others have little right or inclination to complain.

Farm, House and Garden.

Rose Culture.—Mrs B. Wishes hints concerning house roses. Hers do not bloom freely and produce flowers. Small pots should be used; a rose will not bloom much until the pot is filled with roots. Mrs. B. complains that the leaves drop off. Does she mean the green leaves or the petals of the flower? If the leaves, it is caused by insects which infest roses, and they require a good smoking with tobacco. Roses ought now to be in the garden, but if kept in the windows protect the pots from the sun, so that the roots will not dry up with the heat. The plants require sun. A healthy rose is a good feeder, requiring water morning and evening at this season. Always use tepid water, especially in the winter, and sprinkle the tops frequently. Roses are difficult to keep in a house, principally on account of the variety of insects that infest them.

Setting Cuttings.—A correspondent inquires the best mode of taking cuttings. A healthy plant should be selected and strong-looking woody pieces cut of; those with a blossom on the end rarely fail. Trim off the large leaves and put them in water for a few hours or a day. Cuttings of ivy (tradescantia) Wandering Jew, Canary bird flower, (tropæolum peregrinum), and oleander should be started in water and kept in water, in the shade, until a little root appears. Each cutting should have a good sized pot, or several cuttings can be put in a wooden box. The best soil for amateurs to use is half good earth and half white sand, well mixed; water well and keep in the shade, but not in damp, until the cuttings have taken, then give full sun. Transplanting geraniums require skill. An amateur should use pots and keep them in them, sinking the pot in summer, and as the earth is not rich they can be watered with fertilizers in winter. A five-inch pot will do for a geranium for a year.

A Remedy for Cheat and Cockle.

Some years ago, says a correspondent of the Farmers' Friend, my wheat was "turned" to cheat and cockle. As I had just as much faith in wheat turning to one as the other, I resolved to sow no more of the seed of either, and took a screen off an old fan, put a rim around it, sat down by my heap of seed wheat, cockle, and cheat or chess, and sieved it so long as any cheat, cockle, or small grains of wheat would go through. The result was, scarcely a stock of anything but wheat could be found in forty-five acres the next harvest, and what few stocks appeared I presume had been in the manure. I treated my seed the same way the next fall. The following spring, in sowing grass seed over fifty acres, I found but one stock of cockle; and in harvesting not a handfull of cheat, and no cockle, was found—notwithstanding the wheat had been badly winter-killed, and one field near the barn had been run on, tramped, and eaten by the lambs and chickens very much.

Boston Baked Beans.—A favorite and excellent family dish if carefully prepared. Get a red earthen jar, glazed on the inside. It should be fourteen to sixteen inches in height, with a wide top. Get the beans at a first-class grocer's, lest they be old or of a poor quality; pick, wash, and soak them over night in plenty of cold water; scald them the next day with a teaspoonful of soda; they should not boil, unless they have been long stored. Drain off the water, and to three pints of beans (unsoaked) allow a pound and a half of good sweet salt pork; a rib piece, not too fat, is best. Let the beans cover all but the top of the pork, which must be scored; add water enough to cover the beans, in which, half a small teacupful of molasses has been dissolved. They should be put in the oven at bed-time, while there is still a moderate fire remaining. They will be ready in the morning. If the pork is not very salt, add some to the water in which the beans are baked.

Boston Brown Bread.—Mrs. G.'s Recipe.—Three and three-fourths cups Indian corn meal, two and one-half cups rye meal, not flour; two-thirds cup molasses, one quart milk, either sweet or sour; two even teaspoonfuls soda, dissolved in the milk; steam in tin pudding-boiler five hours; take off the cover and set in the oven with the beans to remain till morning.

Saving Rennets.

A correspondent inquires as to the best method of saving rennet. We have tried several ways in our practice—stretching the skins on a hoop or crotched stick—filling them with salt—packing them in a cask with salt, &c. But of late we have adopted the Bavarian plan, which consists of inflating the skin like a bladder, tying the end tightly to retain the inflated condition until the skins are perfectly dry. Salt should be used freely at the point where the orifice is tied to hold the air, but as the other parts dry down quickly, none is needed except, perhaps, in very hot weather.

