Political Meetings. Brainerd has been making up this week for old and new in the line of political meetings.

He gradually warmed up as he proceeded, until, when he took his seat to give room to the others, he had become grandly eloquent and deeply interesting.

Col. Hooker next spoke, taking up the thread where the Judge had laid it down, and retaining all the interest the Judge had aroused.

Yesterday evening Mr. Hooker returned from the west, and addressed a large audience here again, confining himself principally to statistics from the public records refuting the charges made on Monday evening.