The skins on removal from the calf, should not be soaked or washed with water. They should be turned and emptied of their contents and all dirt wiped off with a cloth. Then turning the skin back again, insert a quill or tube and inflate as you would a bladder, tying the orifice as before stated. They should be hung in a dry atmosphere, but not near a hot stove, as high heat has the effect of injuring the strength of the rennet. In saving rennets great care should be taken to select only from healthy calves. If the stomach is badly discolored or shows signs of having been inflamed or diseased, it should be at once discarded, for such rennets work mischief and cause faints to be developed in the cheese.

IF HE DRINKS DON'T HIM.

From the Congregationalist.

We tender our thanks to the Vermont Judge who the other day, in pronouncing upon a divorce suit, laid down the axiom that when a woman marries a man of known intemperate habits she takes her happiness, great petty, and weldare in her own hands, and has no claim for riddance of him thereafter. We have great pity for the wife who is joined to an intemperate husband, but we tremble for the fate of the woman who marries an intemperate man. If these words reach the eyes of any woman under engagement of marriage to such a man, we most solemly appeal to her to pause before she imperil her well-being by accepting any such risk.

A TERRIBLE EXPLOSION.

Late English files bring accounts of a terrible dynamite explosion in Wales, which surpasses in horror anything since the Bremerhaven affair.

The occurrence took place on April 21 in a railway tunnel in process of construction at Cymmer, near Maesty, Wales. The tunnel was to be 1,600 yards in length, and operations were carried on night and day. The night gang were at work when the explosion took place. There were thirty men employed at the time, and of these thirteen were killed outright, and their bodies found in a horribly mutilated condition. In the dynamite box was a day's store of the explosive material—about 200 pounds—and also several pounds of gun cotton and a quantity of caps. This magazine was located about 250 yards from the mouth of the tunnel, and midway between the mouth and the terminus of the excavations already made. The explosion shattered a space in the tunnel sixty yards in area, and the only surprise is that the entire gang instead of thirteen should not have been killed outright.

SIDNEY LANIER'S CENTENNIAL CANTATA.

The following is the cantata, written by Mr. Sidney Lanier and set to music by Mr. Dudley Buck, which was sung at the opening of the Centennial Exhibition, May 10th:

The Centennial Meditation of Columbia.

I.

From this hundred-terraced hight
Sight more large with nobler light
Ranges down yon towering years:
Humbler smiles and lordlier tears
Shine and fall, shine and fall,
While old voices rise and call
Yonder where the to-and-fro
Weltering of my Long-Ago
Moves about the moveless base
Far below my resting-place.

II.

Mayflower, Mayflower, slowly hither flying,
Trembling Westward o'er yon balking sea,
Hearts within Farewell dear England sighing
Winds without But dear in vain replying,
Gray-lipp'd waves about the shouted, crying
No! It shall not be!

III.

Jamestown, out of thee—
Plymouth, thee—thee, Albany—
Winter cries, Ye freeze: Away!
Fever cries, Ye burn: Away!
Hunger cries, Ye starve: Away!
Vengeance cries, Your graves shall stay!

IV.

Then old Shapes and Masks of Things,
Framed like Faiths or clothed like Kings—
Ghots of Goods once fleshed and fair,
Grown foul Bads in alien air—
War, and his most noisy lords,
Tongued with lithe and poisoned swords—
Error, Terror, Rage and Crime,
All in a windy night of time
Cried to me from land and sea,
No! Thou shalt not be!

V.

Hark!
Huguenots whispering yea in the dark,
Puritans answering yea in the dark!
Yea, like an arrow shot true to his mark,
Darts through the tyrannous heart of Denial.
Patience and Labor and solemn-souled Trial,
Foiled, still beginning,
Soiled, but not sinning,
Toil through the stertorous death of the Night,
Toil, when wild brother-wars new-dark the Light,
Toil, and forgive, and kiss o'er, and replight.

VI.

Now Praise to God's oft-granted grace,
Now Praise to Man's undaunted face,
Despite the land, despite the sea,
I was: I am; and I shall be—
How long, Good Angel, O how long?

VII.

"Long as thine Art shall love true love,
Long as thy Science truth shall know,
Long as thine Eagle harms no Dove,
Long as thy Law by law shall grow,
Long as thy God is God above,
Thy brother ever man below,
So long, dear Land of all my love,
Thy name shall shine thy fame shall glow!"

VIII.

O Music, from this hight of time my Word unfold:
In thy signals all men's hearts Man's Heart behold:
Mid-heaven unroll thy chords as friendly flags unfurled,

ORIGINAL MISCELLANY.

MISS PETERSON'S WOOINGS.

BY LUCIA C. BELL.

For the Worthington Journal.

Saturday was Miss Peterson's washing and ironing day. She did this work because she liked it. Certainly, Miss Peterson as principal of the high school in one of the finest public schools in the state received a salary which ought at least to have hired her washing done. And she boarded herself. Nothing could deprive Miss Peterson of the luxury of her own little table draped in linen from the green little farm in far away Sweden, nor of the cup of good Swedish coffee which she loved to make with her own hands. The floor of Miss Peterson's room was bare and white. The very sight of those "stuffy carpets" half smothered her. Not only did she do her own cooking, but she made her own butter in golden little pots from the cream off the the single quart which was brought every day to her door.

Washing is said to be the hardest work that human hacks are heir to, but nobody would believe it, in the presence of Ingra Peterson at the washtub, so lithe and strong and blithe, with her mass of golden hair twisted back in a generous coil and the strong locks curling in little rings around her forehead in the stain from the suds, with her cheeks scarlet, and her white strong arms and supple wrists luxuriating in the vigorous exercise. No place could be sweeter or brighter than Miss Peterson's room when she ironed, with the snowy floor, the glittering stove, the little forest of vigorous greenery in the sunny window; the whole space filled to overflowing with expanses of fragrant, shining, pearl-clear linen "airing" in the sunshine. It was like a sun-lit lily.

She had a cage full of canaries, and a pet hawk which some little boys had brought to her in its hideous infancy. Anybody also would have shuddered at the thing. But nothing in nature is repulsive to healthy children. Neither could it be to Ingra Peterson. There was also a cage of white mice, which had been bereft of their mother at so tender an age that Miss Peterson was obliged to sit up three whole nights to raise them by hand.

Although a good teacher and commanding a good salary she never was known to possess more than two dollars beyond her immediate wants, which were astonishingly simple. Charity was the passion of her life. Hundreds of pairs of stockings were knit by those beautiful, vigorous hands, just for the joy of giving them away. Christening robes for the children of poverty were made, tucked and embroidered, by her, with the enthusiasm which painters feel for their pictures. She would stop in a city street and give away her last shawl to some poor shivering creature, and had been known in one startling moment slip off her felt skirt then and there, give it away, and go home rejoicing. After the war she made an excursion into the south in her impulsive, independent fashion, and brought from thence to her neighborhood, a horde of lawless little colored people for whom she wished to find homes, much to the dismay of the helpless farmers. When friends remonstrated with her for such irresponsible and improvident generosity as she every where displayed, she reply always came, quietly, "God will take care of me."

Ingra's style of dress was somewhat overwhelming. Just as some people possess an indescribable, indefinable knack of making a harmonious costume, she possessed a mysterious capability of making herself absurd, even while she really desired to do the correct thing and make a respectable appearance. Her garments, over-skirt, sacque, ruff, sash, and all, usually gave one a vague impression that they may have lodged on her in a high wind.

Yet, every women was infascinated by Ingra Peterson, being, perhaps, peculiarly attached by that tinge of gracious, masculine knightliness in her, which excluded all coquetry, and made her so daring in deeds of loving charity. Many men loved her, too, as they loved men, and in spite of the outre costumes. I. Ernest Keene loved her, not as he loved men, so far as he knew. By the relative position of his initial letter you will infer that this gentleman was either a peripatetic teacher of decalcomanie, or a dancing-master. He was neither. He was a composer of popular Sunday School music and poetry. He parted his wavy blonde hair in the middle, and wore it student-fashion behind his ears. He introduced his own music through the country, and was fond of making little Sunday school speeches to the children in that half pleading, tender, tearful tone, which prevailed among the Sunday school superintendents in those days and was supposed to be irresistible.

I. Ernest Keene knew nothing about real flesh and blood children with their real needs and capabilities. Children to him were an indiscriminate multitude of dimpled faces, fluttering ribbons, flowers and nodding hats, with silver voices singing ever joyously of his "golden sands" and "pearly streets," and "great white thrones."

Perhaps it was Ingra Peterson's rich contralto voice which so attracted this blonde musician. With his pathetic tenor and that contralto, what ravishing duets might be sung at the great Sabbath school conventions!—and how marvelously she would clear-starch his ruffled shirt-bosoms.

One fateful Saturday afternoon, I. Ernest Keene proceeded to Miss Peterson's residence. He found the little room over-flowing with shining freshly ironed linen, as usual on that day. Moreover, it was pervaded with an appetizing smell of delicate beef-tea. Ingra was radiant, with her golden hair, pink cheeks, and immense white apron, as she sat energetically knitting. The tea kettle sent forth a fine sweet monotone, the canaries loudly chirped.

Miss Peterson's little cabinet organ stood invitingly open, and they sang, she meanwhile knitting without pause, as I. Ernest Keene played his tenderest accompaniment. Nobody ever beguiled Ingra Peterson into sentimental conversation. What one said to her must be said bluntly. And so, I. Ernest Keene at last turned from the keys, and laying his bloodless hands upon Miss Peterson's warm ones, said in his softest tones:

"If I could only always have you at my side, with your glorious voice, till we reach the shining shore and walk the golden sands with palms in our hands—oh, life would then be filled with rosiest bliss! Say yes, dearest Ingra, and be my wife."

Miss Peterson simply shook the cold hands from her clicking needles, laid the knitting down, and walked to the ample white-draped lounge which stood in a shadowed recess.

"We've been singing too loud," she said, as she knelt and carefully lifted the counter-pane. "I wish you would come here a moment, I always have to call in Mrs. Wiggins, but she's very busy on Saturday, and you can help me to-day. Did you hear the music, Andy?" the question being addressed to somebody lying on the lounge. Whatever the answer was, no one heard it but Ingra, who said heartily, "I am so glad. We are going to change your bed now, for Sunday, and then you shall have a sip of beef-tea."

I. Ernest Keene looked on in mute wonder. Here was a child of ten years, with face neck and body horribly burned and bruised, helpless from injuries received at the falling and burning of a factory. His own home being one of squalid wretchedness, Miss Peterson had taken him in, hiring a nurse for him every day during her absence. Even the boy's hands were bandaged and helpless.

"Now," said Ingra, "will you please put your hands under this top mattress which is next to Andy and lift him with it while I shake and turn the bottom one? And then we will change the bandages. Oh, you are getting on finely, Andy."

But I. Ernest Keene turned pale. "Really I am not accustomed," he began, faintly, "and I think I couldn't. I'll call some one else if you desire it. Really this looks unnecessary, and is there not an hospital?"

"I'll lift Andy," interrupted Miss Peterson, slipping her strong arms under the matress; "now, Mr. Keene, shake up that matress, and do it thoroughly."

If Ingra Peterson had been a born queen, a despot, and he lier slave, I. Ernest Keene could not have obeyed her with more alacrity than he did at the sound of those decided tones. He shook the matress thoroughly. Perhaps he would rather have shaken Ingra Peterson. But he did not stay to help change the bandages for the little sufferer, neither did he refer any more in Ingra's presence to palm branches.

It seemed that Andy was born to witness all Miss Peterson's wooings. For on the day that he first sat up, in a lovely double-gown which she had made for him, with a cunning little dinner and a sweet-scented boquet on the stand at his elbow, in walked Dr. Reuben Jay, with another boquet.

"Here are some of my garden-posies, Ingra," said he, in a voice which was like rolling thunder compared to the entreating tenor of I. Ernest Keene. "I expect to take a premium on my balsams and begonias this year. Now did you ever see a balsam which would beat that for doubleness?

"I don't like double balsams," declared Ingra, "nor any other sort of double flowers. There's something elegant about the natural balsam, but double—bah! it's a mere imitation of a rose. And I hate your over-grown pansies. I love the blessed little old-fashion single ones."

"Oh," interrupted the serene doctor, "I always knew you inclined to single-blessedness. But you'll discover it to be a great mistake. What do you mean by blushing? One would think you were a little girl of sixteen, taking things to heart in that manner."

Andy looked up from his sugared lemon and remarked with beautiful unconsciousness that Miss Peterson always made him think of one of the doctor's splendid big gold-colored and purple pansies, herself.

"And don't you think," pursued the doctor, addressing Andy, with the air of a lawyer examining a witness, "that Miss Peterson and I had better join hands and carry on our work together, raising double balsams and single pansies, comforting the bruised, the maimed, the lame, and the halt, and providing good yarn stockings for the million?"

"Yes, sir, I do," replied Andy, with great candor and decision.

And Miss Peterson didn't dispute it.

It is to be feared that we, mothers, do not realize so vividly as we should, the fact that the children are influenced by every look, action, and mood of ours just as surely as plants absorb the dew and sunshine. A lady was one morning kneeling down in front of her little four-year-old boy, lacing up his balmoral boots. For a wonder, the little fellow sat quite still, without a single wriggle of his restless toes, and she thankfully but silently congratulated herself over this, and she looked up into his face. Breakfast passed without any of the usual antics from Johnny. Then an hour went by with such delightful and discreet behavior, that his mother exclaimed in wonder, "You blessed Johnny! What is making you so good to-day?" Johnny looked up brightly and cried out, "Why, mamma, don't you know how you smiled when you tied up my shoes?"

We have always wondered how children could so patiently endure the facetious admonition that if they "don't stop crying" their faces will freeze that way." A daring child who lately listened to this admonition, looked up with great interest and sympathetically inquired, "Well, grandma, when did your face freeze?"

While recording some of the children's sayings, this little "bon-bon" may, as well be put in. A little boy who had that inborn fondness for processions, which distinguishes the American citizen, cried one day to go to a funeral. This innocent recreation being denied, the tender-hearted infant turned upon his mother and defiantly declared, "Well, when you die, mamma, I shall go to your funeral!"

Make-Shifts.

Every year certain aged suggestions for the edification of housekeepers appear in the "household" columns of family newspapers. It would be hard to decide which are the most distressing to a delicate organization—the highly colored descriptions of popular family murders, or those regular yearly recipes for making green tomato pickles.

We have seen a spirited correspondence sustained in a "home journal" concerning the proper size of dish-towels. One lady argues with great force and earnestness that all the necessities of modern civilization require us to use dish-towels at least three feet long and made of home-woven linen. Another promptly retorts that some people can use up a whole chest of linen in one immense dish-towel if they choose, but for her part, give her liberty or give her death, and being a free woman she proposes to use a dish-cloth that she can squeeze in one hand, and towels made of clean old rags which may be used up in one day and then give place to fresh ones. Equally interesting are the suggestions for home-made window-baskets. When will that dreadful turnip cease making its appearance! Who wants a hanging basket made of a scraped turnip? It is a pleasant surprise, sometimes, to see such homely things as a turnip, a cabbage, or a squash, by chance shape themselves into a suggestion of something beautiful. Hawthorne used to lean upon his garden wall and gloat over the ruddy-gold squashes with their classic shapes. But he never transferred them to his parlor window. A tin can cut in strips half way down, the strips being curled over, forms another of these forlorn make-shifts. But there is one of these perennial suggestions for home adornment in the adaptability of which we have great faith. That art is very unattractively designated as putty-work, and at the risk of becoming a possible enemy to public peace, it is herewith presented once more:

This work must be co-operative, in the beginning. The original plan was to paint and ornament old tin basins with designs in putty, but plants will not flourish in tin. It is foolish to try wooden bowls and ornament them, because they cost as much as a handsome terra-cotta basket, and when ornamented will look no prettier. Indeed, make-shifts should never be adopted by anybody except those who need every penny for pure necessity, or those who positively have nothing more important in the world for their hands to do. In this work you must call on your "handiest" boy to make a box of wood in the shape of a basket, flaring at the top and small at the bottom, with four sharp corners—or if you choose, it may be made hexagonal and will be unique and pretty in that shape. Next, paint it brown. You can buy a little umber, some oil, and a very small quantity of white lead, and mix it yourself, and you will need a small medium-sized bristle brush, such as artists use. When the box is dry ornament it with designs in putty. Don't mix paint with the putty, and use only enough oil to make it pliable. Have the handy boy whittle out some cunning little paddles of hard wood, and with these it will be easy to shape the putty into any artistic form you like and then transfer them to the box. When the putty is dried and hardened on the box the whole can be again painted and finally varnished. A little oil or varnish brushed on once or twice in a year will bring your basket out clean and bright again. The attraction of this work lies in the fact that it really calls for some artistic skill. Those of us who are not painfully "nice" will let the children have a broad board, a lump of putty and the little wooden tools to make designs of their own. It is real kinder-garten work, except that putty is used instead of modeling-clay. Give the children real objects to copy, such as a leaf, a berry, or a flower, show them how to do it, and they will soon learn to combine these into pretty designs.

Jennie June writes to the Pioneer-Press a long and dazzling catalogue of sumptuous apparel suitable for ladies to wear to the Centennial, and then adds piously, "The young lady who is to possess all these fine things should possess the still richer gifts of patience, sweet temper, firmness, moderation and dignity." One would think she might. For the benefit of some who can't go to the Centennial, and like Miss Alcott—blessed old "Lo."—are sadly exercised even at home over seemingly inexorable old costumes, we give directions for freshening up ancient alpacas till they look "new." The secret lies in glue. Experienced dyers tell us that glue water always stiffens black fabrics in a satisfactory manner and sets the color. Make a solution in the proportion of one pint of milk to two pints of water, with a piece of glue as big as your thimble, heat it scalding hot, and in this dip and soak and thoroughly rinse your alpaca. One of our thriftiest housekeepers has tried this, and points triumphantly to an eight-years-old brilliantine which looks crisp and bright. She also restores old gray, crumpled black Italian crape, by dipping it in this solution, clapping it almost dry in her hands and then pressing it smooth upon the carpet between two newspapers, with books piled over it for a weight. This brings it out nice as new. It must not be ironed.

O, C-sar.

From the Chicago Times.

Everybody remembers the story of the Russian czar who, discoursing to a brother sovereign of the knowledge of the virtue of obedience in Russia, told him that if he (the czar) were to command his general to jump into the sea from the high cliff upon which they were standing the officer would obey. The potentate addressed signified his incredulity. "Jump into the sea!" said the czar to the general. The latter obeyed instantly, and was dashed to pieces on the sea-beaten crags below. Aurelien Scholl tells, in the Evenement, a story of Russian obedience which is even more remarkable in its results than this. The Czar Nicholas once held a review of his army in honor of a lady whose beauty had charmed him. During the march his cavalry came up on a trot. The czar desiring to improve the effect, gave the command to gallop. But the colonel of the last regiment, who had not understood the order, continued to defile past on the trot. Nicholas, enraged, advanced to him and shouted, "I say gallop! and take the road to Siberia!" This time the colonel understood, and started on a brisk gallop for Siberia. Some moments after the czar recounted, with much hilarity, this circumstance in the hearing of the lady in whose honor the review was held. She was much troubled, and begged him, with tears in her eyes, to pardon the regiment. He consented, and dispatched a squad to call the exiles back. But the regiment had obeyed the order so well that it was impossible to overtake it. The squad sent out of course continued the pursuit, and to this day nothing has ever been heard of the regiment or the squad. Perhaps they were overwhelmed by Siberian snows. Perhaps they perished of starvation. Perhaps they are galloping yet. Perhaps the story was a lie.

A fashionable article says "there is no shortening of coat tails this summer." We are not sorry. We would rather have our shortening in our strawberry cake than in our coat-tail at any time.

Catarrh is a common disease—so common that snuffing, spitting, and blowing of the nose, meet us at every turn on the street. Your foot slips in these nasty discharges on the sidewalk and in the public conveyance; and its disagreeable odor, contaminating the breath of the afflicted, renders them offensive to their associates. There is the highest medical authority for stating that with fully one-half, if not two thirds, of those afflicted with Consumption of the Lungs, the disease commences as Catarrh in the nose or head the next step being to the throat and bronchial tubes—lastly to the lungs. How important then to give early and prompt attention to a Catarrh! To cure this loathsome disease correct the system by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which tones it up, cleanses the blood, and heals the diseased glands by a specific influence upon them; and to assist, use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierpe's Nasal Douche. This is the only way to reach the upper and back cavities where the discharge comes from. No danger from this treatment, and it is pleasant to use. The two medicines with instrument are sold by dealers in medicines.

To all, particularly invalids, spring is a trying season. Indications of sickness should at once be attended to. Fatal diseases may be caused by allowing the bowels to become constipated, and the system to remain in a disordered condition, until the disorder has time to develop itself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, is an old and truthful saying. Therefore, we advise all who are troubled with the complaints now very prevalent—headache, indigestion, disordered liver, want of appetite, nausea, or feverish skin, to take, without delay, Schenck's Mandrake Pills. We know of no remedy so harmless and decisive in its action.

It at once strikes at the root of the disease and produces a healthy tone to the system. People never need suffer from any disease arising from a disordered condition of the liver if they would take this excellent medicine when they feel the first indications of the malady. Families leaving home for the summer months should take three or four boxes of these pills with them. They have an almost instantaneous effect. They will relieve the patient of headache in one or two hours, and will rapidly cleanse the liver of surrounding bile, and will effectually prevent a bilious attack. They are sold by all druggists.

Chapped hands, face, pimples, ringworm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

Corn and flour are staple articles; but not more so than Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, where known. It is good for children or adults, for any internal soreness of the chest or bowels, and the best Liniment prepared, under whatever name.

The all-gone feeling which people sometimes speak of, is caused by want of proper action of the liver and heart. These may be assisted, and the bowels regulated, by Parsons' Purgative Pills in small doses.

ROOFS
that leaks are costly property. You cannot afford them. The damage to your housed crops, which results from one storm, is often more than the cost of putting your Barn-roof in order. The yearly decay of agricultural machinery and implements, arising from leaky roofs on outhouses would more than pay the cost of roofing every shed, crib and storehouse on your farm. Your stock suffers from the drippings of your stable-roof, and the necessity of their lying in wet stalls. These evils effect property, but when your house roof leaks it is worse yet; then comfort departs, and you have a garret full of pails and pans to catch the steady streams; there are wet ceilings and falling plaster; there is spoiled furniture, damp bedding and rheumatism; there is the anxious wife, wearied with running up stairs to guard against new leaks; it is decay, and ruin, and property wasted. You cannot afford it. Our Slate roofing Paint will end your difficulties and make your roofs water tight. For new roofs our Rubber Roofing Felt covered with Slate Roofing paint will give satisfaction to any one. For full information in regard to Roofing and House Paints generally, send for our 100 page book which is free to all who write at once, and mention this newspaper. Address, N. Y. "THE VIBRATOR"
1000 SOLD LAST SEASON
WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION
This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of Grain, as ordinarily with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.
FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.
AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.
IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.
ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY tasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Saddles," "Racks," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.
FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.
FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.
TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz: our Improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Geared" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.
IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

Official Paper of the Counties of

CROW WING, CASS, WADENA AND AITKIN.

AITKIN.

AITKIN, May 24, 1876.

Logs are running very thick past this point, and the river remains stationary. The drive of Sam. Laurence passed here yesterday, the 23rd inst.

The meeting of the county commissioners, which was advertised to be held on the 22nd, did not convene, as there was not one commissioner in town.

Warren Potter represented this county in the State convention held in St. Paul, having gone down to buy goods, but mostly to buy merchandise.

We understand that Joseph W. Wakefield, Esq., of Sandy Lake, contemplates bringing his family here and becoming a resident of our town; so you see our town is slowly assuming more population.

The banks along the river at this point are overflowed, which renders farming on the river front impossible, and as our farming land is found there, it is rather hard on the Aitkinites.

The section foreman on No. 8 brought in a large bear last week, which he killed while brain was helping himself to the swill pail in the rear of the house.

Whipple has put a new chimney in his hotel.

A youthful contractor of drives got an order from his foreman for three dozen corks. He immediately repaired to Snell's saloon and procured three dozen bottle stoppers, and innocently imagined he had filed the order verbatim. He only discovered the mistake when his foreman sent back word "that when he wanted them kind of corks, he also wanted the the other end attached to them.

You Have No Excuse.

Have you any excuse for suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint? Is there any reason why you should go on from day to day complaining with Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Habitual Costiveness, Palpitation of the Heart, Heartburn, Waterbrash, Gnawing and burning pains at the pit of the Stomach, Yellow Skin, Coated Tongue and disagreeable taste in the mouth, Coming up of food after eating, Low spirits, etc. No! THE LOST CAUSE.—A Magnificent Picture 14x18 inches in size, printed on heavy plate paper, beautiful in design and artistic in execution. It represents a Confederate Soldier, after the war returning to his home, which he finds lonely and desolate. In front of the ruined cottage, telling a sad tale of the miseries of war, are two graves with rude crosses, on one of which some friendly hand has hung a garland. To the right the calm river and the rising moon indicate peace and rest. The stars seen through the trees, represent the South ern Cross. It is a picture that will touch every Southern heart and should find a place in every Southern home. Sent by mail mounted on a roller and post-paid on receipt of 25 cents, or 3 for 60 cents.

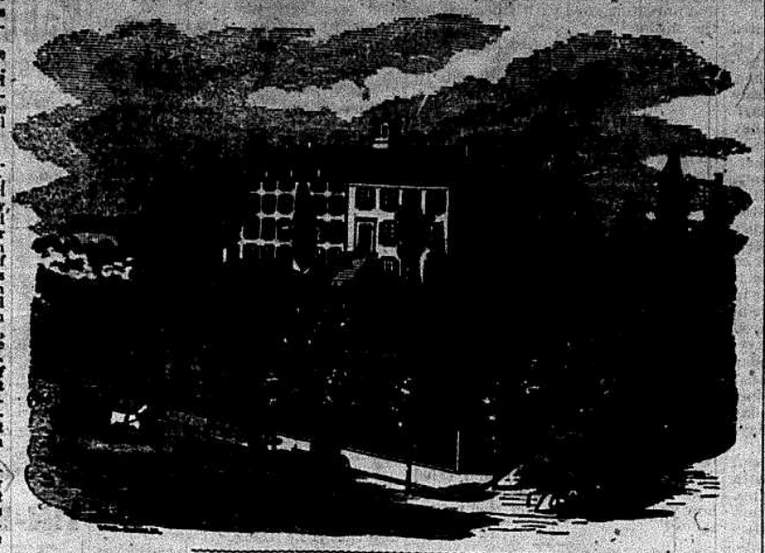
MT. CARROLL SEMINARY, CARROLL CO., ILLINOIS.

Incorporated by Legislature, 1852.



Says Rev. J. R. Smith, D. D., of Chicago: "We feel warranted in pronouncing this School, the Mt. Carroll Seminary, for all the highest purposes of education, one of the best in our knowledge. . . . We regard it as unsurpassed in the West, whether as respects the faithfulness of the discipline, or the substantial value of the instruction.

Says the examining Committee:—"Taken altogether, the exercises demonstrated that the Mt. Carroll Seminary still stands where it has stood for the last 18 years, the peer of any similar institution in the West. The able corps of teachers, and the marvelous degree of thoroughness with which everything attempted is carried through, aside from its many other attractions, render it a most desirable place for a young lady to qualify herself for the duties of life. . . . It is no wonder that Mt. Carroll Seminary has attained its present high position, as one of the very best schools for young ladies in our land.

Says a reporter of the Examination and Anniversary Exercises of the year just closed:—"The school has never been fuller, nor did itself more credit than at the close of the present year.

Extraordinary Advantages Offered in Both Vocal and Instrumental Music.

We confidently believe that no similar institutions in the West can afford such superior facilities to those who wish to make MUSIC A SPECIALTY. The Music Department alone employs six Teachers and about thirty instruments. The course in Music is fully equal to that of the best Musical Conservatories, while the cost is much less. Diplomas and Medals conferred on students completing the course in Music. Every pupil in Music receives DAILY LESSONS. Practice from one to six hours daily. DRAWING, CRAYON, and PAINTING thoroughly taught, in a complete course, and satisfactorily will receive a Teacher's Diploma. Pecuniary Aid offered to the worthy who are needy, and wish to prepare for usefulness. PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHERS, by scores, have been materially aided, and some entirely educated under this provision. DAUGHTERS OF CLERGYMEN have a discount of one-third from all expenses except the Ornamental branches. Daughters of Soldiers who have died in service, have tuition FREE in the entire English course. Manual Labor furnished those who wish to economise expenses. Testimonials of character expected from all strangers applying.
